The Book That Zealous Reformers Once Burned in Public

"TERRIBLE!" "IMMORAL!" "SHOCKING!" SAY BLUE NOSED REFORMERS

"DELIGHTFUL" "FASCINATING" "WORTH-WHILE" SAY LITERARY CRITICS AND CONNOISSEURS

NOW... Decide for Yourself Whether

THE GREAT "DECAMERON"

Should Be Banned and Censored

YOU'LL never know life until you're read this greatest of all forbidden books! You'll never know how utterly stark and vivid a picture of human passions can be painted in words until you've feasted on the most fascinating tales from the greatest of all true-to-life books—the immortal Decameron by Boccaccio!

No Longer Padlocked!

Perhaps no other book ever written has had such an amazing history. Written in so vigorous a style as to be actually startling, it has long been a storm center of fierce controversy and even persecution. Critics and the haute-monde have acclaimed it with unstinted praise for its sparkling vividness and subject matter—while prudish zealots and tyrannical reformers, aghast at the utter frankness with which Boccaccio exposed human life and love in the raw, resorted to every possible means to keep this masterpiece from general circulation. At one time they actually went so far as to gather all the available copies and have them publicly burned!

But all that was yesterday. To-day the thrill that awaits the reader within the glowing pages of Decameron Tales is no longer denied you. This is the age of reason—and the peerless word-artistry of genial old Boccaccio has come into its own at last! . . . Now, for a short time only, you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing in your own home for five days, without obligation!

Thrill Upon Thrill Awaits You!

Between its pages, the supreme sensation of a lifetime of reading awaits you. Before your very eyes is unfolded the glittering pageantry of a golden age now vanished—an age when passion, intrigue and high-riding romance held full sway. Past you, in a breath-taking parade, sweep some of the most beautiful, yet unprincipled, women of all time—women whose intense fascination fired men's blood and even altered the fates of empires. Here you will find tales of scarlet days, when a robust world drank of life and love to its very dregs!

Few writers have ever dared to write so intimately of the frailties to which the flesh is heir. But the flaming pen of Giovanni Boccaccio knew no restraint. Sophisticated and fearless to the ultimate degree, his stories are not only brilliant fiction of the most gripping variety—but also the most illuminating record of life in fourteenth-century Italy ever penned. Hardly a detail of these stirring times escaped his ever-watchful eye—and what he saw, he wrote, without hesitation or fear!

READ!

—how a certain noble lady slipped into her husband's chamber by stealth, and changed places with his mistress in order to win back his love!

—how a tiny mole on a woman's breast, condemned her to death and wrecked three lives!

—how clandestine love in the kitchen turned the baron's dinner into a fiasco, and the near-tragedy which followed!

—how the Duke of Crete paid for a night's pleasure in human coin!

—how a beautiful but faithless "puppet of pleasure" was forced to devour the roasted heart of her own lover!

A Literary Treasure-House

Rich in fascinating plot, tense with action and vibrant with human passion—the Decameron has furnished plots for the world's greatest masters of literature. Longfellow, Keats, Dryden, Chaucer, and even the great Shakespeare himself sought these immortal pages for inspiration. In no other volume are the morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century so graphically laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, the fantastic pleasures they indulged in—all are told with both wit and pathos that are indescribable. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, but constitute a landmark of literature which must not be passed over if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

Now You Can Reduce 2 to 4 Lbs. in a Night

Eat what you please
Wear what you please
Do what you please
Take no risky medicine

Send the Coupon for your first three Fayro Baths

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs are now Brought to You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Lose Weight Where You Most Want to

Fayro reduces weight generally but you can also concentrate its effects on abdomen, hip, legs, ankles, chin or any part of the body you may wish.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost from 2 to 4 pounds. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. Soon you will be the correct weight for your height. No need to deny yourself food you really want. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro at Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full-size packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it.

HERE'S PROOF

Read what Fayro Baths have done for others

"Three Fayro baths reduced my weight 11 pounds in 8 days. I feel better than I have felt for years."

"I weigh 16 pounds less and feel younger and sleep better. Fayro is wonderful."

For obvious reasons, names are not quoted, but every letter published has been authorized and name and address will be given on request.

This "Crazy Scheme" Made Me Independent

Learn the secret of my success. Be a Real Estate specialist. Start at home in spare time. Use my successful system. Free Book Shows how.

"IT'S a crazy scheme," said some of the old-time real estate men. But with this "crazy scheme" I made a net profit of $100,000 in less than five years—enough to make me independent for life.

So, no matter where you live, or what you are now doing, or what your sex or present age may be, if you want to learn all about my "crazy scheme"—if you want to do as I did—if you want to make big money—right at home—in your spare time—mail coupon at once for a free copy of my beautiful, new, illustrated book, which contains the biggest and best money-making business opportunity you ever heard of.

Use My Money-Making Method

When I started in real estate, I turned my back on all the ancient, threadbare, moss-covered methods of the past, and used a simple, scientific system of my own which is as far superior to the old-time methods as the radio is superior to the old-style music box.

With little education—no real estate experience, no money, no pull, I started a new kind of real estate business which met with overwhelming success.

If you want to follow the trail I blazed—if you want to use my amazingly successful system—write for my free book now. It tells how I won success, how I have helped other men and women succeed, how you, too, can succeed, how you can have a high-class business of your own and make more money than you ever made before in your whole life.

A well known cartoonist's conception of my idea

A Remarkable Business

The real estate business—in my way—is a wonderful business. It is as permanent as Mother Earth itself. And it is constantly increasing as our great country grows. It does not require years of study like most other trades, businesses or professions. And it pays big profits to ambitious men and women. Users of my methods report earnings of $1,000, $2,000, $5,000—and more—on single deals; as much as the ordinary man or woman gets for months and years of hard work. And the business is practically unlimited. Ten million properties are always for rent, sale or exchange. And you can start with little or no capital—right at home in your spare time. I did. So did others. So can you. My free book tells you how.

What Others Say

Read the following record of results achieved by a few users of my remarkable system.

Anthony C. Maurell, Paterson, N. J. (former barber) reports earnings of more than $4,100 his first three months in my kind of a real estate business. Kate Luke (65-year-old widow) says she has averaged $200 a week for the past 6 months. W. E. Shoop, Bloomsburg, Pa. (former weaver), earned $6,000 in one deal. A. D. Perkins, Forestville, Conn. (former wood worker), reports earnings of $1,252 in one month. J. W. Randolph, Elizabeth City, N. C. (former grocery clerk), reports 3 sales in 2 weeks that paid him $510. W. C. Campbell, Wichita, Kans. (former druggist), made real estate sales amounting to $22,875 in one day.

These are a few samples of the successes you will learn about in my free book. Get it. Read it. Follow its instructions. Make big money my way.

Send For Free Book

My free book, "How to Become a Real Estate Specialist," is filled with astounding facts about my kind of a real estate business. It tells what I have done—what others are doing—what you can do—in this big field of opportunity.

For although this book costs you nothing it may be worth more to you—in actual dollars and cents—than any other book you have read. So, mail coupon now and learn all about the "crazy scheme" that made me independent for life. Address, President, American Business Builders, Inc., Dept. A-82, 18 East 18 Street, New York.

Half a Million People have learned music this easy way

You, Too, Can Learn To Play Your Favorite Instrument Without a Teacher.

Easy as A-B-C

YES, half a million delighted men and women all over the world have learned music this quick, easy way.

Half a million—500,000—what a gigantic orchestra they would make! Some are playing on the stage, others in orchestras, and many thousands are daily enjoying the pleasure and popularity of being able to play some instrument.

Surely this is convincing proof of the success of the new, modern method perfected by the U. S. School of Music! And what these people have done, YOU, too, can do!

Many of this half million didn't know one note from another—others had never touched an instrument—yet in half the usual time they learned to play their favorite instrument. Best of all, they found learning music amazingly easy. No monotonous hours of exercises—no tedious scales—no expensive teachers. This simplified method made learning music as easy as A-B-C!

What Instrument For You?

Piano	Violin
Organ	Clarinet
Ukulele	Flute
Cornet	Saxophone
Trombone	Harp
Piccolo	Mandolin
Guitar	'Cello

Hawaiian Steel Guitar
Sight Singing
Piano Accordion
Voice and Speech Culture
Drums and Traps
Automatic Finger Control
Banjo (Plectrum 5-String or Tenor)

It is like a fascinating game. From the very start you are playing real tunes perfectly by note. You simply can't go wrong, for every step, from beginning to end, is right before your eyes in print and picture. First you are told how to do a thing, then a picture shows you how, then you do it yourself and hear it. And almost before you know it, you are playing your favorite pieces—jazz, ballads, classics. No private teacher could make it clearer. Little theory—plenty of accomplishment. That's why students of the U. S. School of Music get ahead twice as fast—three times as fast as those who study old-fashioned, plodding methods.

You don't need any special "talent." Many of the half million who have already become accomplished players, never dreamed they possessed musical ability. "Remember the Alamo!"

Not a man left the Alamo alive. The Mexicans won THAT battle. They outnumbered the Americans more than A HUNDRED TO ONE! It was a hopeless struggle. Do you know the story? Have you heard how Colonels Bowie and Bonham and a score of other famous frontiersmen were blown to bits by the cannons of Santa Anna's horde? How they used their rifles as clubs when their ammunition was gone? How the death of these men raised the battle-cry "Remember the Alamo" and freed Texas?

American Fights and Fighters

By Cyrus Townsend Brady

THE defense of the Alamo is only one instance of indomitable courage in our history—but it is typical. From the landing of Columbus, the story of America is alive with that spirit of unselfish bravery. The stories of these men who have made American history are the most thrilling, fascinating, inspiring stories ever told. Better still—they are every one TRUE.

Custer's last stand—John Paul Jones': "I have not yet begun to fight."—Lewis and Clark—Wolf and Montcalm—Old Ironsides—Gettysburg—these are not incidents from fiction! These are not stories from books! They are actual events in which men bled and died, preferring death to slavery or defeat!

Now Cyrus Townsend Brady has collected these stirring tales from original sources and put them into five beautiful books which you must read. American Fights and Fighters contains all of the good old stories you remember hazily from school days—and a great many more which thrill you as every red blooded American always thrills to a fight well fought.

The five volumes are handsomely bound in dark maroon silk, with titles and the American coat of arms in black and gold. Each volume is lavishly illustrated; original drawings by such artists as Remington, the Indian painter, Blumenschern and Crawford, together with reproductions of priceless historic prints. Large, clear type and fine paper.

The EDITOR'S OPINION

"Ring out, wild bells, across the snow
The year is going, let it go
Ring out the old, ring in the new."

THIS little New Year's jingle, friends, is especially apt as applied to SCREEN SECRETS. Joyfully we look back over a year of struggle that has brought SCREEN SECRETS to a new high place in the fan field, a year that has brought us a host of new friends and readers.

More joyfully still, we look forward to a new year of achievement, a year with the stage all set for the greatest progress in SCREEN SECRETS' history. It is scarcely more than two years ago that SCREEN SECRETS, the youngest of the fan magazines, came into existence. Since that time it has made amazing progress.

In many respects it is like the New Year itself, a lusty infant, full of great promise.

On the following page will be found a full announcement of contemplated improvements for the coming year.

Great Year For Movies

THE year which is being ushered in will also be the most eventful one in the history of motion pictures.

The most striking innovations since pictures first began to jerk and flicker across a screen are now on trial.

The year will prove whether or not the public wants talking pictures or sound pictures, and whether this new medium can be made mechanically successful.

Even greater innovations and inventions loom for the immediate future which stagger the imagination. The new enlarged screen being used for the opening of Interference, which fills the entire proscenium arch offers great possibilities. The enlarged screen, by the way, is one of

Captain Roscoe Fawcett

Doug Fairbanks' pet hobbies. He thinks it will accomplish wonders.

Color photography is reaching new peaks of perfection. Third dimension, which will give the illusion of depth as in the old parlor stereoscopes, is now no longer beyond the range of possibility. And radios are now being sold with a mechanism for television attachment.

Now, if the studios can keep pace with the mechanical improvements by bettering their stories, it will truly be a great year for pictures.

They Squeak

THE principal complaint against talking pictures seems to be not so much against the slowness of the action or the weakness of the stories, as against the mechanical reproduction of the voices. They simply do not sound like human beings talking. Irate fans who write in tell me that it is a terrible disillusionment to hear a beautiful star speaking in a catarrhal whisper that starts with a lisp and ends with a squeak. So far only pictures with sound effects seem to be definitely proven as to their worth, and this situation will doubtless continue until such time as the mechanical defects of the talkies can be corrected.

College As It Isn't

COLLEGE life seems to be something that producers just never will understand. In Varsity, Paramount had an opportunity to make a college picture that was different. They had in Buddy Rogers a star who was a college boy. At great expense they transported an entire company to Princeton University, to shoot the scenes against a real college background. And there is about as much real college atmosphere in Varsity as there is essence of Gordon in synthetic gin.

I can imagine the solemn deans of Princeton throwing up their hands in holy horror at the picture of Princeton life given to the world by this film.

College Boys Don't Click

BY A similar token, college boys don't seem able to make good in Hollywood. With a great fanfare of publicity, First National recently imported a selection of the cream of college boys from all over the country to launch them on motion picture careers in Hollywood.

The only one of these who is doing well in Hollywood is John Westwood. And he is an automobile salesman. The others have all dropped by the wayside; they have either gone home in disgust, or are hanging on as prop boys or third or fourth assistants to somebody.

Actors Like Gold

ACTORS are like gold—where you find them. Jack Gilbert was practically born on the stage, Johnny Mack Brown was a football player, George O'Brien was the son of San Francisco's Chief of Police, Bill Boyd did odd jobs in the oil fields, Ramon Novarro, Ricardo Cortez and Valentino were dancers. Film stars can no more be found altogether in universities than they can out of universities.

Proves It

THE first rush of entries for the SCREEN SECRETS' motion picture star identification contest, about which more information may be found on pages 32 and 33 of this issue, proves beyond a doubt that the fans know their stars by heart. But there is a wide variation in the brief essays on favorite stars. Some of these show careful preparation and thought. Others have apparently been dashed off as though they were of minor consideration. Here's an inside tip; it is largely on the basis of these essays that prizes will be awarded.

Announcement

IT IS a pleasure to start the New Year with our dreams and hopes for a new and improved SCREEN SECRETS MAGAZINE fully realized.

With this issue we are able to offer our readers a magazine brimming with the best in stories, and art studies of the motion picture stars.

From now on all of the magazine will be printed by attractive rotogravure process. Beautiful color effects, not to be found in any other magazine, will henceforth be offered to you. We can assure you that at least five different colors of printing will be found in every issue of SCREEN SECRETS.

We have succeeded in building up a staff composed exclusively of the finest writers in Hollywood, every one an authority on the motion picture industry, and every one an intimate of the stars.

In order to give you an even more attractive-looking magazine, we have improved the quality of the printing and of the paper stock.

To keep pace with these improvements it has been necessary for us to change the price of SCREEN SECRETS to twenty-five cents effective with this issue.

For this price, the same as that which is asked by our competitors, you will receive more stories and better stories, the freshest, the most authentic news of the picture world, and the most alluring array of intimate photographs obtainable, many of them posed especially for this magazine.

You will receive much more for the same amount of money than can be found in any other magazine.

The friendship, the loyal enthusiasm of our readers have made possible this unequalled progress and we wish to express our appreciation of your support by pledging to continue to give the best magazine that it is in our power to produce.

THIS recent photograph of Douglas Fairbanks shows that he has retained his youthful vigor and enthusiasm to a remarkable degree. To the right, one of his acrobatic feats which have marked him as among the great athletes of all time.

Is Doug Through?

Will Doug Fairbanks be seen on the screen for the last time when he appears in The Iron Mask? Or will he make one more picture with Mary Pickford?

By HARRY CARR

I THINK we are about to see the last of Douglas Fairbanks as an actor.

As this is written, he is in the midst of making a swashbuckling picture called The Iron Mask. He believes it will be the greatest picture of his career. One of the greatest pictures of all time.

If this proves to be the fact, it will be his last one. I have this from people very close to him and to his career. I have often talked it over with Douglas himself.

He will produce other pictures; but he will bow off the stage forever as an actor.

Unless he and Mary Pickford should finally decide to end their careers by making one grand picture together.

There are many reasons why it is good business for Douglas to retire.

He is coming to an age where he will inevitably slow down in the ability to make the incredible leaps and gymnastic feats which have made him famous.

In every picture, he has produced some extraordinary new athletic stunt—broncho busting, Australian whip snapping, archery, etc, etc . . . He has about come to the end of all possible stunts.

The present trend of pictures indicates that it must be talkies or nothing. In other words, honors will inevitably pass to stage actors. And Doug is not a very good stage actor.

Most cogent reason of all, both Douglas and his wife, Mary Pickford, are rich beyond the dreams of avarice. There is no reason for them to go on—and he can quit now while he is on the crest of the wave—the acknowledged head of his profession.

For a long time, Fairbanks has been haunted by a hideous nightmare—a black and frowning specter called "topping the last one."

It is not the unsuccessful people, panting and striving and yearning in Hollywood, who are unhappy. The miserable ones are those who stand on the top of the precipice and grow dizzy through fear of falling. In other words, the most unhappy ones are those who dread sinking from first place to second—or third—or thirty-third.

D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. De Mille, Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, live in a continual state of worry for fear their next picture may not "top" the last one.

None of the others have had the courage, nor the opportunity to stop; but should The Iron Mask prove to be the tremendous picture that Douglas thinks it will be, he will gallop away on his winged white horse, straight into the celestial heights of the movie Valhalla, his supremacy in Doug Fairbanks appears once more as D'Artagnan, in "The Iron Mask," combining all the acrobatic feats of "The Three Musketeers" to which it is a sequel, with a more highly developed artistry.

As Don Q in "The Mark of Zorro," Doug Fairbanks displayed unequalled mastery of the Australian whip as well as his usual feats of agility.

In "Robin Hood" Doug made one of the most romantic characters of all time live again in flesh and blood. It is one of the few pictures that promise to be perennially popular. He is wooing Bessie Love.

the movies unchallenged and unequalled. It will give him a chance to go out in a blaze of glory.

DOUG'S has been the most interesting career of the screen. He was a Denver boy, born with a magnificent body, the fire of an Arab war horse and a slight strain of Jewish blood—enough to give him a vivid sense of drama and idealism. His real name was Uhlman.

He went on the stage and hammered around in stock companies for a long time, achieving considerable success and fame through his vital energy and vivacity—without really being a good actor.

The movies beckoned to him about fifteen years ago. It was during the old Tri-Angle days when D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, and Mack Sennett combined their producing forces.

Some one had the inspiration to raid the speaking stage for talent. Accordingly they signed up De Wolf Hopper, Sir Beerbohm Tree and Douglas Fairbanks. De Wolf Hopper was awful; Sir Beerbohm Tree made a picture that is said to have been the heaviest financial loser of any feature picture ever filmed; but Doug Fairbanks made good.

Doug didn't make his way to the top—as the little boys do in the Horatio Alger stories. He just gayly kicked his way to the top. He got his fingers on the edge of the sill and swung in through the window.

One of his first pictures was called The Lamb, about a tenderfoot out west; and it made him famous; it put something new on the screen. I was about to say it supplied a "new note" to the screen. But you couldn't call it a "note;" it was a whole brass band with nine bass drums and a tin can factory full of cymbals.

When Tri-Angle blew up, Douglas went to Paramount, where he made a string of pictures. Then he—with Griffith, Chaplin and Mary Pickford, organized the United Artists Corporation—supposedly a band of great stars, each making their own pictures responsible only to the starry sky.

THE pictures he has made for the United Artists will live as long as the movies live: Robin Hood, The Mark of Zorro, Thief of Bagdad, Three Musketeers, Don Q., The Black Pirate.

They were all distinguished by zest and verve—an eager swaggering appetite for life that made them different from all other pictures of the screen. They had a tremendous following among men who went to see Douglas leap over horses, swing up the sides of cliffs; dive off skyscraper draw bridges . . . .

Who can forget the poetic beauty of Doug Fairbanks' fanciful creation, "The Thief of Bagdad."

Doug's were "he" pictures—and as such were also adored by girls.

I suppose there never has been a greater athlete in the world than Douglas. His prowess is incredible. Athletes tell me that he could have become the champion of the world in any one of a dozen lines of sport.

He is a marvelous fencer, both with broadsword and rapier; he could have become a great ring fighter, for he is like greased lightning in a boxing ring; he could get a job in any rodeo as a broncho buster.

When making Robin Hood, he employed two great archers as instructors—one an Englishman, trained in the traditions of the long bow; and the other a Jap. In a few weeks he was as good as either of them.

I remember one day he and I were standing on the porch of his dressing room. In the middle of the studio "lot" stood a target. Its face was so turned away that Douglas looked at it from the side—just a sliver.

He took a bow and a quiver of arrows that were leaning against the porch and shot five at the slender side view of the target. Four out of the five slashed straight into the heart of the bull's eye.

While making Don Q, Doug took up the art of the Australian cattle whip. In two or three weeks he could make a novice out of the vaudeville headliner who was his teacher. It was really marvelous. Across the width of a stage, Doug could whip a cigarette out of your mouth; or he could—with a most terrifying crack—wrap you around with the long lash of the whip without bruising your flesh; but holding you bound like a candidate for a Sioux Indian burning stake.

I think the only one he never thoroughly convinced was Mary Pickford. Mary and I were talking in her studio bungalow when she heard the crack of a whip outside.

So This

Richard Barthelmess, the chilly looking gentleman in the center, is talking things over with his director, John Francis Dillon, on his left, while cold ocean breezes are blowing during the making of his latest picture, "Scarlet Seas."

LOOKING hale and hearty, Edwin Carewe, director and producer of Ramona, Revenge, and other successes, returned to Hollywood several days in advance of Dolores Del Rio, star of his recent productions, whose name has been linked with his in romantic rumors. The two have just completed a personal appearance tour of Europe, with some time spent in Rumania shooting local color scenes for their current release, Revenge.

Carewe pointed with pride to the evidence that he and Dolores were not kidding when they declared that their European trip was not for matrimonial purposes, as the gossips had it, for they returned single.

The producer returned early in order to start work with Finis Fox, famous scenarist, on Dolores' next starring picture, which is to be a screen version of Longfellow's well-known poem, Evangeline.

Dolores remained in New York for a few days to shop and rest up from her strenuous European trip.

While in Gotham, Dolores' beautiful voice was heard by thousands in a radio speech which she made over Station WRNY under the auspices of SCREEN SECRETS Magazine.

The lovely star gave some sound advice to girls aspiring to a career before the camera, pointing out the change which talking pictures has brought about in Hollywood.

Announced at Last

LINA BASQUETTE, star of The Godless Girl, has announced her engagement to Peverly Marley, ace cameraman, of the De Mille Studio, whom she met while making that picture. The date for the wedding has been definitely set for January. Lina, who is the widow of the late Sam Warner, was a Follies dancer before coming to Hollywood. She was a Wampas baby star of 1928.

New Racket

A NEW racket to get into the movies has come to light. A young man in New Haven, Conn., wired Fred Datig, Paramount's casting director, asking if there was any chance for him to get extra work. If so, he would come right out. The answer of course was "no." The toll cost was $18 but that was cheaper than paying railroad fare to get his refusal "in person."

Home Girl

ANITA PAGE may be a much publicized starlet to others, but she is just Anita to her mother.

The other night, a studio representative called at her home in Culver City, to take her to a personal appearance. Her mother entertained him while Anita finished dressing. She explained that dinner was late and Anita had to hurry up and dry the dishes before she could go out.

Fire!

WHEN fire broke out recently in the kitchen of the M-G-M commissary, an alarm brought a half dozen fire engines to the studio.

Each fire company seemed to have different ideas as to how the flames should be extinguished and argued the subject on the roof of the building.

Dorothy Sebastian was watching them. "Hm," she said, "looks like another story conference."

Wisecrackers

MOVIE players sometimes are smartcrackers. Ben Lyon proved this at Sid Grauman's recent premiere of Noah's Ark, at the Chinese Theatre in Hollywood. When Ben walked in he was asked to say a few lines over the radio.

"Just another animal going into the ark," was his remark.

is Hollywood

By ANNE HOWE

June Collyer has almost a new dress a day just as she used to have in the days when she was a budding New York society debutante before entering the movies. But now the studio foots the bills. She appeared recently in a leading role in the underworld picture, "Me, Gangster."

Does Colleen Moore think much of her husband, John McCormick? Just look at this picture and judge for yourself. Perhaps she's about to take an affectionate bite out of his ear. It was snapped during a recent yachting expedition.

Soul of Wit

THE distinguished actor had lost heavily at poker while on location.

"Send me one thousand dollars immediately," he wired his manager.

The manager wired, tersely, "No."

The distinguished actor was without funds, but not wit. He wired, in return, collect, "Oh!"

Chevalier Discovers America

A STORY to be much repeated. With Gallic emphasis, and the divine gift of being able to sway his audience, Maurice Chevalier, the new Paramount star, tells of his knowledge of our national geography. This, at a luncheon-reception upon his arrival from Paris.

"About five years ago," he says in English, flecked deliciously with a French accent, "I come to New York and I get a telegram from Meestair Doouglas Fairbanks, whom I have known in Paris. It say 'Come to Hollywood. Glad you are here. Come and see us.' Off course, I am delight'. I sink, 'Is it not fine of him to sink of me? A beeg man like Fairbanks!'

"Today is Friday. I go see the Music Box Revue tonight. Tomorrow is Saturday," Chevalier counts them out on his fingers, eloquently, "Saturday, I go to—to ze Ziegfeld Follies. Sunday I take ze train and spend, say, Sunday with the Fairbanks and return on Monday.

"But . . . !" here Chevalier shrugs his shoulders, his eyebrows fly heavenward, his hands ascend, his audience sighs, "but the man say it takes five days to reach Hollywood. And five days to return! I sink I will not go!"

Barbara Kent, Universal actress, has added to her other accomplishments the distinction of being the first motion picture star to be photographed with the President. This picture, with President and Mrs. Coolidge and Secretary of War Davis was taken at the Army Show in Washington recently.
—International News Reel.

Jack Mulhall and Anita Stewart have never played together in pictures, but why should they when they can play together on the sands at Santa Monica Beach?

Madame Chevalier, a tiny Frenchwoman with crimson lips, crescent-shaped like Gloria Swanson's, and a powdered amber complexion, is here with Monsieur, where he will make a gelatin drama for Paramount.

Horse Sense

EDDIE SOWDERS had been assistant to Eric Von Stroheim for many years. He had learned that when Von Stroheim asked for something there could be no substitute. Often, as in the following instance, his requests were beyond human power.

"Now," said Von Stroheim, "We'll get busy. Everything must go like clock work. Get this! Number 1, the horse paws dirt with his right foot; Number 2, the horse paws dirt with his left foot; Number 3, the horse crosses his feet; Number 4, the horse pricks up his ears and Number 5, the horse lays down. Now, are you ready?"

"I am," said Eddie, "but have you spoken to the horse about it?"

No Backslider

BOBBIE VERNON is out of the hospital now after three weeks spent flat on his stomach while a mischievous vertebrae learned its proper place. Years of taking comic falls at Christie's had made it careless of its position in Bobbie's back.

"Yep," said Bobbie, looking wistful, "I told Al Christie the other day, that there'd be no more back sliding. I'll take all my falls on my tummy from now on."

Even Bobbie's swell yacht, earned by years of taking hard falls in countless comedies, could not compensate for a rickety, aching spine.

Influence of the motion picture on commercial Hollywood. A Vine Street bootblack's sign reads: "We are not stars, but we shine."

What, the Actor?

IN HIS latest picture, Ben Lyon was required to ride a horse into the roaring waters of the Snake River. The horse was very valuable and his owner was on hand. Bravely, Ben rode into the water. The man yelled, "Get him off—get him off!"

The director, thinking he was worried about Ben's safety, said, "Oh, he'll make it all right."

"I don't give a damn about your star," the man retorted, "but that horse is valuable."

Introduction For Buddy

BUDDY ROGERS has met June Collyer.

This may not mean much at a casual reading but if you only knew how Buddy has been longing to meet her!

It is strange in this city where everyone is working for the common cause of pictures, how difficult it sometimes is to get acquainted. If you do not just happen to play in a picture together you can sometimes go on for years without even an introduction.

Dorothy Mackaill, George Fitzmaurice, her director, Mrs. Fitzmaurice, and Milton Sills, her leading man, returning from a location trip to Honolulu where they made scenes for "His Captive Woman." Constant rainfall marred their trip and they were glad to be headed homeward.

Buddy met June at a party. No, Mary Brian was not invited. But then, no one knows whether the friendship between Buddy and Mary is serious enough for that to make any difference.

THE perennial ingenue was describing to a friend the watery glories of the flood as shown in Noah's Ark.

"It was wonderful—wonderful! Imagine . . . waters sweeping, swirling, crashing!"

Feminine voice, sweetly: "Was it as you recall it, dear?"

And a beautiful friendship came to an end.

Good Start

A HOLLYWOOD hostess was planning a luncheon to honor Greta Garbo.

"Now, just whom would you like, Greta?" she inquired.

"Oh, Nils Asther, and . . ."

We take it that Nils Asther is certainly making a good start in his attempt to replace John Gilbert.

Searching for men for the above mentioned luncheon who might interest la Garbo, the hostess suggested Ivan Lebedoff, the Russian actor and writer.

"I do not know him—but let me see. I-v-a-n Lebe-doff! It sounds very pretty. I know I would like him. I can always tell from a man's name whether I like him. Invite him."

The first indication we've had that Garbo is psychic as well as mysterious.

Mary's New Escort

AND now we learn that Mary Duncan is going places with Paul Berne, the Pathe supervisor. Paul is the little boy who advises all the Hollywood gals on their troubles. Remember, he helped Barbara La Marr out of her difficulties; Lucille Rickson, Joan Crawford, and countless others.

Now, we wonder, just what is troubling Mary!

Lilyan Fools 'Em

LILYAN TASHMAN has such a chic boyish bob; but she found it had its disadvantages, too. There was no hair to poke its way out from under her hat and soften her face. But trust Lilyan! She just went out and bought some curls and lined all her hats with them. Now, when she goes to a luncheon and removes her headgear, all the women gasp in their wonderment. Which doesn't annoy Lilyan in the least. In fact, the curls serve a double purpose. They not only add to her beauty but create attention. What more could a woman want from an investment?

Buddy's Innocence

BUDDY ROGERS is a nice boy. At a recent party he was offered a cocktail.

"What's this?" he asked, innocently.

That puts Buddy in the same class with the naive little girl who said, "Mother, what's beer?"

Eva Returns

EVA VON BERNE has been shipped back to her native country of Austria.

Just another little kid who peeped through the fairy gates only to have them close abruptly and cruelly upon her.

What an ovation the publicity department gave her when she entered this country! New clothes, flowers, press luncheons, interviews with famous writers and a drawing-room from New York City to Hollywood, with stop-overs at the larger cities to introduce her to the newspaper reporters.

Recently, when she left, she had a lower berth on a train with no extra fare attached to it! Every effort was made to keep the newspapers from knowing about it.

Poor youngster. They do say it was the size of her ankles that did it. Yet she started her career with such a bang—playing opposite John Gilbert for her first role in Mask of the Devil.

And all she's had to eat in this country is pineapple and lamb chops and spinach, the usual allotment for ambitious girls who are a bit overweight for the camera.

Mamma Puts Her Foot Down

IT IS whispered in Hollywood that Mrs. Kennedy, Merna Kennedy's mamma, won't let her daughter go around with James Hall anymore for fear that they might get married and thus spoil the promising career of the young lady who played the lead with Charlie Chaplin in The Circus not so long ago. Other Hollywood mammas have tried from time to time to guide their daughters' destinies without conspicuous success.

Call of the Hearth

THE back-to-home-and-fireside movement has taken Hollywood by storm. A few months ago all the stars were closing up their homes and moving into apartments. Now they are all closing up their apartments and moving into homes. Anything to keep life from becoming dull.

Mary Duncan, the stage star who recently joined the movies, seems to be planning to stay in Hollywood permanently, for she has just given up her apartment at the Beverly Wilshire and taken a beautiful new home among the spacious estates of the Bell-Air district out beyond Hollywood.

Lupe Velez has a new home in Laurel Canyon, a home as Mexican as her accent, with a large patio and an outdoor fireplace. There is even an electric moon shining through the pepper trees above it to give the place the last touch of romantic atmosphere. Lupe isn't the type of girl that wastes time crying for the moon. She just goes ahead and has one made to order. Not of course that she needs a moon. Lupe provides her own romantic atmosphere.

Doug's Convict Clip

DOUG FAIRBANKS isn't doffing the chapeau to his lady friends these days and for the best of reasons. He wants to spare them the shock.

Doug was forced to shave his cranium right to the scalp so that his wig would fit closely during the making of The Iron Mask.

Forthwith his three musketeers, Athos, Porthos and Swing low sweet chariot! Who would suspect that this charming Louise Fazenda is the bespectacled old hag who froze the hearts of thousands in "The Terror"?

If you want a sample of Victor McLaglen's fistic prowess, which has helped to make him famous on the screen, just try scratching his new car. Victor thinks so much of it that he insists on washing it himself.

Aramis did the same. Just another close shave in which the four inseparable companions stood together.

During the hours when he is not in costume, Doug wears a navy blue sateen beret, cool, comfortable and natty. A convict slip, he has found, doesn't go any too well with sport togs.

Playful

WHICH brings to mind an incident indicative of Doug's playful spirits. One of his pet tricks is tickling people at unexpected moments. Recently he "goosed" Stanley J. Sandford, who is playing Porthos in The Iron Mask. The genial heavy, who tips the scales at a neat three hundred, suddenly sat down on a spindly legged Louis XIV chair used on one of the sets, a priceless antique. The chair splintered into a thousand bits.

"Another fifteen hundred bucks shot!" yelled the production manager.

"It was worth it just to see that baby elephant jump," roared Doug in reply.

Industrious Joan

JOAN CRAWFORD is an industrious little girl. While pictures are being made there is a certain amount of spare time. Instead of wasting it, Joan sat at her portable sewing machine on the M-G-M lot during the filming of Adrienne Lecouvreur and finished two evening gowns, a dozen gingham house dresses and some lingerie. Now on a vacation between pictures she is supervising the decorating of her new home in Brentwood, near Hollywood.

Hot and Bothered

JOSEPHINE DUNN was all hot and bothered the other day, all because Director Alf Goulding ordered her off the set on which she was working with Karl Dane and George K. Arthur. She certainly was all annoyed—and a little bit hurt, too—when she was escorted off the set, but when they told her Dane and Arthur were taking some shower bath scenes, she was glad.

Off Again

RENEE ADOREE has written her name into the divorce records of Los Angeles. She's becoming the "off again on again Finnegan" of the divorce mill. Recently she filed suit for divorce against William S. Gill, a fashionable Wilshire district tailor. The next day the complaint was dismissed with a statement from Renee that she "just couldn't go through with it.

Several days ago Renee packed up her belongings and hit for the South Seas with a company from M-G-M to make a picture, The Pagan.

A few hours after the train pulled out of Los Angeles, divorce papers were again filed by Renee against Gill, charging cruelty and desertion. Now Gill can't do anything until Renee comes back, which may be a long time.

Marceline Day seeks the sport and solitude of angling when not working in the M-G-M studios. She earned the above fishing trip by her strenuous part in Buster Keaton's "The Camera Man."

Mary Duncan had to hop out of her morning bath so many times to answer the telephone that she finally perfected this device to meet the situation.

Greta Goes

Greta Garbo returns in triumph to her home in Sweden which she left three years ago, forlorn and lonely, with one dress to her name.

BY THE time this article appears Greta Garbo will have started home for Sweden. She has been in Hollywood a little more than three years. It is her first return trip to her native country.

She was in her dressing room on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot when I went up to talk to her about it. One of Los Angeles' famous costume designers was just leaving. He had been taking orders for the clothes for this visit.

Greta has not taken a large number. Not a large number, according to the dictates of the usual actress. But a large number for Greta Garbo. She is not indifferent to clothes any more than she is really indifferent to publicity. She desires to be neat but not conspicuous just as she likes to look neat in print—not conspicuous.

She wishes she didn't have to wear any clothes, for that matter. She would like to find an island where she could go native. But since it is the custom to cover the body she does it with the least worry and expense possible. Not indifference but merely a refusal to spend unnecessary time on what is to her one of life's side issues.

She landed in this country, a lonely, forlorn, pathetic figure on the first of July, 1925. A slim figure in a rather dowdy, dark blue, plain tailored suit. It was her only street garment. I do not doubt that she would really be just as happy to glimpse her native land, again, in the same costume! Just as she would be equally pleased to have her mother and brother, the only ones to welcome her in Stockholm, as they were the only ones to bid her "God speed" when she departed.

But Sweden knows she is coming. She told me about the welcome that Stockholm gave Mary and Doug when they visited that country. People had never turned out in such masses to welcome anyone as they did America's sweetheart and her husband. Yet, as they stepped from the train there was not a ripple of sound, not one cheer to greet them. They passed

"If I were old and had led an amazing life I should tell everything," says Greta Garbo, "but I am only twenty-three; too young to tell my secrets." Perhaps that is why she is known as the most mysterious woman in Hollywood.

Home

By RUTH BIERY

Greta Garbo is looking forward eagerly to her return to her home in Sweden. "I am going to walk down the wintry streets with the snow falling on me and I shall adore it!" she says.

the length of the platform, two-thirds of the population of Stockholm silently watching. Unexpectedly, an old woman tottered forth from the mob and handed Mary a huge bouquet of roses. The crowd went into ecstacy, yelling, crying, cheering. They approved of the old lady's greeting.

GRETA GARBO admitted she was curious about her reception. For the first day she feels that she may enjoy any ovation which might be given. But after that first day she desires to be alone with her family. Her sister died while she was in this country. She has told me many times that it was the greatest sorrow of her American experience.

She is contemplating the idea of bringing her mother and brother back to America with her. But she has come to no decision.

"I never live for tomorrow. I live for today only. I cannot tell what I will do in Sweden. If I decide to bring them, they will come. There is nothing I can foretell about it.

"I am going back for Christmas. I only know that I am going to walk down the streets of Sweden with the snow high on all sides of me and the snow falling upon me. I will adore it, I will love it! I am terribly human but no cafe, no party, will ever mean as much to me."

It has been rumored in print and by tongue that Miss Garbo is going to Sweden as a means of breaking her contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

She emphatically denies this. She says that America is the only country in which to make pictures. She says this is true of both the climate and the producers. This rumor comes from the fact that Lars Hanson, her countryman, broke his contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in this manner.

Greta Garbo discussed Lars Hanson's situation freely. Hanson, one of Europe's foremost actors, had been forced to play a second lead to Jackie Coogan. He was dissatisfied with his role and went back to Sweden to think it over. German producers bid highly for his services and he decided that his happiness lay across the ocean.

Miss Garbo, although not completely satisfied with the women she has portrayed on the American screen, has no such feeling of dissatisfaction. When it comes to a matter of her work she is perfectly willing to be quoted, so I use her own language:

"I am hoping when I return to get amazing stories; something absolutely different. I want them striking and daring. I want to do things which are not laid out every day. I should like to play Salome, Marie Antoinette, oh, how I should like to play that woman! And perhaps, more than all, I should like to play Jeanne D'Arc, only I fear the people would not be interested."

To understand Greta Garbo fully you must have known her when she first came to this country. A shy, wistful creature who expected to find the streets of New York padded with roses; the arms of the American people outstretched in a grand gesture of welcome.

Instead, she found a people who stared at her; a folk who concentrated in asking her personal questions; a milling mass of humanity who poked fun at her misuse of the unknown, a foreign American language. We can all recall pages upon pages of quotations from the tongue of Garbo—wisecracks upon her use of our language. If we had gone to Sweden with no knowledge of their language, would we have enjoyed reading in the daily newspapers how we mishandled it?

I can recall a day when she was making her first picture, The Torrent. A stranger in a strange land, she was exerting every possible effort to be friendly. She approached Monta Bell, the director, and said, "I am important."

He looked at her a moment and laughed and said, "You are the least important."

Greta returned the look for a second—bewilderment, nay, even consternation — in her expression. She had meant to be jocular; she had succeeded in being merely funny.

"No!" she tried again. "I am like a can of sardines—important."

She meant imported. She intended a joke. She had noticed that the American people liked joking. And everyone within earshot merely laughed at her, not with her, in return for the effort. This is one incident which did not chance to find its place in the newspaper or magazine columns. But hundreds of similar remarks were repeated.

She is sensitive. Anyone who gives to the screen the delicacy of interpretations which she gives, must be sensitive by nature.

We have all read of her troubles with the studio after her first three pictures. It was the trouble of an unknown foreign girl who had no American friends to advise her. She could not talk about the misunderstandings because of her fear of misusing the language. Her silence gave vent to innumerable wild stories. She was temperamental; she would not work; she went home when she did not like a picture.

Greta Garbo is not temperamental.

Of course, no one will believe this statement except those who know her as she really is—in person. She is quiet, reserved, a bit introspective, but not temperamental. Any director who has swung a megaphone on her picture will substantiate this statement.

SHE has never refused to do anything in connection with a picture except to play a role which she felt would prove detrimental in the eyes of her public. And there is no star in Hollywood who has not made such a rejection.

Greta Garbo was born a certain type of woman. It is true that she likes to be by herself—that she enjoys the companionship of Greta Garbo. But that is her nature. She sees no reason why—because she is a motion picture star—she should not be true to that nature.

"If I had had an amazing life and were old and everything was about to be ended, I would tell everything or I would write it. I think Isadora Duncan's life was amazing. I think it was wonderful of her to write it. But we do not walk on our graves while we are young. I am twenty-three, and too young to be blase; too young to tell the secrets which are in me."

Greta Garbo is not mysterious, she is honest. She is human enough to want only nice things said about her; frank enough to admit it; clever enough to live her own life irrespective of the people around her.

Greta's trip home marks the completion of an epoch in her career. In the few short years since she came from Sweden, a forlorn little girl, unknown to the world, she has definitely carved out her place in the hearts of the movie goers of the world.

Greta Garbo and John Gilbert appear for the last time together in "A Woman of Affairs." Just how real their love scenes were will probably always remain a mystery.

Her return marks her professional separation from John Gilbert. His contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer expired, Gilbert is going over to United Artists at the conclusion of his next picture, Thirst, which he is making with Mary Nolan as his leading lady.

When Greta comes back she will find herself teamed with Nils Asther, her countryman, who has made rapid strides in the hearts of fans during the past few years. It remains to be seen whether he will be able to take the place of Gilbert on the screen.

When she returns she will have broken completely with the past. She stands now in a position to rise to the very zenith as one of the most popular actresses of all time.

Charlie Farrell's

The star of Seventh Heaven has built himself a bachelor retreat with no accommodations for a wife.

By JACK WOOLDRIDGE

THESE are the directions you follow to reach the Vagabond House:

You drive down Hollywood boulevard to Cahuenga avenue and turn north past the traffic cop whose voice sounds like a big bass fiddle. You take your place in line behind eleven gravel trucks and make dirty remarks as you crawl toward the mountain pass. Take the road to the right, turn left just before reaching First National Studios and drive out under the pepper trees to the shores of blue Toluca Lake. The Vagabond House is just beyond the estate of Eva Tanguay.

There you'll find a young fellow with a heavy mop of hair chopping wood and whistling tunes to a sad-eyed spaniel. He will have on a pair of overalls with a hole snagged in one knee, a sweater that once was white, and shoes all scratched and scarred. He will smile the sweetest smile imaginable when you arrive, and greet you with a Mayor Jimmy Walker welcome.

The young man will be Mr. Charlie Farrell, the bright light of Seventh Heaven, Fazil, and other screen productions which have caught the public fancy.

"Yes," he will say, "I've a Vagabond House, because I'm a vagabond at heart. Most men are. I wanted a place where the barbaric in me could come out. It's cost? Oh, I don't know; fifteen or twenty thousand dollars perhaps. The site is what took the money. The house doesn't amount to so much. I don't think anyone would ever really want it except young Farrell. It's a sort of dream home I've had in mind a long, long time. It isn't any place where a wife would live. For instance, there aren't any beds in the place; nothing but bunks built into the walls. There isn't any steam heat nor hot water radiators. But I've the most wonderful log fireplace in a big living room where I can sit in comfort and dream my dreams and see fantastic pictures in the leaping flames."

"Pictures of her?" I asked.

"Perhaps," he replied. "I wonder if I will? Do you know, I've never had a dream-girl—some fanciful, ethereal creature whom I believed some day I would meet and woo. I've never had time. After I left home in Cape Cod, Mass., and landed in Hollywood with about four dollars and a college cap, I was too busy trying to earn sufficient money to dunk doughnuts. I'll bet I dunked more doughnuts the first two years I was here than any 'extra' who ever wrapped his legs about a lunch-counter stool. They were daily manna to me. Then, when I finally broke through and began getting parts, I put my whole time into pictures. I didn't think about girls or a wife. I'm not thinking about them yet. If I were, I wouldn't be building a Vagabond House.

Charlie Farrell pondering over the blueprints of his Vagabond House made from rough sketches which he drew up himself.

"Some day I know I will meet the girl. Right then, this place will go on the market. I'll bid it good-bye and build a home to suit her in Brentwood. I've an acre there."

HE GAZED complacently at his vagabond creation, just then not completed. It isn't a hut by any means. It's a neat little residence of Normandie architecture, two stories high in one wing, a great living room in the other wing open to the roof, with exposed beams and topped by a skylight. Ship floors. Pegs instead of nails. A sun porch. A servant's quarters. A swimming pool. A place in which to store a canoe. A rack for the paddles. Sleeping bunks. And the great stone fireplace.

In front, Toluca Lake. Just around the shore-line, the

Vagabond House

This is the elevation of the Vagabond House which is soon to be completed on the shores of Toluca Lake. It is thoroughly masculine in every respect, both inside and out.

Here's Charlie at his beach bungalow where he held open house. Now he's built his Vagabond House so he can be alone.

Lakeside golf course. Nearby, two tennis courts. The studio scarcely ten minutes away through Cahuenga Pass. Stillness. Night birds and night noises. Daylight, with the smell of pine trees and willows and grasses. Small trout leaping in the Toluca. Seclusion.

But no place for a wife!

"I don't think I am selfish," he said. "I told you that if a 'Mrs. Farrell' came into my world I'd sell my Vagabond House and build her a home in Brentwood. But for the present, here is where I want to live. The fellows will come out sometimes, I suppose, but there won't be any such gang as blows into my shack at the beach. Did you ever see that place? I don't know who it belongs to, although the title is in my name. The gang lets me come in, oh, every now and then! They're a delightful, roistering crew and we've had some great times together. But my Vagabond House will be different. It's my dream place.

"There won't be any elaborate furnishings. I'll pick up some odd things here, a few antiques perhaps, there, but for the most part just dull-looking things, the kind a man likes to have about. There will be a great arm-chair before the fireplace, a broad window looking out upon the lake and built-in shelves for my books. There'll be a snug place for my dog to sleep, and ash trays and humidors scattered about. I'll have a big reading lamp with a shade to put by my side at night."

"And pictures?" I interrupted.

"Two," he replied. "There will be a picture of Janet Gaynor on my bedroom wall and another of Virginia Valli. They're my pals, you know. Janet and I have been wonderful friends ever since we worked together in Seventh Heaven. Gad, she's a marvelous girl! And Virginia Valli—well, she understands me and we have a lot of fun kicking around together. Just friends; nothing more. I run into her house at noon sometimes with an avocado and ask her to have the maid fix me a salad. Or, I get some nice berries and we eat them there. We chat a bit, then I churn along my way in the flivver."

BUT," I insisted, "what about the 'Mrs. Farrell' who, sometime, will arrive? Couldn't she enjoy the Vagabond House? Why deny it entirely to her? Why not go on keeping it as it is; she might like it?"

"No," said Charlie, "I don't think she would She

The first inside revelation of just how a talking picture is made.

In order to give SCREEN SECRETS' readers the first graphic glimpse into the making of talking pictures, a fascinating process which has hitherto been veiled in deepest mystery, the author of this article became an actor and worked in a number of scenes of "The Doctor's Secret, at the Paramount Studio, under the direction of William C. De Mille. He gives herewith an absorbing account of his experiences as well as a simplified explanation of the mechanical process of producing talking pictures.—THE EDITOR.

SILENCE, everywhere. The muffled unearthly silence of a tomb. We are in an English drawingroom. It seems for the moment like a real drawingroom. There are big easy chairs and divans, a cheery fireplace.

Ruth Chatterton and H. B. Warner are walking back and forth. But their footsteps make no sound. There is a clock on the mantelpiece, but it doesn't tick. At last, William De Mille, the director, sitting with his rangy length sprawled in a canvas chair speaks. But his voice has a dead, flat sound.

He is giving final directions. In two minutes we are to begin production on The Doctor's Secret, a talking picture.

SLOWLY it comes over me that it is uncanny, this working on a talking picture set. The quietness of it all, the sense that unseen, unheard, a great mechanism is about to go into action.

There is no cheerful hissing of the arcs. The lights are huge incandescents, glaring forth like great round eyes.

To the right, enclosed in a huge glass cage, a camera man is adjusting his film. I can see him but he makes no noise. The sound-proof cage encloses him in silence.

Far up in the rafters, high above the stage, a man sits in a little glass enclosed stage, peering down, making final preparations. He is the "mixer," the man who controls the sound, who can change a human voice from a whisper to a roar by the turning of a dial.

Once production is under way, he can never hear the real voices of those actors down below. They will come to him through a loud speaker. He will hear them just as you will hear them in the theatre some weeks later.

This much can be seen from the stage, but it is only a part of the intricate machinery of making sound pictures which is going on behind the scenes.

the mixer up in the rafters. Ruth Chatterton and John Loder are the actors. is the director.

Comments by Leading Lights of Hollywood

Richard Arlen: They prove we're not dumb.
William Austin: Oh, I say—
Clive Brook: Immense.
Lane Chandler: Great stuff.
Chester Conklin: The voice is more powerful than a subtitle.
Gary Cooper: More difficult to make—more wonderful to see.
James Hall: Just like facing the footlights again.
Jack Holt: It means new things to conquer.
Neil Hamilton: Now it can be told.
Fred Kohler: The villain can be more villainous.
Jack Luden: Bigger and better coughdrops.
John Loder: Bully!
Jack Oakie: They speak for themselves.
William Powell: I'm for them—100 per cent.
Wallace Berry: Louder and heavier heavies.
Conrad Nagel: It means the learning of dozens of little new tricks to be successful.
George Fawcett: The greatest boon ever given the former stage actor now in pictures.
Edward Connelly: A new art.
Merna Kennedy: I'm thrilled about them.
Ben Lyon: My former stage experience was not in vain.
Richard Barthelmess: Most fascinating invention in the history of pictures.
Colleen Moore: I am enthusiastic and believe there will be a tremendous development in the coming year.
Al Jolson: Mammy!
Milton Sills: A decided step forward.
Corinne Griffith: I'm tremendously enthusiastic.
Billie Dove: I can hardly wait my first one.
Alice White: I'm strong for the chinema.
Dorothy Mackaill: Wonderful.
Jack Mulhall: Me, too.
Dolores Costello: I think they're remarkable.

This is the way the mechanism of talking pictures works: The voices of the actors are caught by the microphone (A), carried to the monitor (B) who is the signal man, thence through the amplifier (C) which "steps up" the voices, and so to the mixer (D) who controls the volume of sound, keeping the voices even. Meanwhile the cameraman (E) is grinding away in a sound-proof booth, and the director (F) hears the voices through his ear phones after they have been through the amplifier. Then the sound waves are carried to another part of the building where they are reproduced as light waves on a strip of film.

Director De Mille is giving his final instructions to Miss Chatterton, who recently left the stage for talking pictures, and to H. B. Warner, who has been a favorite of both stage and screen for many years.

"Now on this cue you cross over right—"

HE GESTURES with a manuscript, Miss Chatterton nods.

Then he steps back into the shadows behind the lights, takes his seat in the chair with his name inscribed across the back, and adjusts a pair of head phones over the gray crush hat which is as indispensable a piece of wearing apparel to him, as the riding breeches and boots are to his famous brother, C. B. De Mille.

Henceforth, no sound will come to him direct. He will hear the voices as the man up mid the rafters hears them, reproduced through the amplifier, carried to his ears by a head phone.

All eyes are focused on him. He gives the signal. Miss Chatterton and Mr. Warner take their places in the center of the room just beneath a microphone that hangs suspended over their heads high enough to be out of the camera's range, and yet low enough to catch their voices. This microphone is extremely sensitive and picks up such sounds as the rattle of keys or the clinking of beads.

All is now in readiness. The great doors swing slowly shut, throttling the myriad noises of the Paramount lot, the noises of 1,500 workers engaged in the hubbub of picture production, to absolute silence.

A red light glows into brilliance over the stage door, a warning that no one is to leave or enter.

Behind us, a little to the right, a man is busy at a signal board, working with colored lights. He is the "monitor," the signal corps of this army of picture makers. He listens to the pulse beat of the great machine, flashing in-

Children of Grief

By HARRY CARR

Gloria Swanson and Eric Von Stroheim have had tempestuous careers alone. Now all Hollywood is waiting for the earthquake as they prepare to make a picture together

Gloria Swanson in her garden. To the right, a restful pose. Who would think that this calm lady was a dynamo of energy?

SAID Her Highness, the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray to his Excellency Count Eric, Hans, Josef, Stephen, Maria Von Stroheim: "Say, are we going to let these Hollywood wise crackers make suckers of us?"

Said His Excellency, Count Eric, Hans, Josef, Stephen Maria Von Stroheim to Her Highness, the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray: "Not on your life, we're not."

And so it stands—Gloria Swanson and Von Stroheim gritting their teeth and determined to be harmonious if the effort kills them.

And Hollywood remains skeptical—listening for tornadoes, cyclones, earthquakes, and assorted disasters to take place when Von Stroheim and Gloria start making The Swamp.

If ever there were two children of grief it is Von Stroheim and Gloria Swanson. Every time they start to make a picture separately, the studio flags hang at half mast. When they get all this grief crammed into one picture . . . Oo!

I went over to see Gloria the day she came back from New York to get her clothes ready for her part—the part of a convent-bred girl who goes out into the world and finds herself keeping a dive.

I told her that I had come to say goodbye; that I would always hold her memory dear; and that I hoped she would remember that no lady with two titles of nobility ever permitted herself to scratch in the clinches.

Gloria grinned—a little wanly, I thought. "Sure; I suppose we will have a hundred fights," she said. "But anyhow we will make a great picture."

I asked her if they hadn't already had a great many fights—getting the picture ready. I knew they had been struggling from September 1, to November 3—trying to cut it down. Von's inevitable struggle.

"No," said Gloria, "I knew how to handle him. I told him that every one in Hollywood was waiting for the sound of the bricks flying; and it was up to us to fool them. It is just agony and torture for him to cut anything out of a story he has written; but I must say he was a good sport about it."

"What's the trouble with Von; why is he always in hot water?" I asked—as though, having worked with him for a year on The Wedding March, I didn't know better than she.

"Just genius," she said; but added, "But heaven knows

Said Count Eric Von Stroheim to the Marquise Falaise de la Coudray, otherwise Gloria Swanson: "Of course, we're not going to let these Hollywood wise-crackers make suckers out of us!"

that is enough! You always have trouble with every picture." She looked sadly down at her feet which were curled up under her as she sat in a big chair like a little girl.

"The first day it's always great. Everybody is laughing and talking on the sets and you are all convinced that you are starting the world's greatest picture. By the end of the second week, you know the whole thing is a wreck, that everybody else in the company is a stupid moron, and all you want is to get through it—any old way—the quickest way.

"The reason is that you all think alike the first day. But your imaginations start running in different directions until the horizon is too wide. Every picture ends in a kind of chaos; but sometimes the Lord is good to you and it comes out.

"The more genius a man has, the more impossible it is for him to see along another man's gun sight. That is what is the matter with Von."

"Then what's the matter with you?"

The Marquise de la Coudray elevated her plucked eyebrows, and if I hadn't known her so long, I think she would have said: "Well, really!"

AS IT was, a very sad and very bitter expression came into her eyes. "If I have had trouble," she said, "It has been because I have had to fight every inch of my way.

"Mary Pickford always has had Douglas to lean on; Norma Talmadge has always acted over a net—with Joe Schenck holding the net. I have just had myself—and with plenty of other things to drag me down.

"I don't know why I have always had to fight. In every other way except business, I have been protected. I have had the same butler and cook for years. My chauffeur has been with me a long time. I have two secretaries—one here and one in New York; and they are like companions to me. My little daughter and my adopted little boy have a governess who has been with me for years. They are all faithful and devoted.

"But my business affairs . . . " Gloria fairly groaned. "When they were not in the hands of crooks, it was something worse. For instance, I had a piece of property on Wilshire Boulevard that a young fellow took over to sell for me. Out of friendship, he wanted to save me the expense of an attorney. So he handled the details himself. He saved me $200; and what do you suppose he lost for me? One hundred thousand!"

She said that now she has turned over all her financial affairs to Joseph Kennedy, head of the Pathe Company, and he has a force of experts straightening it out.

"They just get one end of it straightened out," said Gloria. "Then they pick up something else; and its worse. They told me that they should think I would have committed suicide—trying to get it straightened out myself."

It came to me suddenly that Gloria felt sorry for herself—she, the most envied girl who breathes the breath of life.

"Why should you feel so bitter?" I protested.

"Bitter?" She looked up in genuine surprise.

"Sure — bitter — that's what I said. There's bitterness in your voice. When you talk, a little tense, hard diagonal line comes

Gloria Swanson has had all the blessings of life brought to not trade them right across the lids of your eyes. Why should you be bitter; you have wealth, titles of nobility, love, children, fame . . . my God, Gloria, if Providence had come around with all the blessings of life on a tray like French pastry, you couldn't have had more!"

She considered the matter gravely.

"I don't mean to be bitter . . . but I think sometimes of what these things have cost me. I was so ill that I couldn't digest even a glass of water. I would go to a cafe and have to come home; the music would make me so nervous I couldn't stand it.

"A horrible sense of responsibility weighed over my life. It got to be a morbidity. I would wake up in the morning, so tired that I was like a rag; but I would almost frantically crawl out of bed. I was haunted always by the feeling that I must do something, somehow, somewhere, or everything would collapse. That everything depended upon me.

"The doctors told me I would die if I didn't stop; but the producers held me mercilessly to my contract. They drove me on without pity.

"The doctors finally sent me out into the country and told me to sit on the porch and not think about anything. After I had been there for about five seconds, a funny-looking woman came along with a bundle. I got to wondering who she was; then I got to wondering what was in that bundle . . . I decided that there must be something distinctly mysterious about that bundle. In the end, I had to follow the woman down the street to find out. Before I got off the porch that morning, I had manufactured a complete story about that woman. I worried more than working in a picture. Women like me can't rest. I have to keep going even if death is at the end of the passage."

"Well, Gloria," I said, "Here you are—a couple of marquises—with lovely children—a husband—a house full of big furniture—a fortune that worries you to madness—pictures that drive you to despair after the first day . . . does it all pay? Wouldn't you rather have been Mrs. Pickles of Chicago, and belonged to a bridge club?"

Gloria squashed the fire out of the end of her cigarette in a little gold and marble ash tray.

"What's the use of talking like that?" she said, severely.

"What's the use of being like that?" I countered.

"Ambition."

"What's ambition?"

"A chemical process." Gloria laughed. "Yes, it is, honestly," she said. "Ambition is purely a chemical process and success is when it 'jells'—so to speak. It's no use to ask a lot of silly questions—why I am not Mrs. Three-on-No-Trumps, of Chicago. I just couldn't help being what I am. Just like when I went to rest on the porch. Even if I knew that unhappiness would be the result, I would just have to climb up here and find out for myself."

"Yes; but you didn't answer my question: was it worth while?"

"W-e-l-l—yes. Anyhow I have tasted it all. I have tried everything once. That's what life is for—experience—I've had a lot."

"And found unhappiness?"

"Every creative mind finds unhappiness—but happiness, too. These placid cows—I don't believe they are happier on the whole. There must be times when the cud doesn't taste good. They don't get into the dumps; but they never see any high heights. Anyhow, that's how I am—all stirred up and seething inside; so.

Pedestal of Pulchritude

JOSEPHINE DUNN, pretty Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star, is wondering whether the admiration of fans will enable her to supplant this statue on a pedestal of pulchritude.

Here is Buddy Rogers with his best girl, his mother. "There is nothing spectacular about Buddy," she says. "But I am mighty proud of him and all the money and fame in the world wouldn't make him any dearer to me."

My Boy

By Mrs. B. H. Rogers

Mother of Buddy Rogers

Buddy Rogers' mother tells about his first birthday party, his first loves, and other touching incidents of the childhood of a normal American boy that fame has not changed.

OF COURSE, I am proud of Buddy. I am as normal a mother as he is a normal, everyday, American youngster. Yet, in all justice, I must admit that there is nothing spectacular about my boy. He has just been, from his babyhood days, unusually lucky.

There was nothing sensational about his arrival. He came, like thousands upon thousands of others, into a small-town, every-day American family. His father owned and ran (and still does) the newspaper in our little town of 3,500. His grandparents on both sides live within a few blocks of us. His uncle was assistant postmaster. He had one sister, Geraldine. He now has a younger brother.

You can picture the day! The grandparents fluttered and helpful. The neighbors bringing in fresh apple pies and crabapple jellies. The excitement of the whole village when they knew it was a boy. The cries of, "Oh, it's so nice to have a girl and a boy. They'll be such companions for one another."

From the very beginning, he was a lucky youngster. There was no particular reason for his winning the town baby-contest during his first season. We did not think him a particularly beautiful infant. But even at that age he was winsome. He had a cute way of cooing and looking straight at you and making you feel that you wanted to do something for him. That's the way he wheedled the judges into pronouncing him the best of that season's crop of babies!

As he grew, he continued to be just an average boy, normally good and normally naughty. I don't think I ever spanked Buddy. His father took care of that part of his education. He had his average share of boy-spankings.

A few days before he was four, a carnival came to town. They wished to use the vacant lot next to us. Mr. Rogers agreed, provided, they would loan the use of the merry-go-round for Buddy's birthday. They consented and Buddy had the first really big merry-go-round party to be given in our little city. To this day he talks about it. He was so proud—giving all his little friends rides for nothing!

This is the way Buddy Rogers looked when he was a year old. Why wouldn't he win a baby contest? He is shown in the picture with his mother, and his sister (now Mrs. John Bindford), who was his first leading lady in a high school play.

I wondered, then, if his merry-go-rounds throughout life would be provided so easily.

He wasn't particularly bright in school. Report card days were his bug-a-bears. He never missed a grade but he never led his class, either. I can remember so well, his coming home at the end of each month, a down-in-the-mouth, sheepish expression on his dirty little face. If he had an "F" he'd try to hide it from his father. Sometimes he'd say he'd forgotten his card. Again, that he hadn't received it. He'd carry it in his pocket for days rather than let his father see it. I thought that was a good sign—that he didn't want his father to know he wasn't perfect. We only lived three or four blocks from the school. But Buddy didn't seem to be able to get up on time in the mornings. I'd call him—only to go in a few minutes later and find him still sleeping. He was often late! I can remember going to the kitchen door and calling, "Do stop and tie your shoe laces, Buddy!"

AS A VERY small youngster, he started to make money. His father gave him three dollars a week to sweep out the office when the broom was twice as high as the boy who swung it. Then he'd hand out posters, run errands, set type—act as a regular printer's devil for his father.

By the time he was eight he had a newspaper route with sixty-five customers. That brought him four or five dollars. All through his grammar school days he averaged ten dollars a week. And he saved his money. Buddy has always saved his money! As a family, we have had to save and perhaps he just naturally inherited this habit. Since he has been in pictures he has saved three-fourths of his money. He owns a twenty-five thousand dollar ranch, with his father, near Olathe. He has some beach lots in California.

People sometimes wonder why he lives so quietly on a side street in Los Angeles. He does it, primarily, of course, because he is with his college room-mate. We all look upon Mrs. Boggs as his California mother. Her home is like his own home, to Buddy. But his room and board only cost him eighteen dollars a week which gives him an opportunity to save most of his picture salary.

I suppose it was because Buddy was so busy making money that he didn't hang around the drug stores with other youngsters, or play in the streets after dark and that sort of thing. I don't mean by this he was a goody-goody. He wasn't. He played baseball in the vacant lots, got into scrapes, received his fair share of beatings, etc. But I cannot remember that he was ever in any way a "rowdy." They organized a boys' band. Buddy wanted a horn. We sent off thirty-nine dollars to get it for him. Thirty-nine dollars was a great deal of money in those days. He took lessons from the band master. This was the first time we learned that our boy was musical. A little later they organized a men's band. Buddy was the only one chosen from the boy's band for the men's organization. They paid him a dollar a week for sitting up there in the stand in his little short pants and playing with his elders! We were so proud of him. And he was more proud of that one dollar than the other nine added together.

The high school was only a half block from our house. This gave him time to get his shoes tied in the morning. About the only difference that high school made to Buddy.

Oh, yes, he did fall in love with one of his teachers. He took her around for two years. I'll never forget one of the dances. His father thought Buddy should be home studying instead of going to dances with a teacher. He forbade him to go. They slipped off and went anyway. His father caught him and gave him a good licking. But it didn't stop him from going to the next one. He often said this high school freshman experience trained him for going with older women. I only know of one other girl whom Buddy took places. And they had been pals from the cradle.

Geraldine, his sister, had had the leading part in the senior play. We were so afraid that Buddy wouldn't be leading man in his turn. We worried about it all during his senior year. And Buddy worried because he wanted to make us happy. When he got it—well, I don't need to describe how we felt about it!

It is hard for me to keep the tears from my eyes as I sit here and write about our little—boy, Buddy. There are times when I wish he were back here in Olathe running across the back lot to high school, tying his tie and waving his hand to me. There are times when I wish I could live over again those cold winter nights when I tramped half way across the state of Kansas to watch him play basketball for our little city. It was often hard—but, I never missed watching Buddy play a game. And now I am glad I didn't.

THE summer before he went to college he bought his drums. He learned to play them to the jazz records on our old family victrola. It never entered our heads that Buddy should go anywhere except to the University of Kansas. He would come home every week-end to us! He had been rushed for two years by the various fraternities. None of us influenced him in his choice. And when he took the Phi Psi we were happy because he was happy.

Buddy's drums put him through college. The second week he started sending home money for us to save for him. Here, I do think Buddy was a bit different from most boys. Instead of our sending him money, he sent it to us to put in the bank for him. But this meant that he had to play every Friday and Saturday night at a dance; that he couldn't come home to us Friday evenings. He bought a Ford for thirty dollars and would drive the thirty-six miles home after each Saturday evening's entertainment. That first year, he had just two dates with girls. And they were different young ladies. He was too busy to think about them. During his freshman year he saved two hundred dollars.

That summer a friend of his room-mate's offered the two boys a chance to go to Europe on a mule boat. "Nurse-maid to the donks" he called it. The boys were to feed and water and hay the animals, get their passage both ways and a dollar and a half a day for the nineteen days they were on the water.

We thought it a wonderful opportunity for him to see Europe. Naturally, we had no idea that in three or four years he would be making enough money in pictures to see it in another manner.

It was the first time he had been away from home. How we looked for his letters! He wrote often and told us all about his experiences. He had his two hundred dollars. We didn't give him a penny.

The boys had a glorious time. No matter how many times he goes, I don't think Buddy will ever get the same joy out of Europe as he did as a mule-tender.

They returned to New York via steerage. Buddy had picked up some extra money by playing in the cabarets of Spain, where they landed their donkeys. I remember he

Consolation

SINCE the friendship between Claire Windsor and Buddy Rogers was broken up by gossip, the lovely Claire has been consoling herself with the attentions of a young South American actor at the Fox Studios. Buddy, on the other hand, is very attentive to Mary Brian. But when the two meet by chance at parties they can usually be found having a tete-a-tete together in some quiet corner behind a rubber plant.

LUPE VELEZ is usually seen at the Mayfair dances on the arm of Tom Mix. And the other swains seldom ask for a dance because—well just look at Tom's right arm.

Just Pals

PHYLLIS HAVER, according to the usual formula, declares that she and Bert Lytell, who was not so long ago, the husband of Claire Windsor, are "just good pals." However, romantic Hollywood refuses to accept this as an explanation for the large and shining diamond which she wears upon her significant finger whenever she and Bert are out together. One guess is as good as another in this instance.

Just before his departure for Europe, on a vacation trip, Richard was very attentive to Marceline Day, which strengthened the rumors that an announcement of their engagement is likely to be forthcoming. Social season gets under way in Hollywood with brilliant Mayfair ball—celebrities go in disguise to the Carl Laemmles' circus frolic—Laura La Plante gives a "cat" party—Carmel Myers entertains at a buffet supper—and other social functions of the month in the film colony.

WITH five hundred or so of cinemaland's elite in attendance, brilliance was assured for the Mayfair dinner-dance given at the Biltmore. Magnificent gowns, lavish favors and unique decorations. One of the prettiest features was the "orange drop"—large cotton balls coated with orange dropping from the ceiling to be tossed about by the dancers.

Fred Niblo is president of the organization, to which no one is eligible without a year's experience in pictures to his credit. Charles Christie is vice-president. Irving Thalberg, secretary, and Mike Levee, treasurer.

The Irving Thalbergs (Norma Shearer) were guests of honor at a dinner for thirty-six given by Mr. and Mrs. Bernie Hyman—the occasion marking the first wedding anniversary of this popular young pair. After an amusing speech by Mike Levee, Polly Moran and Karl Dane came marching in, dressed as a comic bride and groom and put on a side-splitting vaudeville act.

Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Nagel were noted among the guests of the Antonio Morenos; Bessie Love was hostess to ten in honor of Texas Guinan, while in Lois Moran's party were thirty friends. Margaret Livingston entertained eighteen, Marceline Day twelve, and Tom Mix a group of six with lovely Billie Dove as honoree. Richard Barthelmess and his wife sat in a secluded corner with a select group of friends. Buster Collier beaued Louise Brooks and sparkling Bebe Daniels came with handsome Gary Cooper.

The climax of the evening was a dance contest—Enid Bennett Niblo, Texas Guinan and Luella Parsons being selected as judges. As may well be imagined, Tex's comments kept her table in roars of laughter. Finally, all but four couples were eliminated—Patsy Ruth Miller with Matty Kemp, Dorothy Sebastian with Gus Edwards and Clyde Cook and Lupino Lane with their respective partners.

Pretty little Sharon Lynn who came with Matty Kemp sat in a ringside seat and rooted for him while Patsy Ruth's escort, Walter Lohman, did the same for her. It was a hard-fought affair but at length Dorothy Sebastian and Gus Edwards were declared winners and presented with a—(no, you'll never guess!)—a diamond-studded, black, hot water bottle!

A LIVELY affair was the outdoor circus given in the beautiful grounds of the Beverly Hills home of the Laemmles. Senior and Junior Carl with Rosabelle were hosts and hostess. Rosabelle dressed as a little pony so far as jaunty brown ears, brown tights and tail, not to mention a tiny harness, could make her resemble one. Carl, Jr., made a swashbuckling Captain Kidd, and his father was made up as the manager of the show in a checked suit, derby hat, horse-shoe scarf pin and huge watch chain.

The big top was erected near the swimming pool and was all brightly lighted with tiny flags flying. And, as Glenn Tyron explained, you didn't have to hold your nose as all the animals were stuffed. The inimitable Glenn was garbed as a circus hand and his wife wore a switch as the bearded lady. Laura La Plante had been working so she came very late wearing the 1890 costume of her Show Boat "Magnolia."

Mervyn LeRoy dressed as the ringmaster and Arthur Lake as a bareback rider, tarlatan skirts and all, put on the funniest of burlesque tangoes and there was a grand march of the beautiful young actresses riding the camels and elephants while others walked. Carmel Myers made a hit by seizing a life-size pasteboard man from his sentinel position at the tent flap and walking him along.

Among the merry-makers were the George Lewises, Tullio Carminati, John Boles, Josephine Dunn, Barbara Kent, Edith Mayer, Walter Pidgeon and Patsy Ruth Miller.

ANOTHER exquisite opening has added to the laurels of Fred and Roy Millers' Carthay Circle Theatre. Fox's Mother Knows Best, starring Madge Bellamy, was the attraction with many added Movietone novelties, not to forget Carli Elinor and his concert orchestra.

Miss Bellamy, charming in a white cloud of ruffled tulle, was given an ovation by the hundreds of fans packed fifty deep for a block in front of the edifice. Her screen mother, Louise Dresser, was a member of her party and looked regal in a silver turban and a coat of scarlet chiffon and velvet. Diminutive Janet Gaynor was lost in a group of friends, Jason Robards and his fiancee, Agnes Lynch; Ona Brown, flashing a huge diamond, with her young Harvey Barnes, and charming Rosa Rudami, with her husband, John Fox, Jr. Youthful William Bakewell and Arthur Lake with their mothers. Barry Norton. A whole studio became a god-father to give Paul Guertzman, a waif of Paris, his chance at a career.

ADOPTED by the movies!—and with all the legal trimmings.

A couple of months ago this boy worked day and night washing prints in the dingy laboratories of a Parisian photographer. For three dollars a week.

Now one of the greatest powers in moviedom—Paramount-Famous-Lasky—stands morally committed to make a great star of him. Not only "a star"—but an outstanding one. Even if it must take years.

And though the boy spoke no English, he won all this from a movie baron who speaks nothing else!

Here's how it happened.

Jesse Lasky, Paramount executive, arrived in Paris—and of course the news broke in all the papers. A fifteen year old Russian refugee picked up one of the papers and read the news—and when he had read, he would not forget it.

For it had dropped into his mind like yeast into a prepared culture—and, similarly, it at once started to grow.

Paul Guertzman had always wanted to act. Once, it had been only one ambition among many. But for five years now, it had been the only one. Ever since he was ten. For a full third of his short life!

To act! . . . to act in the cinema . . . the American cinema . . . maybe some day to be the leading man for Clara Bow . . . to receive a kiss from Clara Bow!

But, no—that was to be an idiot! A fifteen-year-old boy, and small for his age—drudging for three dollars a week.

Flying High

Wallace Beery hunts mudhens in his Travelair — Reginald Denny flies to the mountains for week-ends—Janet Gaynor uses a plane to visit her sweetheart. Thrilling experiences of the stars who have taken to flying just for fun.

By DOROTHY WOOLDRIDGE

Jacqueline Logan hated aviation until she had to learn to fly for her role in "The Sky Raider." Now she simply won't come down to earth and she soon hopes to have a pilot's license.

A BIG-BONED and square-shouldered man wearing a pair of grease-smeared overalls which once had been white, approached the conductor of a Southern Pacific freight train on a siding in northern California not long ago and asked for a ride.

"My airplane just broke down," he said.

"Yeah?" queried the trainman, dubiously.

"Yep! Broke down over there in a field."

The conductor looked closely to see if there was any strange light in the wayfarer's eyes.

"Smashed my landing gear," the asserted aviator added.

"You did?"

"Knocked the tar out of it. I want to go after some repairs. Got to have a new landing gear. They use 'em on all good planes."

The train boss didn't warm up perceptibly to the fellow's tale. He appeared as though he might have just crawled from beneath a "tin lizzie" which had sprung a leak in the oil line or which simply had grown too weary and decrepit to proceed further.

"I'm Wallace Beery," the man continued. "I'm on the way to Montana to hunt sage hens."

"Wallace Beery, eh? Do tell? Well, I'm Calvin Coolidge—on the way to Seattle exercising my engine. Glad to meet you!"

"No, honest," he protested, "I'm Wallace Beery. Look here!"

Ruth Elder, the aviatrix who almost crossed the Atlantic, has done much to make flying a popular sport in Hollywood. All the young men are up in the air over Ruth.

From somewhere around his belt he flashed an official pilot's badge. In a nearby field really was his big Travelair ship, its whirlwind motor silenced and its landing gear twisted into something like a marcel wave.

It was the first and only time Wallace ever had made a forced landing. But there he was with the peak of old Shasta in the distance and just beyond it the hills where sage hens were calling. And Wallace wanted to get to them. In fact, he wanted to get anywhere away from

in Hollywood

Jean Harlow, Hal Roach comedy beauty, points out that the lesser weight, the better, holds true when it comes to flying, and proves it by posing in a costume which she thinks suitable for the occasion.

Ramon Novarro became interested in flying during the filming of his forthcoming picture, "The Flying Ensign," and now is considered one of the most promising pilots of the film colony.

that grain field. He managed to talk, bulldoze or bribe the conductor to take him along to the next city and before long was back repairing his crippled ship and presently he zoomed away in the air.

The motion picture folk are taking to flying like bees to red clover. Aviation clubs are forming. Individual planes are being acquired. Pilot licenses and student credits are being sought. Actresses are "going bugs" over the new method of locomotion, they admit, and monoplanes, bi-planes, whirlwind motors and like topics share conversation with "talking pictures."

Wallace Beery was one of the first to be given a pilot's license and unless chained to work he flies to his mountain cabin, 375 miles north of Hollywood, or to some other out-of-the-way place where he may be gloriously uncivilized and aloof. Beery Field, sixty-five miles north of Bishop, Cal., 7,500 feet above sea level—the highest airplane landing spot in the world, is named in his honor.

There's Ken Maynard, flying about in a Waco plane with an OX-5 motor. True to his whoopee nature, his craft is painted red with silver wings. Back in the stable, Tarzan, his "hoss," looks on as Ken gives the propellor a twist, climbs into the cockpit and sails blithely away. When the film colony sees some flashing, crimson-and-white object gone loco away up yonder where the clouds begin, they say—"There's Ken Maynard at it again!"

Although he does loops, spirals, autumn-leaves and all the other fool stunt things, he hasn't been bucked off or out yet. Ken flew from Hollywood to Cheyenne, Wyo., when his picture Cheyenne recently was filmed. Tarzan trailed behind on a railroad train.

BEBE DANIELS rode as a passenger in a Los Angeles-New York plane a few weeks ago and on her return set about promoting a close corporation to buy, immediately, a six-passenger ship at a cost of something like $3,000.

"Only $500 apiece!" explained Bebe. "Here's my five hundred; who's next?"

Robert Castle, her new leading man "came in" with his ante and then Matty Kemp.

"Room for just three more!" urged the dark-eyed actress.

Even as Bebe talked, a trim plane high in the sky soared toward the mountains.

"There goes Jeanie Macpherson!" someone shouted.

Audrey Ferris believes in learning aviation from the ground up and therefore spends much time at the Hollywood airports. In the above picture she is examining a giant Wright Whirlwind motor prior to taking off.

Jeanie is one of the few licensed women pilots in America. "Look at her hit the azure!"

Jeanie, celebrated scenarist for Cecil B. De Mille, began flying in 1921, with Eddie Rickenbacker, the war ace, and with Ernie Locklear, famous stunt aviator. Her first flight was in an old Curtis plane. She walked back one day—not the first time it ever was done by a young lady, but probably the first time as the result of an airplane ride.

Fog obscuring both mountains and sea forced a landing and she and her aviator hoofed it till they found a road and got a lift from a passing automobile.

I find that when the aviation bug bites, the victim is irretrievably sunk. Once the thrill of floating smoothly through the air is experienced, neither motor cars, yachts, ocean liners, nor saddle ponies, hold further interest. As well ride in a Japanese jinrikisha pulled by a coolie suffering from string-halt and the ague simultaneously. One never seems to get anywhere.

Take the the case of Jacqueline Logan: "Jackie" has a perfectly good automobile and a chauffeur who can spot speed cops a mile away. She got along very well with her brightly lacquered car until she went to New York to play in The Sky Raider and took a few flights at Roosevelt Field. Then it was all off between her and the motorcar—affections completely alienated.

Now the daring actress may be found at Rogers Field in Los Angeles, at every opportunity, taking flying lessons. She is accredited with six hours study under supervision of the government. When she has completed four more she will be eligible for examination and a pilot's license.

"And then," she exulted, "watch Jackie Logan get her own plane! I had the thrill of my life the other day when I made a nice landing at Rogers Field (only scraped the left wing a little), and my very prim and sedate instructor shouted 'atta girl, Jackie!' Prior to that he had always addressed me as 'Miss Logan.' That was real encouragement. I could have hugged him."

Sue Carol, 1928 baby star, is another who expects to own her own plane and join the gang in the air. Sue has the distinction (if such it be) of being the first screen girl to come down to earth in a crash. That was more than a year ago at Glendale, when The Cohens and Kellys in Paris was being filmed by Universal.

With Roy Wilson at the controls, something in the steering apparatus jammed as the ship was being brought to earth. The craft was well smashed up, but black-eyed Susan crawled from the cockpit only slightly bruised to begin kidding the pilot.

"You have the most peculiar way of playing leap-frog with your old houseboat," she declared. "Next time I go up with you I'll carry a pillow to sit upon as we descend. What do you think this is—a roller coaster?"

Patsy Ruth Miller also is among the actresses coveting and striving for a pilot's license. "Pat" has been a student for six months and has reached the point where she can take off without unroofing houses or tangling telephone wires. She can guide a craft correctly and bring it to a landing without plowing up a field. Which, to the beginner, is some accomplishment.

Down at San Diego, not long ago, while Johnny Mack Brown and Jeannette Loff with a supporting cast were making scenes for Annapolis, Barbara Hunter, one of the film editors at Pathe studio, climbed into the cockpit of an idling plane, suddenly opened the throttle and alone went roaring down the field at the naval base. The horrified spectators watched the ship bump and bounce along the terrain, the engine's exhaust growing in volume.

Wallace Beery thinks nothing of hopping off to Montana in his big Travelair plane to spend a week-end hunting the elusive sage hen. He was one of the first members of the film colony to go pleasure seeking among the clouds and now owns two planes.

"No one with her!" wailed Director Christy Cabanne.

BUT before the end of the field was reached, the plane took the air. Miss Hunter drove it skyward, banked, came back over the amazed group of watchers and for fifteen minutes gave a splendid exhibition of flying. Then she brought the ship down in a perfect landing.

"Shucks!" she said when she alighted, "I've had a pilot's license ever since the government started issuing them."

The young film editor is the envy of Gladys McConnell, Pathe's serial queen, who also expects to undergo examination before long for license to operate a plane. Gladys has made numerous flights to San Francisco and San Diego with one "hop" to Chicago. During the filming of The Tiger's Claw, recently, in which a thrilling air flight was featured, Miss McConnell spent part of the time manipulating the controls of one plane.

While Ruth Elder, the aviatrix who almost flew across the Atlantic, was playing the leading feminine role opposite Richard Dix in Moran of the Marines, for Paramount, the sky above Hollywood some days appeared to be an actress-playground. One afternoon in particular, in the air were Miss Elder, Patsy Ruth Miller, Jacqueline Logan, Sue Carol, Jeanie MacPherson and Gladys McConnell, all with pilots except Miss Elder and Miss MacPherson. They were joined before long by Reginald Denny, who owns five planes, and by Victor Fleming, who owns two.

Presently Ben Lyon arrived in his new ship and later Reed Howes came along to do a few stunts. What a party it was with half the film colony enviously looking on! Down in the Lasky studio, "Wally" Beery listened and looked upward like a hunter does when he hears the first calls of wild geese headed south in the fall.

Three of Reginald Denny's ships are British scout planes purchased from the government last year. These he rents to the different studios. Then he owns two Travelairs in which he zooms around all over the country. The Universal star has a cabin in the San Bernardino mountains, a half-day's drive by automobile over tortuous roads but which is only one hour by plane.

"That fellow Ben Lyon," Reginald remarked the other day, "came up to the cabin with me for a week-end. He decided after a bit he must return to Hollywood for something. I loaned him my plane, saw him circle a bit over San Bernardino, then go down. Out of gas. He made one of the most beautiful pancakes out of my ship I've ever seen. He had several cuts and bruises and wasn't any better off for the experience."

"That's nothing," said Ben, recalling the incident, "you should have seen what I did to my Waco plane during the national air meet at Mines Field. Thought it would be nice to fill the ship with flowers and drop them on the Breakfast Club where some illustrious aviators and officials were being feted. Which I did. They hit the roof like bullets from machine guns. Roscoe Turner, national air pilot, was with me. And then, trying to do a little fancy flying, I—but oh, why go into that! We landed in the Los Angeles river-bed with Roscoe delivering a brilliant oration about my skill with the stick. We were jammed up a little bit but not badly hurt."

This flying is just a lot of sport to the motion picture

MASK of the

Women were playthings to Irwin Reiner. It made no difference to him when the object of his desires was the sweetheart of his best friend. But he hid his passion beneath the face of an angel. Now in his friend's absence would he tear away his devil's mask and reveal his true purpose? It isn't too late to start this throbbing serial story of John Gilbert's latest film The Mask of the Devil. Read the story and then see the picture.

The garden party which Irwin Reiner gave for Virginia was the gayest ever known the time ripe to

In the beginning:

IRWIN REINER knew neither law nor convention where women were concerned. Handsome, talented, possessor of a large fortune, he brooked no obstacle to his philandering, which was the talk of all Vienna.

Yet no trace of Baron Reiner's evil desires showed in his face. He concealed them all beneath an expression of rare purity and innocence, a veritable Mask of the Devil.

In the studio of Count Palester, where he was posing for a painting of the Archangel Michael, Irwin renewed his romance with Countess Helene Zurmuhlen.

The Countess yielded to his tempestuous wooing and learned from him the true meaning of love. But as her ardour grew, the enthusiasm of Reiner waned, until at length he was seeking new conquests.

It was in a mood of boredom one day that he encountered his old school chum Manfred Dalcroze in a jeweler's shop, whither he had gone to buy a necklace for the Countess.

Manfred was in a daze of love. He was about to be married to a young girl from the country. He insisted that Irwin meet her.

Although totally uninterested, Irwin could not refuse. He even offered to give the betrothal dinner.

The night of the dinner arrived. Irwin looked forward to it with dread as a most stupid affair.

Suddenly Manfred entered the room bearing on his arm the most beautiful girl Irwin had ever seen.

"Baron Reiner," said Manfred, "I want you to meet my betrothed, Virginia Gessner."

Irwin scarcely knew what he was doing as he bent over her hand. From that moment forth, but one thought filled Irwin Reiner's heart. He would never be happy until he had won the love of Virginia Gessner.

After much scheming he contrived to dismiss Dalcroze from the scene by sending him upon an expedition to the South Seas which he had greatly desired to undertake.

Then he set out to win the heart of Virginia in her sweetheart's absence.

In the guise of a comforting friend, he found many opportunities to be by her side. Only by main force of will did he restrain himself from embracing her.

But as yet, Virginia Gessner showed no signs of returning his love.

in Vienna. Irwin thought rapidly as he watched her. Was speak of love?

THE weeks that followed strengthened Irwin Reiner's conviction that Virginia was the most desirable creature in the world. Indeed, since her advent into his libertine life, he no longer remembered that he had ever loved before. Unlimited wealth, fascinating and versatile mistresses, and the whole world for his playground, were suddenly as naught before the onslaught of this new passion.

He had long since ceased to feel twinges of remorse at the evil he was doing his best friend, Manfred Dalcroze, by gradually insinuating himself into the girl's companionship and trust. "All is fair in love"—he used to persuade himself; but now he no longer sought reassurance, for his conscience was numb with lust and flaming desire.

Irwin Reiner was accustomed to entertain lavishly; but the garden party given in honor of Virginia completely outdid anything ever known in Vienna. As if commanded by the imperious young Baron, the night itself was more beautiful than other nights—soft, cool, with the breath of a thousand roses in the air. The moon, like a great golden ball painted on dark velvet, shone softly through a lacy pattern of summer leaves, and gently touched ardent young couples who had stolen away to confess their unspoken love.

Musicians, picturesquely costumed, played haunting melodies until, their mood changing, they swung into the rollicking measures of a folk dance. Now gay young figures whirled and leapt to the familiar tune, while the crowd gathered about to watch. Little Fraulein Von Eltz, one of Reiner's discarded loves, led the dancers in graceful abandon, until she spun from the table into the waiting arms of a dashing young officer. Other women might pine away for Reiner's lost love—not she!

A great army of servants hurried through the throng with heavily laden trays of beer, champagne, cold roast fowls, pastries—every delicacy to tempt the palates of the most fastidious epicures.

Somewhat apart from the festive crowd, Frau Gessner, excessively animated and garishly overdressed, held the scowling Count Palester in her clutches. She was a happy woman now, for her dreams of a match between Irwin Reiner and her beautiful young daughter seemed to have materialized. Yet she wanted to make sure that it was not merely a hallucination born of her secret desires that gave her such confidence.

"Tell me," she probed with sly innocence—"why did Baron Reiner give this wonderful party in honor of Virginia?"

The Count turned on her savagely. "Because he is a damn fool, and he likes to throw away money like corn to pigs."

INDIGNANTLY the old frau snatched her hand from Palester's arm, and would have walked away had not another joined them. The newcomer was a busy little man with a very shiny head, thick-lensed glasses, and an incredulously long and cottony beard.

"Herr Haberblatz, the President of the Academy of Fine Arts," Count Palester said, presenting him to Frau Gessner, who immediately turned to him with exaggerated attention.

"Baron Reiner has so often spoken of you—" she gushed.

"How wonderful you are—your art—your—" she groped vaguely. Then, without further ado, she led the helpless man away, leaving Count Palester staring viciously after her.

"We must see the dancing!" she beamed on her new victim. And with a sentimental sigh she added, "Ah, Herr Haberblatz, when I was young—!"

"What a remarkable memory, Madame!" returned her escort with a stately bow.

Helene Zurmuhlen, too, was Reiner's guest. The weeks had wrought great changes in her formerly placid, cold expression. Now it held something infinitely tragic in its strange, restless palor. She passed through the crowd on the arm of her husband; but she walked like a woman alone. Her eyes searched desperately for a face—the face of the man who had taught her the meaning of love, only to abandon her to bitter memories.

Instinctively, as a man's arm brushed against hers in passing, Helene turned her head and looked straight into the eyes of Irwin Reiner. Count Zurmuhlen, unaware that she had paused, went on to join Palester.

"Irwin—oh, Irwin!" she cried passionately, clutching at his sleeve, and looking appealingly up at him. Recovering herself quickly, though obviously with great effort, she smiled and chided him lightly, "I haven't met Fraulein Gessner!"

Irwin read her intense suffering and unbalanced jealousy, and warned her with a look. He would hate Helene if by any false move she betrayed herself to Virginia.

The girl, unaware of the by-play, chattered happily to the Countess, who was quite the most beautiful woman she had ever seen. Helene controlled herself by sheer force of breaking will; but instinctively she recognized Virginia as the rival who had stolen Irvin Reiner from her—a mere child, too, unsophisticated in the moods of men, and entirely lacking in shrewdness.

Count Zurmuhlen, suddenly aware that his wife was no longer beside him, left Palester abruptly to join the little group. His greeting of Reiner was strangely formal in contrast to the unfeigned cordiality of their earlier meetings. Madly in love with Helene, he had been quick to suspect their liaison. Zurmuhlen would be a dangerous enemy, a man capable of tremendous, almost saturnine, force and passionate emotions. But as yet he had no definite grounds for defying the young baron.

Only Palester, still standing apart from the little group, realized how closely four persons stood on the brink of a great tragedy.

"Virginia!" he said, pleadingly, "Forgive me for what I have done!" was breaking. In a moment she would

THE passionate interlude with Irwin Reiner had left the little dancer fortunately without serious damage to her heart. Perhaps, as he, she loved lightly for the moment, and as quickly forgot . . . It was more mischief than malice, then, that caused her to maneuver the bustling Frau Gessner and her new victim toward Reiner and his friends.

"Here you are!" exclaimed the worthy frau coquettishly to her host as she came unexpectedly upon the constrained group. "May I present Herr Haberblatz, the President of the Academy of Fine Arts?"

The little man bowed energetically to the women before he clasped Reiner's hand and replied cordially, "It was kind of you to let Herr Snitzler bring me. I have long waited to meet you!"

It was an embarrassing moment for Irwin Reiner. Three pairs of feminine eyes reproached him for his lies. How often had he told each one that he was "in conference" with this same Herr Haberblatz! But the young scoundrel was not one to lose his poise for more than a fleeting second. Apparently unaware of his precarious position, he turned casually to Virginia. "We were on our way to watch the dancers," he remarked, holding out an arm, which she reluctantly took.

As they moved away, Helene took a betraying step forward. She must stop him—talk to him, make him explain! But as she started to follow her faithless lover, she felt her husband's powerful fingers grip her wrist cruelly.

"Be careful, Helene!" Zurmuhlen warned her, looking squarely into her eyes. Forcing her to take his arm, he led her away in the opposite direction from that taken by Reiner and Virginia.

Silently the young baron led the girl to a secluded arbor. The enchantment of the perfect night was upon them both. Some distance away the dancers leapt like winged things, and the musicians played muted melodies. Beyond was the moon, that great friend of young lovers and poets. Virginia's eyes filled with tears of wonder—it was all too beautiful. One of her soft, small hands crept to her bosom as if to still the ardent beating of her heart.

He could feel that her resistance be in tears.

Irwin Reiner watched her with eyes that caressed each exquisite curve of her young body—her lovely head, poised like a flower; the slim whiteness of her throat; the firm curve of her girlish breasts. He had burned to be alone with her; but now he could scarcely enjoy the golden moment for having constantly to fight to hold his emotions in leash. Sometimes he almost hated her for raising invisible barriers against his passion; again, he worshiped her with an ardor he had never known before.

With an effort he spoke. "You are unhappy because Manfred has forgotten you."

The spell was shattered. Virginia faced him defiantly. "I refuse to believe he has forgotten me! Oh, Irwin, I'm afraid he is ill—I fear that far away in that great lost world he needs me and is longing for me!"

REINER shook his head pityingly. "Poor child," he replied, "I'm sorry. Now you will have to turn to me for love—love that has become worship."

"You don't love me any more!" accused the Countess Helene, kissing him passionately. "Please, Helene," replied Irwin, "You are only making it harder for both of us. Let us have no tears, no grief or hysteria to mar our perfect memories."

Her eyes were suddenly very frightened. With a gesture almost pleading, she laid a hand upon his arm. "Please, Irwin, understand that at a time like this I need friends."

"And I am your friend, Virginia," he told her passionately. "I need friends, too—I am lonely. I can scarcely believe that you have given friendship to me—you who are so beautiful, so adorable—the loveliest creature I have ever known!"

"Please—!" she tried to protest. But the fervor of his passion held her in its spell. A secret fire within her began to kindle. She was gradually conscious of rapturous longings of which she had never dreamed before. Half pleading, half yielding, she searched his face with her questioning eyes.

In a mad moment Irwin Reiner seized her in his arms and crushed her to him in a passionate embrace. But before his eager lips could touch hers, Virginia, aroused by terror and fury, struggled free.

"You—you despicable cad! Oh, and to think that I believed you were Manfred's friend—and mine!"

IRWIN realized his great mistake. "Virginia, don't leave me before you have forgiven me!" he begged. "I don't know why I did that—I stand shamefaced before you. I despise myself for the blackguard that I am." His voice rang sincerely. Virginia paused, held by the very violence of his self-denunciation. "Yes, what a Judas I am!" he continued vehemently, quite satisfied with the effect he was creating. "Manfred's friend! Your friend, whom you trusted and believed."

Virginia involuntarily drew nearer to him, seeing him no longer as a scoundrel, but as a tragic and appealing figure. She made a gesture as if to stop his cruel denunciations.

"I have no right to see you again," he continued. "I dare not ask your forgiveness." Humble, he stood before her. He knew he was forgiven in the quiet, pitying look she turned on him now; for what woman does not forgive a man for loving her too much, even though he has not the right to confess it?

Chokingly he spoke again. "Go, Virginia. Leave me here—alone—with my bitter repentance."

Slowly, almost reluctantly, she left.

When she had gone, Irwin Reiner's melancholy pose dropped from him like a cloak. His eyes, but a moment before filled with infinite sadness, were now brimming with laughter and triumph.

"God, how amusing!" he muttered. "What an actor I would make! All the world would then acclaim my genius! Poor child—and she believed me . . . "

Carelessly he lighted a cigarette. He was conscious of a warm glow of contentment. Life was amusing and easy; love was the most delightful thing in the world.

He suddenly listened intently. Surely he was not mistaken; footsteps were rapidly approaching on the gravel walk—footsteps of a woman . . Virginia? . . He hoped so fervently as he quickly threw away his cigarette and com-

HARRY CARR

Harry Carr

There is no one writing about the movies today who has a better background than Harry Carr. He has been associated with the business of picture making in one capacity or another since the days when he was D. W. Griffith's right hand man at the old New York studio. He has written hundreds of magazine and newspaper articles about the movies and has received screen credit for such masterpieces as Old Ironsides, The Wedding March and The Divine Lady. His comments about the movies appear exclusively in SCREEN SECRETS among the fan publications.

THE reformed and remodeled Eric Von Stroheim doesn't seem to be so much different, when you get right down to it, from the fascinating old version.

When Von started to make a picture with Gloria Swanson, we were assured by the people at the F. B. O. studio that he was a changed man. He now kept just one half tick ahead of the clock; his formerly wild and unrestrained scenarios were just the right length and breadth. He and Gloria agreed like two turtle doves on every little tiny, minute and microscopic point, and they would start the picture at eleven minutes past nine o'clock on the morning of September 3.

Weeks afterward, as this is written, they kinda feel they might get started in six weeks from now—merely a few months after the original starting date—if they can get the story cut down.

Three great geniuses besides Von himself are trying to cut down the story—Paul Bern, William Le Barron and Benjamin Glazier. They are still reported to be in the midst of a heated discussion as to whether the story is now ten reels or twelve reels long.

The Leopard's Spots

VON will always be just the same. I think he is one of the greatest directors and greatest story writers the screen has ever known—or is ever likely to know; but time and distance just don't mean a darn thing in his life.

The Jinx

A CURIOUS jinx follows the actresses that appear in Von Stroheim pictures.

You would think that Miss Dupont, Maude George, Zasu Pitts would be made for life by the gorgeous screen work they have done in Von Stroheim pictures. As a matter of fact, it works out just the other way.

Miss Dupont was starved out of pictures altogether after Blind Husbands. Maude George all but starves literally between Von Stroheim pictures; Zasu Pitts has been without work for almost a year after The Wedding March. Nobody would give Harry Reinhardt a part after Von used him, and he was forced into the writing business.

Little Girl No Longer

MARY PICKFORD will never do any little girl parts again.

My Best Girl was one of the biggest box-office knockouts of her career; so she is going to go out on the crest of the wave.

But I doubt not that she feels more than a little wistful sorrow in bidding goodbye forever to this other self of hers—this little shadow person of the rags and tags.

Broke Mary's Heart

CURIOUSLY enough, it was Mary's little-boyish legs that enabled her to play these parts so long. She tells me that it was her legs that, in another mood, changed the course of her career.

One day we were looking at an old Biograph Picture made in the pioneer days of the movies. When the studio was on Fourteenth street, New York; and Griffith was just breaking in as a director.

Comments

Will Von Stroheim change his spots?—What they said about Mary Pickford's legs—A bed and a good cigar is all I need, declares Lubitsch.

In this picture, Mary was playing the part of a royal page—all dressed up in doublet and hose; she was as fat as a little quail. "That picture," said Mary, "broke my heart. We were acting on location. I thought I was eclipsing the genius of Sarah Bernhardt when there came to my ears the scornful voice of a boy who was looking on. 'Pipe the girl with the piano legs,' he said.' "

Cashing In

IF THEIR threats come true, several well-known figures of Hollywood fame are soon to cash in and walk out. Ernst Lubitsch, the German director, says that he will never sign another contract—after the expiration of this one.

"All that money is good for," says Ernst, "is to enable one to tell people to go to hell. Nobody needs much money to live on. A bed and a good cigar are all that I need. I have all the money I will ever need in this world. After I retire, I will probably make a picture once in a while; but I will make it my own way."

Greta's Curls

ALL Hollywood turned out to the October session of the grand opera; and the beauteous Jeritza hobnobbed with all the movie stars. My flapper friends came home in desolation from the rare experience of seeing Greta Garbo out in society; she who never is known to "mingle." They came home weeping. She had funny little cork screw curls; and she looked—so they said—as though she had slept in her dress.

Exit Van Dine

S. S. VAN DINE—author of the murder mystery stories being filmed in the Paramount Studio—is another child of fortune about to cash in and quit.

S. S. Van Dine is really Willard Huntington Wright. He used to be a half-starved art critic. In two years, his murder mystery novels have made him rich. Paramount paid him $55,000 for the movie rights of the Canary Murder; and one of the big magazines has paid him $75,000 for the rights of a new and fresh killing. He says that he will never write another murder thriller. When he cashes in the chips for this one, he is going to let S. S. Van Dine die and Willard Huntington Wright will take up the pen again; and tell some old painter who has been dead for two centuries how he got his colors mixed.

Aileen Pringle is going to play in those throbbing sex pictures with the Glynish touch to them once more. And they fit the real Pringle personality like a steam coil in an ice box, Harry Carr says.

Ramon Novarro

RAMON NOVARRO has signed the most extraordinary contract that has fallen to the lot of any movie star.

I Want to

Doris Kenyon has everything in the way of a happy home life her heart could desire. Yet she is returning to the screen, seeking a career of her own—under her own name. You'll want to know why. Here is the story of every modern woman's yearning.

Doris Kenyon is a sportswoman as well as a good sport. To the right she is getting one of those telephone calls that come in at any hour of the day or night when Milton is on location.

A HOME which is one of the exhibition places of Southern California.

Six acres of ground—a veritable fairyland of tropical horticulture.

Tennis courts, a recreation house, tea gardens.

A corps of nine servants.

A seventeen-month-old baby, healthy and happy.

A husband who is a learned scientist, philosopher, speaker and a star in motion pictures.

All of this—the fulfillment of the air-castle dreams of most women—belongs to one dainty, blonde lady.

Yet Doris Kenyon is not content. She is waging a battle as important to her as the bread and butter struggle is to the average, every-day woman.

She is fighting for individuality, success, a definite place in the scheme of existence which shall establish her not as Mrs. Milton Sills, but as Miss Doris Kenyon.

"I don't want to be an Alice-Sit-By-The-Fire!" Her eyes, blue as the first glimpse of a high-mountain lake, kindled sparks as she told us about it.

"I want to create my own little world-corner.

"It would be easy with all this—" her arm indicated with one nonchalant sweep the luxury about her—"to sit down and imagine I am happy.

"It would be convenient to become just a graceful background for my husband.

"It would be comfortable to become just a mother for our beautiful baby.

"I was glad, two months ago, when First National left-handedly fired me.

"My contract called for a raise of $750. They wouldn't pay it. I wasn't worth it.

"But they did suggest I come back for four pictures.

" 'Who with?' I inquired.

" 'At least two will be with your husband," they answered.

"I didn't even wish to talk about it I was through playing on the screen with my husband.

IN ONE year I had done The Valley of The Giants, Burning Daylight and The Hawk's Nest with Milton, and not one picture with anyone else. The days of Mrs. Milton Sills supporting Mr. Milton Sills were over.

"Free lancing did seem appalling at first glance. I had to secure an agent—a press agent. It did seem sort of foolish running around asking strange men to secure me positions when I didn't actually need them. One agent said, 'The producers may think they should give the work to someone who has to have it.'

" 'But if I can act, what does that matter?' I answered.

be Free! Doris Kenyon

RUTH BIERY

Kenyon Sills is a frequent visitor to the studios of Hollywood when his parents are working. Above, his mother is taking Kenyon to pay a visit to his daddy at the First National Studio.

And I wanted to add that money isn't the only gauge for women who actually need positions.

"The Talkies have been my salvation.

"Jack Warner prepared a list of the screen people with stage experience. He noted my five years on Broadway and sent for me to take a Vitaphone test.

"Have you ever been on a Vitaphone stage?

"I was scared to death! It's a sound-proof room so well padded that you can hear your heart ticking. The cameras are behind windows where you can't see them. Instead of thinking camera angles, you keep your mind on microphone angles.

"It's exactly like talking on the radio, only the microphones are hidden. Behind a picture, over the fireplace —anywhere but in front of your mouth where you'd think it was necessary to have them.

"High above you hangs a man in a glass cage. The prop boys and electricians call him 'God.'

"What he says goes even over the advice of the director. He's the keeper of the microphones.

"He looks like a mute hanging up there making silent signals. One gesture means 'Have Kenyon speak louder;' another 'Have her soften.'

"The greatest difficulty is not to speak or to answer another who has spoken, too quickly. The camera is slower than the microphone; the ear is quicker than the vision. The audience will hear you before they can see you.

"My test was a success! My voice chanced to register and has given me my real break at finding my own corner. It looks as though I would go from one picture directly to another. I finished The Home Towners for Warners on Sunday and started Interference with Evelyn Brent for Paramount on Monday. Isn't it wonderful that I've been so lucky?"

I COULD so adequately play the role of a sweet, lovely woman."

She paused, drew a deep breath from the innermost recesses of her nature.

"But I'll be darned if I'll become just a background for any man in existence.

"I'll die before I'll become just a good housewife and fuss-over-the-baby

A Preview of The Iron Mask

ONE for all and all for one! The cry of the three musketeers rings out once more as Douglas Fairbanks returns to his favorite character, D'Artagnan, for what may be his last appearance on the screen.

All the acrobatic feats, all the sword play, all the swashbuckling, which made The Three Musketeers one of the most notable pictures ever screened, are to be found in this pretentious sequel, The Iron Mask.

The scheming Cardinal Richelieu secretly supplants King Louis XIII, on the throne of France with his twin brother, forcing the real king to wear an iron mask.

But D'Artagnan discovers the plot and with his three boon companions sets out to restore the rightful king to his throne, and their adventures begin.

The production is filmed on a lavish scale with every detail of the period faithfully reproduced by the world's greatest authority on Seventeenth Century France.

Marguerite de la Motte who played opposite Fairbanks in The Three Musketeers, again plays the lead in The Iron Mask. Many other members of the cast have also been retained for the sequel.

Although Doug is not so young as he once was, he has lost none of his youthful suppleness and athletic prowess.

Talking sequences will be employed in a novel and striking manner.—United Artists.

A Preview of King of the Mountain

THE superb acting of John Barrymore—the blonde beauty of the fair Camilla Horn—the masterful direction of Ernst Lubitsch and all the glory of the Alps as a scenic setting—how could such a combination fail to produce one of the notable pictures of the year?

Such is the array of talent assembled for The King of the Mountains. It is a dramatic story of thwarted love in a picturesque mountain village of Switzerland.

Barrymore plays the part of Martin, a harum-skarum mountaineer who is the hero of the region. He is in love with Ciglia, a beautiful villager, but has difficulty in domesticating his wild habits of life in accordance with her wishes. Their love is further complicated by the attentions of a wealthy burgher, Victor Varconi, who offers Ciglia a home and security, and by the passion of Pia, a mountain girl, who seeks Martin for her lover.

There is a whirlwind finish to the picture when the lovers, lost on the mountainside are caught in the path of a thundering avalanche.

The picture brings to the screen a new face in the person of Mona Rica, who plays the part of Pia. She is a Mexican beauty who was taken from the ranks of the extras to play her first important role.

It is doubtful if another picture of the year will have such an attractive scenic background. The unusual peasant costumes give the illusion of a world of romance. And always in the background, solemn and majestic, playing their silent roles, are the mountains.

The entire company was transported to the impressive peaks of the Canadian Rockies, to give the picture an authentic setting.—United Artists.

Charles Murray learns that his officer's badge doesn't get the proper respect from some women folks.

BRASS BUTTONS

Charlie Murray becomes a hero when he hears the call, Do Your Duty.

SO Charlie Murray has become a star. This is his first starring picture and Charlie does well by it. He wears a star on his blue coat, too, for he is a sturdy upholder of the law.

But he still needs a partner in his connivings and the partner is Lucien Littlefield, who plays the part of a Scotch tailor.

The situation is reminiscent of The Last Laugh. After being on the force twenty years, Charlie is forced out of his job by the machinations of a crooked gang. He is unable to come back and face his family without the uniform, so with the aid of his Scotch tailor he cooks up a scheme to fool the folks with a rented suit.

All ends well when Charlie rounds up the crooks and wins the right to wear the uniform which he has been wearing anyway.

The picture is a combination of sad and comic drama, winding up with a fast finish of uproarious farce.

Murray is consistently entertaining and builds up good comedy scenes, especially at the point where he tries to spend a quiet evening at home in the bosom of one of the noisiest families in the world.—First National.

LOVE STARVED

This picture of the life and thwarted loves of a vaudeville star makes it seem doubtful whether Mother Knows Best.

AND here is another miracle of Hollywood. Madge Bellamy, who was headed for the discard a year ago, so everybody said, is making one of the best pictures of the year.

Madge has bobbed her hair and her temperament and is making everybody happy, especially the holders of the purse strings at the Fox Studios.

She plays the part of a very famous vaudeville star, who, it is whispered, is really none other than Elsie Janis.

This vaudeville star is in love with a song writer, the lyrical lad being Barry Norton. But like so many other girls, she has a mother. A watchful mother who believes a career on the stage is worth two in a penniless song writer's kitchen. Louise Dresser is the mother who comes between them. And she does it so well that you would really like to take her aside and have a heart to heart talk with her.

And Madge gives impersonations of the vaudeville star impersonating famous people. You might even think that was actually Harry Lauder if the knees were a little knobbier. Furthermore, she does some really accomplished singing.

It is a splendid picture except for the fact that there is this talkie craze. And the whole drama must stand still in the last reel while they do enough speaking so they can really call it a talking picture.—Fox.

Barry Norton makes violent love to Madge Bellamy.

THE WOMAN IN HIS PAST

A dark woman threatens to expose His Private Life.

ADOLPHE MENJOU is in love with his wife! Can you imagine that? What are pictures coming to, anyway? But she's only his wife off the screen, so that makes it all right.

The Satanic sophisticate returns to Paris, where he was married not so many months ago, for the locale of his latest picture. And Kathryn Carver did not take his name in vain, for she plays in the picture with him.

It is a story that couldn't happen anywhere else but Paris. The elegant Adolphe is up to no good as usual at the opening of the picture but at last, in Kathryn Carver he find the girl he wants to do right by.

But it is not so simple as they make it seem in the melodramas. His past comes up to haunt him in the person of a dark woman in his life, who keeps popping into the light. The dark woman is Margaret Livingston, who seems to be the only remaining vampire on the screen.

Complications follow thick and fast and there is much dashing in and out of bedrooms and hiding behind doors before Adolphe finally persuades the fair Kathryn that his intentions are honest.

The picture also marks the first appearance of Paul Guertzman, the waif who dogged Jesse Lasky's footsteps in Paris until he persuaded the Paramount executive to bring him to Hollywood. Guertzman shows great promise as a juvenile comedian.—Paramount.

Adolphe Menjou seeks to persuade Kathryn Carver of his innocence.

Edmund Lowe rescues Corinne Griffith from the streets.

GIRL OF THE STREETS

Corinne Griffith is The Outcast who makes Edmund Lowe fall in love with her in spite of her striped shirtwaists.

NO QUESTION about it, the movies are getting tough. A hero isn't worthy of the name unless he talks out of the corner of his mouth and shoots from the hip, and no heroine is a finished actress until she has donned a striped shirtwaist and shaken her hips in a honky-tonk.

And who has fallen a victim to the craze but the exquisite and impeccable Corinne Griffith, who has always been stately and dignified on the screen.

Corinne is a waif of the streets, whose skirts would be trailing in the dust if they were long enough. A waif with a yearning for higher things.

She falls in love with Edmund Lowe, a disillusioned gent of the upper crust, and they take turns uplifting each other from their fallen ways.

And just when everything seems to running smoothly, along comes Kathryn Carver in the role of a stony-hearted debutante who snatches Lowe away from Corinne. Which proves that virtue is its own reward or something like that.

But Corinne is beginning to do some real acting and with this picture following on the heels of The Divine Lady, one of her finest roles, the fair Corinne seems embarked at last on the career on which she should have been started long ago.—First National.

HERE COMES THE GROOM

You can hear the funeral march of love beneath the strains of The Wedding March.

THIS is what is left of Eric Von Stroheim's great screen classic that was to have run two nights in succession—some twelve reels of film carved out of thirty-odd.

Chances are you won't like it. There are too many scenes that are revolting in their realism—scenes in slaughter houses—unlovely orgies where beautiful damsels do not leap out of Easter eggs on banquet tables.

The hero is not nice. He spurns his true love to marry for money. What graver charges can be preferred against him? Nor is his mamma nice, with her lifted face and lofty ideas of money. Nor his dissolute pappa. In fact none of them are nice except Fay Wray, the peasant girl, and Zazu Pitts, the cripple, and both get a dirty deal.

And even as unhappy endings go, the ending is most unhappy. Especially for picture goers who like things decided definitely one way or the other. It doesn't get you anywhere, you'll say.

But if you like perfect acting for its own sake—if you like to see little bits of characterization well done—you'll find them here. If you like pageantry, pomp and ceremony in all its splendor enhanced by the sound of choral voices, you'll find it here. You'll even find scenes of romantic beauty.

Fay Wray will wring your heart. She proves herself capable of emotional acting of the highest quality. You'll even find yourself feeling sorry for Von Stroheim in spite of the things he does. And Maude George, George Fawcett, and Zazu Pitts are perfect.—Paramount.

Eric Von Stroheim greets his bride, Zazu Pitts, as the wedding march is over.

Estelle Taylor protects Gardner James from the bully, Ralph Ince.

ON THE HIGH SEAS

ESTELLE TAYLOR made this picture just before she shook Hollywood from her heels to appear with her distinguished husband, Jack Dempsey, on Broadway, in The Big Fight.

It will probably be the last silent picture in which she will appear, for from now on, as soon as Estelle returns, the producers will be making use of her excellent stage voice for the talkies.

In this one, Estelle is a girl named Daisy, one of Broadway's broken blossoms, who goes out in search of bigger and better things on the good ship Singapore.

She finds them in the shape of Gardner James, a young stowaway with a hungry look in his eye that matches the hungry feeling under his belt.

Then, of course, there's the bully, none other than Ralph Ince, who also directs the picture when he isn't busy going around sticking out his jaw at people.

The bully takes a personal interest in Daisy, which is not returned and one thing leads to another until there is a terrific storm at sea, very neatly staged, which lands them all adrift on the briny.

Everybody knows what should happen in a situation like this. But it doesn't. The story takes a different twist to a dramatic finish.

entertainment. Brief additional reviews will be found on page 91.

Renee Adoree tries to persuade Alan Hale, the spieler, into the ways of honesty.

IN THE NEXT TENT, FOLKS

Alan Hale is The Spieler with a heart of gold beneath his checkered vest.

NOW there's a rage for carnival pictures, all about the lives of street fair folk who run those Kewpie doll and Indian blanket games and other come-on rackets.

First there was The Barker, with Milton Sills doing the barking. Now there's The Spieler, with Alan Hale doing the spieling.

But this one is all about a girl who, believe it or not, tries to run a carnival on an honest basis. The girl is Renee Adoree, who grew up in the show business herself and knows how a carnival girl should act.

Alan Hale is the lad who stands outside the tent and lures the suckers to part with a dime, one thin dime, the tenth part of a dollar, to gaze on the wonders inside.

He has been a slicker all his life but he falls under the spell of his girl boss and for the first time decides to give the honesty racket a whirl.

And when the paths of righteousness happen to coincide with the alluring charms of the girl boss, how could any warm-hearted con man resist such an appeal to his better nature?

But there is the menace, in the shape of Fred Kohler, than whom there is no greater threat, standing in the way of these honest goings-on with his wily band of crooks.

Clyde Cook appears in a small part that makes you want to see more of him.

It's a good, rich, racy picture, with lots of color and life that has set people talking even though it isn't a talking picture.—Pathe.

AFRICAN HEEBY JEEBIES

Lon Chaney in a new disguise spreads terror West of Zanzibar.

LON CHANEY is at it again. He has been a plausible human being a little too long. He can't stand the strain, so he has started turning into things once more.

It all happens somewhere west of Zanzibar, which is a distant cousin of Africa. Now try and find it on the map. Lon is a magician. He would be. Life is rosy until his wife, who is also his assistant, runs away with a lover. As a parting shot, the lover throws him over a balcony and cripples him for life.

Then Lon sets out to have his revenge and the story begins. He gets mixed up with black men and blacker magic. Then he devises the scheme of using his wife's child for his revenge upon the lover.

The child is Mary Nolan who grows up as the picture goes on and all the mud of Africa or Zanzibar cannot obscure her blonde beauty.

Lionel Barrymore plays the lover in his most suave and blackguardly manner.

But it is none other than Warner Baxter who steps in at the last possible moment to rescue the beautiful Mary from a fate worse, oh, far worse, than death.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Mary Nolan embracing Warner Baxter, pleads with Lon Chaney in the wheel chair.

Resolved

Nancy Carroll is going to fight the temptation of over-sleeping during the coming year. And what a fight it will be in this downy nest of lace and satin.

Clara Bow is going to adhere to her gym workouts regularly for the next twelve months. She isn't taking any chances on becoming more than pleasingly plump.

A fellow may as well make a book full of resolutions, claims Buster Keaton. Then there will be a good chance of his not breaking some of them.

Mother Knows Best Causes Comment—"Tex" is Back—Pearl White Still Gambling—Plays to the Cleaners—and other late news from Broadway.

By ARTHUR W. EDDY
SCREEN SECRETS New York Correspondent

WHEN Mother Knows Best opened recently on Broadway, it caused a buzz of comment, partly because of the sensational come-back of Madge Bellamy, but chiefly because it set picture-goers wondering whether the film, which deals with the life and loves of a vaudeville star, is in reality the life story of Elsie Janis.

It is said that Elsie Janis and her mother protested strenuously against the film because it showed such a remarkable parallel to their own lives and even threatened to get out an injunction to stop its production. However, the picture is running merrily on, piling up one of the big box office records of the year.

The story of the picture is that of an ambitious mother, who sacrifices everything for her daughter's stage career. When the daughter really falls in love, and wishes to drop her career for romance, the mother steps in without hesitation. Madge Bellamy gives a touching portrayal of the vaudeville star, while Louise Dresser does remarkable character work as the mother. It is said that Miss Dresser

ANITA'S naughty look is merely part of her instinct as an actress. She's a blonde in hair and temperament with not a brunette impulse in her lithesome body.

An Eight O'clock Gal

Anita Page proves that this rare species can and does exist in the land of the midnight industry.

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

EIGHT months ago she was Anita Pomares, motion picture aspirant.

Today, she is Anita Page, making her fifth picture under the sign of Leo, growling lion of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

She is a dazzling blonde. A radiant beauty of the kind that suspends all action when she enters a restaurant. The kind of violet, wide-eyed loveliness that halts forks in mid-air and makes ladies hastily remind gentlemen of their bald heads and paunches.

And she has only been to Montmartre Cafe, that gay gathering place for film celebrities, once, or was it twice?

"How many times was it, Mother? Once at noon, I know. But did I ever go in the evening?" a gentle frown creased a white brow.

"I'm not sure, dear. But surely you can remember."

"Maybe it was twice. Really, I'm not sure. But we've been to the Cocoanut Grove.

"And the Biltmore," mother hastily amended.

They barge about together. Mother Pomares, who helps Anita answer her fan mail; Poppa Pomares, an electrical engineer, a Rotarian, a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Queens, New York; and Marino, aged five, a brother.

Anita Page with Nils Asther and Dorothy Sebastian in the drunken scene from "Dancing Daughters" which stamped her as one of the most promising of the younger actresses.

NOT only that. They help Anita with her scenes. She brings home her script and sometimes Poppa Pomares plays the lover, or oft as not he is the slinking villain. And mother is anything from flapper sister to shrinking little old grandmother. Marino—well, Marino can be dapper man-about-town or ancient lodge-keeper, at will.

Marino, you will find, is really the star of the family.

"He complained to mother the other day that she wasn't buying him enough toys," said Anita, a picture no artist could taint, in red fox fur and peach woolen coat. "'I'm going out and make some money myself and buy lots and lots of toys,' he told her. Then we all asked him what he would do. 'I'm going in pictures, too!' And he showed us just how he would act." Anita's eyes twinkled across the table into her mother's, in fond memory.

"But tell what happened then—" prompted mother.

"He looked at us and said, 'Now, I'll give you my sexy look!'"

"We can't imagine where he learned that," they sighed in resigned accord.

Anita is a natural blonde in both hair and instincts. No distressing complexes. No "brunette soul in a blonde body." Poppa and Momma Pomares have seen to that.

She's an'eight-o'clock girl in a midnight industry. That's the hour she retires when she is working in a picture.

"But don't you long to dance . . . to party?"

"Oh, I love to dance!" pausing over corn saute. She eats it every noon. That, and Brown Betty pudding. "But I always get sleepy at eleven-thirty, so I don't care much about late parties."

Mother nodded confirmation.

THIS is the blonde emotional tornado who battled Joan Crawford for acting honors in Dancing Daughters. It was her second picture. Telling the World, with Bill Haines was the first. Back in Flushing, Long Island, where Anita was born, Bill was her favorite motion picture actor. Her first role in a feature-length picture was opposite him. That's what you call the luck of the Spanish. A distant forebear on father's side used to click the castanets in dear old Andalusia.

In Dancing Daughters there are two scenes that bring spontaneous applause. The first is where Johnny Mack Brown is introduced as "Ben Blaine of Birmingham, the best halfback Alabama ever had." The football fans give Johnny Mack a hand for his pigskin prowess. It was his when Hollywood made its touchdown.

The second burst of applause is for Anita when she tumbles to her death after a superb drunken scene. One of the high lights of the picture.

"Mother was teaching me how to smoke last night," said Anita, snaring a wary raisin. She's now playing a show girl in Broadway Melody, her first talkie.

"She didn't know at all how to handle a cigarette," mother added.

In the drunken scene in Dancing Daughters, Anita plays an emotional scene that many experienced actresses would fear to attempt. Plays it with a surety born either of supreme experience or beautiful ignorance. And it is not the former. She is one of those rare gifts to the screen, a natural actress. Critics say she is one of the year's two acting sensations.

"Have you always wanted to be an actress, Anita?"

"Always. Even in school."

"But we didn't want her to, you know," said Anita's mamma, shaking her head, gently, in faint disapproval.

"Oh, but mother! afterwards you said you did!"

NIZE BABY in Film-land

Their First

Sue Carol was embarrassed to death—Estelle Taylor felt as though she were kissing a hair mattress—and other osculatory reminiscences of the stars.

By GRACE SIMPSON

Gloria Swanson is teaching what she has learned about screen kisses to John Boles, who is an eager pupil.

Charles Farrell and Dorothy Revier are setting a new long distance record for kissing without coming up for air in this scene from "The Red Dance."

ONE of the thousand reasons the feminine fans mention in their letters to the stars of the screen for envying them is their opportunity for being kissed by the handsome film Romeos. To play amorous scenes with Ronald Colman or Gilbert Roland or the magnificent Jack Gilbert!

"You really don't appreciate the gifts the gods have bestowed upon you," one ecstatic young lady down South once wrote to Patsy Ruth Miller, commenting upon Patsy's printed statement that she didn't get much of a thrill out of her silver-sheet kisses.

Well, the truth of the matter is that there are many others just lik Patsy. Those interesting little scenes of lip pressure—culminating in that joyous wiggling of feminine fingers behind the stalwart masculine back—are "just business" to them.

What many fans do not stop to consider is that the making of a picture is as different from seeing it as cooking a dinner is from eating it. When you sit in the dark showhouse, your senses lulled by soft music, and your imagination carried away by the tender story and the beautiful, ever-changing picture before you on the screen, you feel, quite naturally, the tenderness of the love scenes. The emotions which the players worked hard to portray actually sweep over you.

There is, of course, a great deal of pleasure in making pictures, otherwise the stars would soon retire after having earned a reasonable competence. But it is mostly the pleasure of achievement—and not the pleasure of kissing!

The first screen kiss of many of our young ladies of the films was quite a trying moment, as perhaps you can imagine.

PATSY RUTH MILLER, for instance, had a terrific time with her first kissing scene.

"They played a dirty trick on me when I had my first encounter," exclaimed Patsy, "It was my first part—in Camille, Nazimova's picture, and a young man by the name of Rex Cherryman and I were supposed to melt into each other's arms and have a nice, soulful kiss. I was terribly nervous—kissing a man I'd just met, with all these people standing around watching. My mother was near the set and kept calling to me, 'Go ahead, Pat, it's all right,

Screen Kiss

Vilma Banky and Ronald Colman put more rapture into their kisses than any other screen pair. Do they look like it was business to them?

Estelle Taylor didn't enjoy her first screen kiss but since then she has found others more to her liking as in this scene with William Powell.

you're supposed to be in love with Rex, it's perfectly respectable.' So I mustered up all my courage and committed the deed. It was one of those long, fade-out kisses —the kind that last for several minutes. 'Hold it!' yelled the director. And I held on for dear life. Finally we had to come up for air and found everybody laughing at us. The camera wasn't grinding—the fade-out had been completed, but they left me to my misery to see how long I would hang on. It was a dirty trick, it was!"

Virginia Valli's first kiss wasn't quite as bad as Patsy's, but it was bad enough, according to Virginia. The event took place at the old Essanay studios in Chicago, and Miss Valli, at the time, was a very young lady—barely fifteen, in fact.

"The scene was from an old Skinner picture," she exclaimed, "and Bryant Washburn was the leading man. I was just starting in pictures, and had a small bit in support of Mr. Washburn—a bit in which he was to carry on a flirtation with me, ending in a kiss.

"Since then, I've been kissed hundreds of times on the screen. It is a part of this business and has no personal meaning attached. But, at that time, the first kiss had a terribly emotional meaning. I could not bear the thought of having myself photographed in any man's arms."

Olive Borden's first screen kiss was administered to her in Hollywood, a film made by James Cruze in 1923.

"In the picture," said Olive, "I was one of those who participated in the weird dream that George K. Arthur had. I was a harem girl and, during the scenes, was taken into the arms of a tall, handsome sheik and kissed as no other extra girl, I'm sure, has ever before been kissed! I remember the scene for several reasons—it was my first picture, my first screen kiss, and the first time in my life I had been kissed by a man (you see, Olive was only fifteen years old at the time). It really scared me—in fact, I was embarrassed for the rest of the day, not realizing that no one thought anything of the entire proceeding, since kisses are part of the daily routine of the studios."

I came upon Estelle Taylor at the Montmartre. "Tell me about your first screen kiss!" I whispered in her ear.

"It was with William Farnum," whispered back Estelle. "I remember he wore whiskers and I felt just as if I were kissing a hair mattress!"

"But you don't feel that way with Jack!" I said sweetly.

"Nope, I don't!" she laughed—and that was that.

A TOM MIX and Western Players Fan Club has been started by John J. Mahany. Dues are 50c for the year and this will go towards a small machine to print a by-weekly paper devoted to bring star, producer and fan closer together. A membership drive will soon be launched and some popular Western star will contribute the prizes—it is not known just what they will be as yet, but it is hinted that a handsome cowboy hat will be among them. Five main prizes will be given and ten minor prizes consisting of autographed balls, caps, etc. All boys and girls over ten years of age are invited to become members of this club.

Club For Harrison Ford

MISS Lillian Doria, president of the Harrison Ford Club, recently met her honorary president, and now, more than ever, wants to make his club a "howling" success. Dues, by the way, are 25c per year and everyone who brings in five or more new members gets an attractive prize.

Free Membership

LEONARD EURY, secretary of the George O'Brien Fan Club, announces that there are no charges for membership in his club, but he does insist that only interested fans—particularly those who admire George—can join. The club numbers nearly 400 and is rapidly growing. An interesting club news-sheet is issued from time to time.

Another Asther Club

ANOTHER fan club for that young heart-breaker, Nils Asther! This one is headed by Miss Desha Snyder, and dues are 25c yearly (either stamps or coin).

New Club Paper

THE Theatrical Fan Club, of which Miss Catheryn Taylor is President, is now boosting Gilbert Roland, Lupe Velez, Sharon Lynn, Barry Norton, Martha Sleeper, June Collyer and Nancy Drexel. This club prints a little paper free to all members—called Backstage. It is very interesting.

I Turned To Ice When I Tried To Talk

—But Now I Can Sway An Audience of Thousands!

I HAD always been painfully bashful. When trying to carry on even the most commonplace conversation my voice would sound unnatural and my hands and knees would tremble. Often I would listen to an argument among a group and become so keenly interested that I would want to voice my own opinion—yet timidity would keep me silent. I never had the courage to stand up for what I knew to be my rights—I was always afraid of "what people will say," of ridicule. Since my childhood I had had a secret desire to appear in public—to be active in politics — but my shyness was so great that I turned to ice when I tried to talk—in even the smallest gathering!

My inability to talk was also affecting my business success. I dreaded going in and asking for a raise—I was afraid of any situation that meant using my voice—having to express myself. I didn't know how to present the ideas which I was sure the firm could use. I was just a plodder—a truck horse, capable of doing a lot of heavy work but of no use where brilliant performance was required. Often I would see men who were not half so thorough nor so hard working as I, promoted to positions where they made a brilliant showing—not through hard work, but through their ability to talk cleverly and convincingly—to give the appearance of being efficient and skillful.

What 20 Minutes a Day Will Show You

How to talk before your club or lodge
How to propose and respond to toasts
How to address board meetings
How to tell entertaining stories
How to make a political speech
How to make after-dinner speeches
How to converse interestingly
How to write letters
How to sell more goods
How to train your memory
How to enlarge your vocabulary
How to develop self-confidence
How to acquire a winning personality
How to strengthen your will-power and ambition
How to become a clear, accurate thinker
How to develop your power of concentration
How to become master of any situation

In Twenty Minutes a Day

And then suddenly I discovered a new easy method which made me a forceful speaker almost overnight. I learned how to dominate one man or an audience of thousands—how to say just the right words at the right time, how to win and hold the attention of those around me, how to express my thoughts simply and clearly, yet in a pleasing, interesting and amusing way. In just a few months I was able to make campaign speeches for a local candidate—I who a short time before had turned to ice when I tried to carry on an ordinary conversation!

Soon I had won salary increases, promotion, popularity, power. Today I always have a ready flow of speech at my command. I am able to rise to any occasion, to meet any emergency with just the right words, to approach all types of people with ease and fearlessness. And I accomplished all this by developing the natural power of speech possessed by everyone, but cultivated by so few—by simply spending 20 minutes a day in my own home on this most fascinating subject.

Postal Pouch

What do you want to know about your screen favorites? Send your questions in to the Postal Pouch Editor, Box 1757, Minneapolis, Minn. They will be answered in these pages. Or if you wish a personal reply, enclose a 2c stamp.

Joan Marquis and Agnes Allison, Paramount-Christie Comedy bathing girls, have their favorites just like other movie fans. They are reading all about them in the Postal Pouch.

LEE B.: I can't understand why your letter addressed to Martha Sleeper at F. B. O., Hollywood, was returned. She is still working there. You might try her again, and put "Please Forward" on the envelope. She was born in Lake Bluff, Ill., June 24, 1910. She is five feet, two inches tall, weighs one hundred and ten, has dark hair and blue eyes, and is single. Johnny Walker is five feet, eleven inches tall, weighs one hundred and sixty, has black hair and brown eyes. This is your second visit to the Postal Pouch, isn't it? We always remember our old friends, and welcome them as often as they like to come.

ANNABELL LEE: Oh, I know you! You're the girl who started all the popular songs—"Tum teedle-dum, Miss Annabell Lee—!" Try Ralph Graves at the Tiffany-Stahl Studios, 4500 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood. He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, is six feet one inch tall, weighs one hundred and seventy, has light brown hair, and blue eyes. He has not only acted in, but has directed several productions. Smart boy, our Ralphie!

RENA G. C.: Yes, you've hit the right place to have your questions answered. Why, little girl, I'm the wisest, best informed, most intelligent—oh, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope, and I'll tell you all about myself, cheerfully! Anyhow, Leila Hyams was born in New York. Dick Sutherland was born in Paducah, Kentucky, and has been married twenty-three years—to the same woman! Johnny Mack Brown was born in Dothan, Alabama, and is still single. Nick Stuart was born in Abrud, Rumania. Joyce Compton is single. There! That ought to fill a few gaps in your new movie album—and if you have any more, come right back to papa!

NANCY L.: I think it's lots of fun to belong to fan clubs. I have no record of a Nils Asther club—so you might start one! To join the Don Alvarado Club, write to the secretary, Robert Allen, West Carver Apartments, Waynesburg, Pa. Ralph Forbes' club is in charge of Evelyn Grimes, 221 First Street, Elkins, West Virginia. Write to Don Alvarado at the United Artists Studios.

VIOLA E.: Ben Bard parks his hat on the Fox lot; Dolores Del Rio is under contract to United Artists; and Wm. Collier, Jr., can be reached at Warner Brothers Studios.

IRENE S.: Lots of folks named "S" this time. You don't happen to be first cousins of the Smith Brothers, do you? Joan Crawford, William Haines, John Gilbert, and Greta Garbo are at M-G-M. Richard Arlen, Mary Brian, and Clara Bow are at Paramount. Vilma Banky and Rod La Rocque at De Mille and Mary Astor at First National.

NINA B.: You seem to be goin' West, young lady! Buzz Barton is under contract to F. B. O. No, Bob Steel isn't married, but Hoot Gibson is. His wife was formerly a vaudeville actress. Hoot was born in 1892. Yes, Leo Maloney was a sure 'nuff cowboy before he kicked up dust in the films.

R. J. W., TULSA: You bet you are welcome in the Postal Pouch. We answer every letter in order of its arrival, and nobody is ever slighted here! Claire Windsor was born on April 14, 1897. Colleen Moore gets her mail at the First National Studios, Burbank, and Clara Bow at Paramount-Famous-Lasky, Hollywood. Don't worry about your height, weight, age, or number of teeth—come as often as you like, for we get 'em all sizes here!

SALLY B.: Write to Bob Custer at the Chadwick Studios, Hollywood. Billie Dove is twenty-four years old, has hazel eyes and dark brown hair. Both she and Ken Maynard are under contract to First National, Burbank. Ken was born in 1895, and is married. William Boyd is married to Elinor Fair. John Gilbert is thirty-three years old, and single—now.

M. J. R.: From all I've heard, Irwin Willat knows he's a lucky hombre. He and Billie seem to be blissfully happy, and everybody likes him. He has a mustache, and is a director; but that's all I know about him. Alvarado is pronounced Al-vah-rah-do. Belle Bennett is one of the most beloved actresses on the screen. I don't blame you for being so fond of her. She was born near Dublin, Ireland, thirty-seven years ago. Much of her girlhood was spent as a bareback rider in her father's circus. She is five feet, two inches tall, weighs one hundred and twenty-five, has gray eyes, and dark hair. In private life she is Mrs. Fred Windermere. She had one son, who died, and an adopted son who recently married. Why not drop her a nice little fan letter? Try her at the Tiffany-Stahl Studios, 4500 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood. I know she'd appreciate your thought.

PEGGY F.: Ralph Forbes ought to frame the letter you wrote me about him! Gee, why don't some of you good-looking girls say those things about me? He was born September 30, 1901, in London, and was educated in Denstone College, England. He has been in pictures since 1921—and you're not the only fan who's "infatuated by him." The Enemy, Rose Marie and The Actress are his most recent Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions. He's six feet tall, weighs one hundred and sixty-eight, has blonde hair and blue eyes. Oh, yes, and he's separated from Ruth Chatterton, the stage actress. If this isn't "everything about him," write me again and maybe I'll tell you more!

ALICE R. O.: Buzz Barton, the smart young Western starlet, is ropin' the fence posts over at F. B. O., Hollywood. Just write to him there. He's four feet, six inches tall, weighs ninety-five pounds, and is thirteen years old. Bob Steele is also at F. B. O. Mary Astor, Colleen Moore, Billie Dove, and Donald Reed can be reached at the First National Studios, Burbank; Gilda Gray, care of the Samuel Goldwyn Unit, De Mille Studios, Culver City; Vilma Banky at De Mille's; Constance Howard and Renee Adoree at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Culver City; Richard Dix and Edna May at Paramount-Famous-Lasky, Hollywood; Mary Philbin and Don Alvarado at United Artists, Hollywood. Oh, yes, and Lina Basquette is making another picture for First National, so write to her at that studio. Glad to meet you—come again!

HOPEFUL: Better change that to Hopeless, for to save my long white beard I can't think of any very short leading man in "Classical Drama." They're all built on comedy lines. Charlie Chaplin is the greatest (and smallest), being five feet four inches tall. George K. Arthur is five feet, six inches. Raymond Hatton, George Sidney, and Chester Conklin are all five feet, five inches. You'd not have any chance whatever as a "dramatic" actor—for the rule with them seems to be the bigger the better. But you could play target to a custard pie—and more power to you!

M. A. A.: Am I a Sir or Madam? Well, my hair is short. And how do I ever learn "all these addresses, etc.?" Brains, M. A. A.—that's all—just brains! No, really, Ramon Novarro isn't going into a monastery. If he goes anywhere when he quits going on location for the movies, it is very apt to be into Grand Opera—he's a marvelous singer, you know! Bow is pronounced like what you wear on your head, so don't bark about it. Write Clara and James Hall at Paramount-Famous-Lasky, Hollywood; Molly O'Day at First National, Burbank, and Marion Davies at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Culver City. You bet I will look for your letter in the Cheers and Jeers column—and write to me again some time!

reeling-staggering-wrestling —they fought with wolf-like fury

Round and round the room they went, man and maid, reeling, staggering, wrestling for the deadly hunting knife he had wrenched from her hand.

Then, as he felt her maddened strength give way, as her body became limp in his arms, his mind strove to solve this strange puzzle.

CHERRY MAID! Slim, fierce temptress of the forest, what secret errand had brought her HERE of all places? And why did she strive to kill HIM, of all people? What should he do with her?

Here indeed is an extraordinary story with an exciting and most unexpected ending.

TEN YEARS AGO

When Madge Bellamy's mamma screamed—Moses was smoking a cigar—Hollywood's first cinema palace was a laundry—and other anecdotes of the early days of the movies.

Villainous

HERE'S a story that harkens back to the days when Madge Bellamy emoted in Lorna Doone, her first role of any great importance. Her mother was, as always, an adhesive fixture on the set, generous with advice and vociferous in her complaints. One of the scenes showed Madge in bed. The director —Maurice Tournier, if my memory does not fail me—sat on the edge and instructed her in a bit of business. At the most crucial moment of his demonstration all the lights suddenly went off, leaving the place in very black darkness. Madge's mamma shreiked lustily. It is doubtful if to this day she believes it was not a dastardly plot to wrong her darling chee-ild!

Leading Man

TWENTY years ago this winter, Robert Z. Leonard, one-time husband of Mae Murray, now one of M-G-M's star directors, left a Los Angeles stock company to join the Frank Boggs' Studios at Edendale, as leading man. His first role required exactly the same wardrobe he wore on the street—a nifty brown derby, a smart four-button blue serge coat, effective light brown trousers, and modish tan button shoes.

Rod La Rocque might have become Ben Turpin's closest rival if he had continued his early comedy days in the movies. Above, with Claire McDowell in one of those rollicking Essenay pictures, "The Film's Best Family."

Did You Know That:

THE "S." in William Hart's name stands for Shakespeare? . . . That Director James Cruze, now married to Betty Compson, was formerly the husband of the once-popular Marguerite Snow, and that the couple had a child, Julie? . . . . That Mabel Normand got Sennett to give Charles Chaplin his first job?—She was the only one who was convinced that Charlie was actually funny when he solemnly hit himself with a custard pie and took a fall over his own feet . . . That Lois Weber, the first woman director, was an actress back in the Universal days? . . . William Boyd was playing extras about eight years ago? He appeared with Victor Varconi, Leatrice Joy, and Rod La Rocque in "Triumph," an early De Mille picture . . . That Leatrice Joy was once a Mack Sennett cutie?

No Smoking

CECIL B. DE MILLE was making The Ten Commandments. A spirit of appalling reverence hung over the studio. Disciples and people of Jerusalem, when not appearing before the camera, hunched around in corners gravely meditating. To C. B.'s great wrath he discovered Moses, none other than Theodore Roberts, smoking his famous black cigar between "shots." Just what speech was held on the subject is not definitely known; but Moses smoked no more cigars thenceforth!

First Movie Theatre

THE first motion picture theatre was opened in Los Angeles by a group of enterprising Easterners in 1909. It was a nickelodeon—a kaleidoscopic plant—formerly occupied by Sing Lee's Chinese laundry. Little did they dream that in less than twenty years, Los Angeles and Hollywood would boast of half a dozen million and two-million-dollar motion picture houses, each one a work of art.

Charlie Farrell basking in the sun on the golf course at Toluca Lake which is only a stone's throw from his Vagabond House. Here he will meet Jobyna Ralston and Dick Arlen, Charley Chase, Huntley Gordon, Belle Bennett and other movie stars who live not far away.

Charlie Farrell's Vagabond House

could not understand. Women don't. Did you ever see a fellow come back from a fishing trip with a two-weeks' growth of grizzled wire on his chin and his clothing looking like it had been picked up back of the barn? And did you see the look that came upon the face of the wife, a sort of turned-up nose expression as she informed him that as soon as he had taken a bath, donned some clean linens, cut the chaparral from his jowls and become civilized again, he might sit down in the living-room? While he, tired but joyously unclean mumbled, "All right, muh dear!"

"Oh, I know! And when a duck hunter comes back with a load of teals and mallards and canvasbacks, the good wife says, 'Well, clean 'em and I'll give 'em away to my friends. Don't track mud into the house, and, incidentally, change your wearing apparel in the garage...'"

Strange words to come from a Charlie Farrell. Immaculate in his dress, always well groomed, he nevertheless loves the rustic for hours of relaxation and comfort. Probably eighty per cent of the men of America envy him such a Vagabond House—men both married and single. What is it about them which causes them to yearn for a bit of wallowing on earth? For soiled clothing, grizzled beards, and barbarism! Women, as young Farrell says, don't seem to understand this side of their nature. Men themselves cannot explain it. But it lies more or less dormant in all.

Feminine Hygiene is Now Convenient Anywhere

THE modern American woman is envied by the women of all other countries in the world today because of her independence. She knows how to take care of herself. And she has learned that the secret of a woman's charm depends upon personal hygiene.

She knows that neglect of this matter means broken homes and blasted romances.

Heretofore feminine hygiene has been maintained at great discomfort. Seldom convenient, under some conditions it was impossible.

No Water Is Necessary

Now, however, through the use of a harmless antiseptic in tablet form, feminine hygiene is possible at all times and under all conditions, as no water is necessary.

These tablets have for a long time been prescribed by the medical profession. They are called Pariogen tablets — pronounced Par-i-ogen, with the accent on the eye. Pariogen is not a poison and contains no carbolic acid, cresol or bichloride of mercury, yet it destroys the most pernicious germs in a few moments.

Carried In A Small Handbag

Twelve Pariogen tablets come in a small tube 4½ inches by ½ inch in diameter—about the size of a fountain pen. The price at any drug store is only $1. Pariogen tablets make hygienic measures possible almost anywhere, as no water or the usual accessories are required.

Mailed Under Plain Wrapper

If you prefer not to ask your druggist for Pariogen, just send us a dollar bill with the attached coupon. A tube of Pariogen tablets with full instructions will be sent you under plain wrapper.

If for any reason you do not wish to keep them, just return whatever remains and we will promptly refund your dollar together with postage. Tear out the coupon now.

Charlie Farrell, although scarcely more than a boy, finds it profitable to spend hours sometimes, by himself. He knows how to be good company alone. He thinks. He plans. He studies. He finds a reason for everything he does. He is methodical. He talked to me for two hours one night about his new home—told me how he had drawn the rough plans himself, then gone over them in detail until he decided they were perfect, or, rather, to his complete satisfaction. Then he promptly called in the architects.

And, according to his estimate, "It's a man's house." There will be a servant or two—not Filipino boys, but mature, quiet persons who will not disturb him in his reveries, yet who will look after his every need.

Charlie won't be lonesome. About the lake are the homes of Belle Bennett, Lupino Lane, Warner Oland, Wallace MacDonald, Charlie Chase, Huntley Gordon, Richard Arlen and Jobyna Ralston, to whom he may look for company when desired and whom he will meet on the golf course and tennis courts.

THE books on his shelves will be those of his liking. The rugs and skins which will cover the floor will be those of his choice. The cigarette boxes will be heathenish things and the toy gods and idols he has been collecting will be out of all harmony with the dainty decorations a young woman likes in a house. He may even have some of the "props" from Seventh Heaven built in at places throughout the home. (His shack at the beach he calls Seventh Heaven now. A few doors away is the cottage of Clara Bow with "IT" worked into the iron gate at the entrance.)

The Vagabond House will have five rooms, be built of flagstones and shingles, have two bedrooms and be on a plot of ground 75x175 feet, fronting on the lake. It will be heated on chill nights by air-tight stoves, and the young Mr. Farrell expects to get exercise swinging the axe to provide fuel. Then when darkness comes he will be before that great fireplace in comfort, reading, smoking imported tobaccos and content to "let the rest of the world go by."

But will he be content? Men have said before that they are happiest when alone—said it many times. Then, from out of nowhere pops some little pug-nosed, bobbed-hair wisp of a girl to twist each around her finger and make him take orders like a waiter. It's a grand and glorious sight to see some hulk of a male trailing along in the wake of a little 110-pound girl and being told what to do next. And isn't it just a bit more than likely that this is what will happen to Charlie Farrell?

Anyway, he has a whale of a dream! In his Vagabond House.

Anita Page

"Yes, dear, of course. But Mr. Pomares and I wanted Anita to be something else. An artist, perhaps. She does fine work. Sketches from life."

On promise, Anita finished high school before trying theatrics. A friend secured her a bit in a motion picture studio on Long Island. No keeping her at the easel now. Any pencilling went on her eyebrows. Paint was prefaced by "grease."

Soon Anita signed with a newly organized company to appear in a series of pictures. When the first feature was done Poppa and Momma and Anita, and even Marino, discovered that the company was financed by Harry Thaw, slightly erratic patron of arts.

"You can imagine how we felt about it," said Mrs. Pomares. And one can.

But Anita had a contract and soon the eccentric Mr. Thaw decided to take her, and another beautiful protege, to Hollywood. With Anita went mother and Marino. Mr. Thaw, meeting with profound discouragement, folded his tents like the well-known Arab gentlemen and sped away. Anita and mother and Marino stayed. The other girl departed, too.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer signed Anita, almost immediately. It was unbelievably fortunate, as Hollywood can tell you. Inexperienced newcomers don't get contracts.

Pink fingers, rosy nails, black lashes, inch-long lashes, flirtatious, seductive lashes. They make feathery flounces on her round cheeks. Only eighteen with a glamorous past pleasantly awaiting to be made. Only eighteen, and with dramatic possibilities. Only eighteen. . . . Only eighteen. . . Isn't just being that enough?

"And now that you have been eight months an actress, have you any advice to give to would-be stars?"

"Oh, yes, a lot of advice. Hard work, and rest—"

"Plenty of rest," mother seconded. "We see that she gets her share of that."

"—and never be high-hat or snobbish."

They live in Palms, a small suburb of Culver City, where peace and quiet are twin virtues. And Culver City, itself, is a goodly half hour's drive from Hollywood.

"We really didn't think Anita would develop into an actress," said Mrs. Pomares.

"But mother, I thought you said you hoped I would."

"That was later, dear."

Proving that mother always knows best.

I'll Teach You To Dance

—at home without music or a partner or the Trial is Free

YES—I'll teach you in a few hours—at home—in private—how to learn all the modern dances—Charleston, Black Bottom, Valencia, Canter, French Tango, St. Louis Hop, Latest Waltzes, Fox Trots, etc., or the trial costs you nothing.

I'll train you to be an easy, confident dancer by a system so clear, so simple, so complete that you will soon start dancing gracefully—even though you've never danced before.

Dancing Made Simple as A-B-C

You will be surprised to see how easily you can learn to dance by our simple chart system. Every dance is explained step by step with charts and diagrams. You can't possibly go wrong. The directions are so easy to follow, and the pictures are so clear, that you'll be dancing before you know it.

It isn't necessary that you understand music or even have a piano, phonograph or radio. Our remarkable system teaches you a very simple system of timing yourself. It tells how to know by the music what kind of a dance is next, how to start on the right beat, how to follow the music, how to be graceful and feel at ease, how to get rhythm, how to lead or follow, how to stand correctly, how to gain confidence, how to become popular. In fact, in a short time this remarkable course should make you one of the best dancers in your set.

If you want to become a perfect dancer—if you want to be popular—learn to dance at home this new, easy way.

Renee Adoree's monocoupe is the latest thing in aerial transportation. It is a tiny plane which she used to fly up into the mountains on her vacation a short time ago.

Flying High in Hollywood

clan and narrow escapes from injury become humorous incidents when recounted. Lieut. Earl H. Robinson, flying director for the making of Wings and The Legion of the Condemned was about 4,000 feet over the ocean with Reed Howes lying on one wing of the plane for a scene in The Cloud Patrol.

"Suddenly," explains Lieut. Robinson, "I saw Reed waving frantically to me. I couldn't figure out what was the matter, but he appeared to be in distress. So I circled back to shore and landed. I yanked off my helmet and turned to his aid.

"'What's the matter, Reed?' I asked, anxiously.

"'Listen,' he confided. 'I had six $1 bills in my pocket and the wind was draggin' 'em out, one by one. Didn't you see my money floatin' by?'

"'Get me an axe!' I said to one of the helpers. 'I'll put him out of his misery right now!'"

HOWES not only owns his own plane, but has an interest in a flying school near Glendale, Calif., where he and his associates teach each other stunts on the wings of their ships. Reed is a member of the Reserve Flying Corps and Lieut. Robinson is a licensed pilot in the National Guard. They make many cross-country trips together.

The Old Master of flying in California, of course, is Cecil De Mille, one of the organizers of the Mercury Co., which started commercial aviation on the coast in 1917. The Mercury Co., operated planes from Los Angeles to San Diego and eventually extended its service to the City of Mexico. The field at the Mexican capital in which Colonel Lindbergh landed on his South American flight, was part of the company's equipment.

De Mille piloted a plane himself from 1917 to 1919, then the insurance companies turned thumbs down and he was forced to abandon the controls. Then the Mexican insurgents began taking a liking to the planes of the Mercury Co., and service south of the border was abandoned. The company disbanded in 1922.

Directors Clarence Brown and George Hill are buying planes. Director Howard Hawkes has been operating one for months. Planes are owned by Howard Hughes, head of the Caddo Productions; Lloyd Bacon, Jerry Miley, Merian C. Cooper and Paul Hurst. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has a flying laboratory in which film taken "on location" is developed en route to the studio. Mrs. Jack Maddox, whose husband is head of the Maddox Airplane Co., served luncheon to a party in the clouds and a game of bridge was played in a cabin plane by actresses some weeks ago.

Janet Gaynor flies back and forth between Hollywood and San Francisco in a "courting plane" owned by a young Lochinvar who lives at the Golden Gate. Mary Pickford an Douglas Fairbanks planned using planes for travel between their Hollywood studio and the hacienda they're building down the coast. But the insurance companies and officials of their own companies objected.

Richard Barthelmess, slightly injured on his yacht off Catalina Island recently came flying in on a chartered plane to obtain medical attention.

They've simply got the flying fever and don't want to be cured. They'd rather let it rage. And, pshaw! a few little crack-ups and some walking back doesn't hurt.

Is Madge Bellamy Another Elsie Janis?

was so moved by the picture that she burst into tears at the opening performance.

But if there is a similarity between the picture and the lives of Elsie Janis and her mother, it is not carried through to a conclusion. The picture ends with Madge Bellamy about to be happily married at last to Barry Norton, the promising young South American, who plays the part of a song writer. Elsie Janis is still single, although there have been rumors of a budding romance between the vaudeville star and Ramon Novarro, with whom she has been seen frequently on the coast.

Pearl White Comes To Life

BROADWAY friends of Pearl White, queen of the serial thrillers of fifteen years ago, declare that she has popped up again in Paris.

They say that she is now gambling with francs as she once gambled with love and death on the screen.

Pearl has acquired the fashionable chateau of the Empress Eugenie, according to reports, and has transformed it into a fashionable gambling salon, officiating in person as hostess.

Pearl is best remembered for her thrilling escapes in The Perils of Pauline.

Broadway To the Cleaners

BROADWAY is in the throes of one of its periodical clean-ups, largely brought on by Mae West, with her productions The Drag and Pleasure Man, which were barred from Broadway. Chee-Chee, the musical extravaganza, and Machinal, have both gone through the laundering process. Jarnegan, the play of a Hollywood director's life, adapted from the SCREEN SECRETS serial by Jim Tully, is one of the few that have come through without a change.

Haines Wisecracks

WHO should we run into on Forty-fourth the other day but Bill Haines, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star, doing Broadway in forty minutes flat, in tow of his manager, William Voight.

"Yes," he said, "I'm going back to my old home state of Virginia for a short vacation. Virginia, you know," he added, "is where the hams come from."

"Tex" Is Back

HOLLYWOOD is plenty bunk!" Thus Tex Guinan summed up her visit to the film city where she went a few short weeks ago to make a talking picture for Warner Bros., upon her return to Broadway.

Texas' opinion of the flicker capital was possibly influenced by her chilly reception on the coast and even chillier exit. A big reception which had been planned for her fell through. The mayor and city officials refused to welcome her

And Texas left with the process servers on her trail. Marie Prevost rented Texas her home for her stay in Hollywood, and Texas left, so Marie declares, owing her $800. In lieu of the $800, Marie says that Texas sent her four dead ducks, which Marie didn't consider adequate payment, so she still wants the $800 and has filed suit for it in Superior Court.

Meanwhile Texas has troubles of her own confronting her. She is appearing before the Federal Court to answer charges of attempting to violate the Volstead Act.

The young lad who is said to have gotten the evidence on Texas is James Longcope, former "under-cover" prohibition agent, since arrested on a charge of extorting money from a Greenwich Village restaurant proprietor.

Falling Hair Dandruff Itching Scalp

are Signs of Approaching

BALDNESS

The Result of Neglect

NATURE HAS WAYS of warning us when certain parts of our body are sick or under-nourished. In the case of our hair the danger signals are itching scalp—dandruff—and falling hair. If neglected, these conditions will result in thin, lifeless hair—and eventual baldness.

Curable through HOME TREATMENT

PROFESSOR MAURICE SCHOLDER, the internationally renowned specialist on ailments of hair and scalp, who has heretofore treated patients only at his Clinic, now offers a course of Home Treatment to any sufferer who is unable to come to his Clinic. Professor Scholder's Home Treatment System is based on the principle of individual analysis, diagnosis and prescription. In other words, each case is individually treated and analyzed. This diagnosis and prescription, together with his secret formulas and individual treatment, account for his uniform success in stopping loss of hair, and actually growing strong, new hair, in cases where less gifted and less experienced practitioners have failed completely.

Professor Maurice Scholder

The newspapers in this country and abroad have proclaimed Professor Scholder as the marvel of his profession. Now, in his advancing years, Professor Scholder is not content to call a halt to the accomplishments of a long and honorable career. He is retiring gradually from treating patients at his Clinic and is devoting three days a week to treating patients by his Home Treatment System. His successful cures are numbered in the thousands and among his grateful patients are men and women of highest prominence.

Don't fail to read Alice White's secret diary beginning in the February issue of SCREEN SECRETS Magazine—on sale January 10.

Doris Kenyon has launched her career in talking pictures with a notable achievement in the Paramount picture, "Interference," with Clive Brook. Her musical voice is a pleasure to hear.

I Want To Be Free

mother. I'll give up if I have to become just a Mrs. So and So among other Mrs. So and So women.

"In any marriage one person has the more dominating, the more powerful personality. In any union there is one who must struggle not to become merely the complement of the other.

"My husband is not only a genius of brains and a composite of talents, but he is a splendid provider.

"I'd never have to do a thing if I didn't wish. For the least service required, he'd say, 'Get someone to do it.' "

"Our friends include brilliant scientists, famous musicians, university professors—as well as the motion picture people. How easy for me to become just a perfect hostess among these friends of my husband.

"But now that I've produced a son, really an accomplishment enough for any woman, I'm going to create my own little corner by own individual effort."

We would like to have gasped, but we didn't. We would liked to have sighed with wonder—but she was so deeply in earnest, so unaffectedly sincere, that we scarcely breathed for fear of interrupting.

"Neither will I be, on the screen, just Milton Sills' leading lady!" Her hand banged on the luncheon table to emphasize the importance of this decision.

She had talked for forty minutes. Luncheon—the kind with caviar and artichokes and whipped-cream strawberries, was finished. We went for a walk around those dreamland gardens.

Milton Sills came home from the studio and joined us. Mrs. Sills repeated the story she had been telling about Doris Kenyon.

"Certainly!" His eyes twinkled. "It's best for both of us for her to be her own leading lady. By the way, I need some buttons sewed on, honey."

"Oh, I'll do them this afternoon!" Her voice was contrite with wifely solicitation.

"Oh, hire somebody to do them!"

"See?" Miss Kenyon shrugged as we passed on, ahead, to the tennis courts. "He wouldn't let me do anything that he could have done for me.

"You understand, don't you, that I've got to do something which will make me a better mother rather than just a mother, a better wife, rather than just a wife; an individual actress, not just his leading lady.

"Oh, I wouldn't give up any of this. I love it. But the question is not a home or a career—it's how to amalgamate a home with a career—"

"Sure!" A voice from the rear interrupted. "But come up again and I'll give you an interview on wanting my independence."

We left them together, arm in arm, laughing with and at one another. The woman who refuses, despite wealth, prestige and love for her family, to become her husband's wife; the man who is shrewd enough to encourage what will make her the most happy.

"A lesson there," we murmured, as we turned our wheels through the massive gates toward the routine humdrum of the city.

"A lesson for any number of plain, every-day married people!"

wards, dancing was enjoyed in the patio to the strains of an Hawaiian orchestra hidden in the garden.

Among the guests I noted Harold and Mildred Lloyd (Harold with his arm in a cast—he had fractured a bone playing handball), the Ben Schulbergs and Darryl Zanucks, Misses Rosabelle Laemmle, Lupe Velez, Patsy Ruth Miller and Lois Moran and the Messrs. Carl Laemmle, Jr., Paul Bern, Edmund Goulding and Bennie Zeidman.

AS EVER alert to the unusual, Peggy Hamilton was hostess at the first matinee and flower shower ever given in the air. The affair was aranged in honor of Colonel Charles Lindbergh with Art Goebel, Al Wilson and Ruth Elder as special guests. About eighteen planes, carrying from four to twelve passengers each, transported Miss Hamilton and her party to Mines Field where the air races were being held—the planes circling the grandstand while the passengers dropped a shower of roses upon the spectators.

Belle Bennett flew from Catalina in time to join the party and among those who flew with Peggy were Priscilla Dean, Natalie Kingston, Kathryn McGuire, June Marlows, Julia Faye, Sally Eilers, Sharon Lynn, Marian Nixon, Kathleen Clifford, Vera Lewis and Claire MacDowell.

LOIS WILSON'S Sunday night buffet supper of recent date was a pleasant occasion. More than seventy-five friends enjoyed her hospitality most of them arriving early and staying late, all but Edward Everett Horton and members of his Vine Street company who had to leave in time for their show.

THEN there was the little "cat party" with Laura La Plante as hostess. Finding herself with a free day for the first time in months—Show Boat has been just that sort of a picture to make! —Laura 'phoned all the girls she knew to meet her at the Mary Helen Tea Room for lunch and gossip. Alas, most of them were either engaged or working but Margaret Livingston, Peggy Hamilton and Anita Stewart all accepted and tried to look as much like a large crowd as possible.

The "cat" part of the party was strictly confidential . . . .

A FORMAL Sunday evening dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Niblo at their Beverly Hills home, "Misty Mountain," was enjoyed by the Irving Thalbergs (Norma Shearer), Walter Moroscos (Corinne Griffith), Roland West, Ruth Chatterton and her mother, Katherine Bennett, Florence Vidor, Ronald Colman, William Powell and Alec Bennett.

Their First Screen Kiss

Marian Nixon's first kiss was enacted in a picture entitled Big Dan. Buck Jones was the man.

"It was my first leading role," said Marian. "I was just seventeen and had a most difficult task in appearing grown-up enough to be interesting as a kissable girl! The scene required that I, secretly in love with Buck, sew a button on his shirt. As I sewed the button, we were to look into each other's eyes. Then, before either of us became aware of what had happened, we were to kiss. The still taken of this kiss was the first for which I ever posed. It now adorns a special spot on the wall of my home—no, not for any personal reason, but because it was the first motion picture still I ever had taken."

DOUG MacLEAN delivered, fairly and squarely on her soft red lips, the first screen kiss Sue Carol ever experienced.

"I didn't know how to act," laughed Sue, "whether to be embarrassed but stand it, or whether to run away and hide! Not that I hadn't been kissed before—what young, romantic girl hasn't? But there is a difference after all, between a kiss delivered in the moonlight and alone except for the 'boy friend' and a kiss enacted in a studio with about fifty people looking on approvingly or otherwise.

"The picture was Soft Cushions," went on Sue, "and perhaps, had the osculatory moment taken place in some other picture—a picture in which I wore a few more clothes, it might not have been so embarrassing. But in Soft Cushions I wore a harem dress—or rather costume. Aside from a few beads, there wasn't much else to it!"

Poor Sue! No wonder the kiss was embarrassing!

Blanche Mehaffey's first screen kiss was an embarrassing moment, too—she had just been eating onions!

"I don't remember the name of the picture," said Blanche, "but I remember the man—it was Glenn Tryon. I had just been eating onions, not dreaming that I would be called upon to enact a kissing scene! But, well, I was—and poor Glenn, although he didn't say anything, I really pitied him!"

IVAN PETROVITCH gave Vilma Banky her first kiss way over in a little studio in Budapest.

"Ivan was a very famous player over there at the time," said Miss Banky, "and I was just beginning. The scenes called for much love-making and kissing. I don't remember being very embarrassed—just thrilled and interested."

So you see, fan friends, that their first screen kiss was usually an appalling affair. You will notice, however, that happily they all managed to get over that early trepidation very nicely!

As the dying man gasped up at Irwin Reiner, an expression of overpowering horror came into his dimming eyes. "The devil! The devil himself!" he shouted hoarsely. Then he fell back, dead.

Mask of the Devil

posed himself once more into a figure of compelling pathos.

But the intruder was only Helene Zurmuhlen.

"Oh, Irwin—here you are!" she cried, with a pitiful gesture toward him. "I have been searching for you. Thank God I have found you alone!"

"I was just leaving after a quiet cigarette," he told her pointedly; but she would not let him escape.

"Irwin, I love you—I'm mad about you! You can't turn away from me now. You've accepted my love once, given me yours. Now you have no right to deny me!"

HE EXCLAIMED angrily in the darkness, and would have left her standing there had she not restrained him.

"Tonight my heart died a little," she went on hysterically, clinging to him. "I was jealous of you—jealous of that young girl. I know it was very foolish; but I was afraid you no longer loved me."

This offered a loop-hole! Of course there was no need to hurt her any more than was necessary—he always preferred to let a woman down as gracefully as possible. "Ours was a beautiful love, Helene," he said gently, sincerely. "But an unholy love can never last."

"Oh!" she cried in anguish, her eyes fastened on him in strange horror. "You say 'unholy'—you who once swore that our love transcended all earthly codes. You told me—oh, but I realize now that you no longer love me!"

"Please, Helene, you are only making it harder for both of us," he spoke reasonably, as to a refractory child. "Let there be no tears, no hysteria, nothing to mar our perfect memories."

"I cannot live without you! Irwin, I swear I will kill myself!"

He turned on her savagely. "For God's sake, don't be an utter fool, Helene! Remember, you're a woman, not a lovesick girl. You surely must have known this could not last. No, I will not listen any longer—our little comedy is finished—forever!"

As he walked briskly toward the merrymakers, he hesitated for a brief moment of troubled reflection. Suppose she really meant what she said? Perhaps a woman as tense and passionate as Helene actually might commit suicide. Quickly he returned to the arbor; but she had gone. Oh, well! Ca bien! Besides, down there in the garden was Virginia, of whom he caught a tantalizing glimpse now and then as she passed among the crowds. He would join her. That would be more enjoyable than debating the actions of a neurotic woman!

Now that she was away from Irwin Reiner, Virginia ceased to feel so poignantly his strange, hypnotic spell. No longer did his words deceive her with their soft persuasiveness. Now he was again the man who was insiduously trying to come between her and her beloved Manfred.

Suddenly it seemed to Virginia that the pearls he had given her were invisible hands about her throat. With a stifled cry she tore at them with

Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance, etc,"

NEW BODIES in 24 hours

HAVE you ever watched a magician pick wriggling rabbits out of a high hat? A wonderful trick, you say. Well, I'm a magician of a different sort—a magician that builds health and strength into your body in just 24 hours. And it is no trick. It took me 19 years of tireless planning and experimenting to be able to do it.

People call me the Muscle-Builder, because I take weak, run-down bodies and transform them into strong, virile, handsome bodies in double-quick time. And I actually do it in 24 hours.

In the Privacy of Your Own Room

By this I do not mean that you must exercise 24 hours continuously. My scientific short-cut to healthy, handsome, broad-shouldered bodies must be taken in short 15 minute doses. Because, if you exercised more than that in my high-pressure, quick development way, you would tear down more than I can build up. So all I ask of you is 15 minutes of your spare time each day for 90 days (actually only 22½ hours time) doing simple, easy exercises under my guidance. You can do them in the privacy of your room, if you wish, but you must do them every day to get the best results.

And What Results!

In the first 30 days I guarantee to add one whole inch of real, live, muscle on each of your arms, and two whole inches of the same revitalizing strength across your chest. I'll take the kinks out of your back, strengthen and broaden your shoulders, give you a wrist of steel, and a fighting, peppy personality that just yells youth, vigor and vitality all over.

I Work Inside As Well As Out

Your heart, your liver, your kidneys, your lungs—all your internal organs get the jolt of their young lives when I start to work on them. And they settle down to an orderly, well-mannered existence that means a new kind of happiness for you—the joy of living that only a healthy, virile body can give you. And the headaches, constipation troubles, aches and pains that are always caused by weakened, flabby bodies somehow miraculously disappear.

You See It in Her Eyes

And will your friends notice the difference! Just watch that girl you love so dearly open her eyes, and fight to hold your attention! And the boys in your crowd—they'll look up to you as a real leader. Instinctively they worship strength and leadership that must go with it. But let me tell you all about it. All you have to do is trembling fingers. The slender chain snapped, and the jewels clattered to the stone flagging like a shower of hail. Frau Gessner, who approached in time to witness this mad gesture, ran forward with a shriek.

"You would throw away pearls—you who are too good for a handsome young baron!" she shrilled hysterically. "Perhaps it is a king you want, my fine lady!" She had fallen to her hands and knees, and was plucking greedily at the pearls.

"It is Manfred I love—Manfred I want—not a king—and especially not Baron Reiner!" Virginia cried passionately.

"Manfred—bah! A poverty stricken cub gallivanting to strange, wild countries while your hair grows gray, your eyes become glazed with age, and your young skin shrunken, waiting for him to come back and claim you as his bride! A fine husband that one will make!" she retorted bitterly.

BUT Virginia was gone, leaving Frau Gessner to her task of frenziedly rescuing the pearls. She felt a sudden need for solitude. But as she half ran up the path, she found herself face to face with Count Palester.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, halting unwillingly.

The man placed his hands gently on her shoulders and looked seriously into her troubled eyes.

"Little Virginia," he told her slowly, "you are falling in love with Irwin Reiner!"

She shrank from him as from an unexpected blow. "No—no! It's not true! I—I hate him! He is false—he has betrayed the trust of his dearest friend! A traitor—a coward—a cad! Oh, how I loathe him! I don't want ever to see him again!" Suddenly she burst into tears.

"Child, child, don't distress yourself so," Palester soothed her, searching for his handkerchief with which to dry her eyes. "Of course, I understand." But with an unerring insight he had read her heart: she did love Irwin Reiner, even though she might not yet know her own feeling for him.

The young baron had looked all over the grounds for Virginia without finding her. Now he came inadvertently upon Frau Gessner, still combing the grass for pearls and muttering angrily. Even a very stupid man would have been able quite easily to reconstruct the little scene that had preceded this tableau; but as Irwin Reiner asked the furious old frump where Virginia was to be found, he seemed unconscious of what had taken place, nor did he linger for an explanation.

He found Virginia alone, hidden from the dancers, the diners, the merrymakers, crying as if her heart would break. She did not hear his approaching steps.

"Virginia!" he whispered appealingly, shyly touching her arm.

Quickly she looked up at him.

"Virginia!" he cried tenderly again. "Forgive me!"

He watched her closely. Too well he knew that tears were the outward sign of a woman's fast breaking resistance. He would dominate her yet!

"Yes," she answered slowly, "I—forgive—you."

Perhaps he would have knelt before her dramatically in gratitude (women adore such pretty scenes!) And then she might have bent to kiss his forehead, gently like a mother forgiving an erring son . . . Or, yielding to a mad impulse, he might have crushed her in his arms again . . . . . She might—oh heavenly thought!—have yielded her warm, young lips to his . . .

But it was not Irwin Reiner's fate to choose; for at that golden moment Palester ran up, breathless with exertion, and stuttering in his excitement.

"Madame Zurmuhlen—badly hurt—in the house!"

With an exclamation of annoyance and apprehension, the young baron left them abruptly and started for the house on a run.

Helene had fulfilled the threat she made to her faithless lover. Filled with bitter agony by his indifference, she had stumbled blindly from the arbor where he had left her alone; and running through the garden, passed people busy with their wine and jests, she had come to the road on which cars drove swiftly by into the heart of Vienna. She had no plan, only an overwhelming urge to do something desperate—something to make Reiner care for her again, or to put her forever out of her misery. Now as her eyes, burning with strange madness, fell on the swift-passing cars, a horrible idea took possession of her half-crazed mind.

A CAR approached rapidly in the night . . . A woman paused but a moment, then rushed across its relentless path . . . A grinding of brakes . . . Shrieks from those who had witnessed this terrible attempt at suicide . . Low moans of torture from the mangled body . . .Then somebody lifted Helene from the ground where she had been hurled. Gently she was carried to Irwin Reiner's bedroom, this woman he had loved and cast aside.

Somebody ran to look for her husband, who came at last mad with despair and love for her. In vain he tried to calm Helene, to persuade her to lie quietly until the surgeons arrived; but she fought him off.

"Irwin!" she cried hysterically, lifting her arms to some half conscious vision of him—"Irwin! Don't send me away! For God's sake, don't cast me aside now! I love you—love—" She sank back, exhausted.

Count Zurmuhlen's face was strangely white as he left the room and went in search of Irwin Reiner. The library was dark save for the two candles burning on the desk, and the coals glowing on the hearth. Shadows cast sinister reflections on the wall, and an uncanny silence filled the room. He crossed to the cabinet holding Reiner's duelling pistols. In a frenzy of madness, he crashed the glass with his fist, and took out one of the revolvers. He examined it closely—he must not fail now! Yes, it was loaded! He was ready to meet his enemy, Irwin Reiner!

Minutes passed. Zurmuhlen stood like a graven image, his eyes blazing with hatred. He did not move when he heard voices outside the library door—Reiner asking where Helene had been carried, and the valet telling him that the count wished to see him at once in the library. He did not move when the young baron entered the room with head held high in dauntless courage.

Irwin Reiner stopped short at the sight of Zurmuhlen facing him with a leveled pistol.

"I am going to kill you!" the count spoke, slowly, deliberately. There was no doubt that he would fulfill his threat with relish and accuracy.

Instinctively Irwin Reiner sprang at the weapon. There was a brief struggle, then a muffled shot; and Zurmuhlen staggered backward to the floor, mortally wounded.

The pistol fell from Reiner's fingers as he bent over his victim. Across the face of the dying man came an expression of terrified fascination. Suddenly he let out a horrified shriek, and pointing into the very eyes of Irwin Reiner he cried: "The devil! The devil himself!" He sank back, lifeless.

The baron staggered to his feet, completely unnerved by the unfeigned horror in the dead man's staring eyes. Moving backward in an instinctive urge to retreat, he struck the wall. As he turned, he looked into the dim shadows of a mirror.

In one shocking moment he caught a glimpse of his twisted soul. His was a sinister face—brutal, leering, triumphant in its own vivaciousness—reflecting unearthly evil—the Mask of the Devil. . . .

IRWIN REINER was exonerated from the death of Count Hugo Zurmuhlen, thanks to his wealth, his honorable name, and his convincing personal magnetism. It was a close shave, for the count himself was a man of wide influence, but narrow margins of escape only gave spice to Irwin Reiner's life.

He had not heard from Virginia Gessner since the death of Zurmuhlen at his garden party several weks ago, a situation which filled him with vague uneasiness.

The servant brought in a note. It was with a quickening of the pulse that Irwin Reiner recognized her unmistakable delicate, round writing on the envelope. He opened it slowly, almost afraid of what she might say to him.

"Dear Irwin," it read. "In spite of all this ugly gossip, I do believe in your innocence, and want to see you again—"

Glowing with self-satisfaction, the young baron called that night on Virginia and her mother.

Irwin found her reclining in a long, low chair before the fire, which lighted the soft waves of her beautiful hair and cast a rosy glow over her face and arms. Her soft chiffon gown, quite perfect in its simplicity, revealed the girlish curve of her slender white throat and breasts. Throughout the evening she gazed reflectively, almost sadly, into the leaping flames, speaking seldom, seeming not even to listen. Irwin Reiner, conscious of her strange mood, exerted himself to be charming.

The young baron was strangely nervous. This emotion—this unnatural uneasiness—could it be love? He had never felt this way before. . . .

Virginia, too, seemed lost in a new sense of oppression. When her eyes inadvertently rested on Reiner's tense face, and read therein his warring moods, she stirred self-consciously and looked quickly away. Was she falling in love with Irwin Reiner—Manfred's dearest, trusted friend?

Unable to sit still any longer, Irwin left his fireside chair and paced the floor from end to end, nervously rolling a cigarette in his fingers. Now he suddenly paused guiltily before a framed photograph of Manfred. Thoughtfully he took it in his hands; but it was not his friend's face he saw. By some strange trick of the light, his own face was reflected in the glass—a face hideously distorted, leering, horrible—the Mask of the Devil. The picture clattered to the floor. Virginia turned toward him, startled by the sudden noise.

"Sorry—clumsy of me—don't know how it happened," he muttered, picking up the photograph and placing it face downward on the table. He had no desire to surprise that terrifying face again. . . . No, nor the reproachful eyes of Manfred that, he remembered, had always watched him with adoring trust.

Perhaps Virginia sensed the turmoil within Irwin; for quietly she went to his side. "You have been a real friend to us—to me," she said gently, reassuringly. "I used to fear you—to mistrust you. But now I have learned how fine you are—how worthy. Now I—I am proud to be your—friend."

Irwin Reiner's eyes burned upon her. Suddenly, without quite realizing what he was doing, he crushed her in his arms. "It's not your friendship I want, Virginia—it's your love! Can't you see? Haven't you always known? We belong to each other! I'm mad about you. Virginia, it's your love I want now!"

(To Be Concluded)

Will Virginia yield to Irwin Reiner's tempestuous wooing? Will awakening love arouse the baron's better instincts to do battle with his evil passion? Read the amazing conclusion of this stirring story in the February issue of Screen Secrets on sale January 10.

Adopted by the Movies

He could not even speak the language of Hollywood! And his father was dead, his mother very poor, and his elder brother earned even less than he. Impossible! Three thousand miles, and then three thousand more—on three dollars a week?... Impossible!

So he had thought for some time...

Then Adolphe Menjou came to Paris—even to the photographic salon of G. L. Manuel, the very shop in which Paul worked! Paul saw him!—but only once. Though he wandered back and forth before the hotel of the famous one, Menjou left before he got a second glimpse.

If only the dream-scenes in which he had pictured himself could become real in a like manner...!

Jesse Lasky came to Paris. Now another name could metamorphose itself into an individual. The "big boss" himself could become an actual flesh and blood man just as the actor had. And if M. Lasky did not come to M. Manuel's, he could go to the hotel and see him.

M. LASKY had not yet arrived. The papers had been a trifle early in their announcement. But Paul decided to wait anyway. So he went upstairs—by the back way, when they would not let him in the front.

Finally the great man appeared, followed by a large and obsequious retinue. He glanced at the small, shabby, but intensely earnest, boy in passing and then quickly disappeared into the suite that had been prepared for him. Paul stood looking at the blank door that had shut opportunity from him. He had not spoken. To put a long-dreamed-of thought suddenly into action is difficult. He was not the first who has hesitated on a springboard!

But he could still try again. So he waited. When, some time later, Lasky re-appeared, he could not help a slight surge of surprised interest at seeing the same earnest boy in the same place. But he had other thoughts in his mind as well—so he passed on.

Again Paul had wobbled on the springboard! Yet—M. Lasky had shown a slight glimmer of wakening interest. Perhaps, after all, it was just as well not to speak? Perhaps he was used to being asked for jobs, but not to seeing people standing silent?

So next day, too, Paul said nothing. But now Lasky's curiosity had been aroused. This time he did not pass by!—instead, he slackened his pace and then stopped abruptly. Turning to an attendant, he told him to learn what the lad wanted. Paul was voluble, speaking of all the dreams and hopes that had been growing in him for years. But Lasky did not understand French, and was forced to wait for the attendant to interpret. The latter did not want to bore the great man, so he was curt in his summing up: "He wants to act in pictures."

Lasky smiled, but only faintly. "Lord! the same old thing—even here!" Then he shook his head. "Tell him to go away. I can do nothing for him."

Paul smiled cheerfully—but did not go. Instead, he remained rooted in his position for the rest of the day. And he came also on the next!

He was becoming a nuisance. Every time Lasky so much as poked his head out of the door there was that same, altogether too damn patient, kid in the same place! His Movie Mightiness became annoyed. Very coldly, he instructed the interpreter: "Tell him many thanks and good-bye. Tell him that it is impossible to employ him. We make no pictures in Europe. Hollywood is overrun with movie-struck boys and girls."

The interpreter did as he was told. But Paul was not dismayed; instead, he gave the man an answer to take back with him: "Tell M. Lasky that I shall be happy to wait until he is in a better humor, then I will talk with him."

When he heard this, Lasky roared. And as he was thus in a good humor at the moment, he figured that he might as well talk to the kid now as ever. So he told a servant to show him in.

And now we will let Mr. Lasky himself report what happened then.

"'If you go to Hollywood,' I asked the lad, 'what would you do?'"

"The boy immediately began putting on an act in the most graphic and original pantomime, an act that made me open my eyes. I did not understand his language, and he could not speak mine. He had never been to a dramatic school nor appeared on the stage, but he had worked up a pantomimic entertainment which was a most wonderful demonstration of his skill. Also, he started talking to me in pantomime, and by his actions alone expressed the widest variety of thoughts. It was a regular conversation!"

Though Lasky is several times fifteen years old, and usually quite well aware of the fact, the impelling force of the boy's personality made him act as though, he, too, were of the latter's age. Without pausing for the slightest second thought, he gave way completely to the urge of the moment. Without even stopping to realize the elemental fact that, as the boy was obviously poor, his wardrobe must be scanty, he told him to go home and get ready to sail.

All on the spur of the moment—just precisely as Paul himself had acted!

And that is, so far as I can learn, the exact truth, without any enlargement whatever for the sake of a good story. When Paul arrived in Hollywood, the very first thing the studio was forced to do was to buy him shoes and socks—he had worn his only pair of each completely through, and his feet were a mass of blisters!

But now all that is over, and the road to stardom well started on. Yet this is not to be a road of roses, nor is he to travel it in a limousine—not quite. He is only fifteen; and though they intend to make an actor of him in time, they are going to do it slowly—and thoroughly.

What did John Barrymore Say to Alice White When They First Met?

Read Alice White's Secret Diary in the February issue of SCREEN SECRETS and you'll find out.

Now that Marie Prevost's latest reconciliation with her husband, Kenneth Harlan, has proven a failure, she has started divorce proceedings. Marie says she has tried for the last time to make a go of their marriage.

First, it is necessary that he know English, so three hours a day are devoted to that; and he has been boarded with a respectable Belgian family, well known to the studio, who can explain whatever he does not understand. Next, it will be helpful for him to know all the workings of a studio, rather than only acting; so they are starting him at the bottom, as an office boy who will be shifted from one department to another.

As his mother remained in Paris with her other son, they have had to furnish him with a legal guardian. The State Board of Education and Child Welfare saw to that! If Lasky had not been delayed in coming over he would probably have adopted Paul himself; but as he was not there and the Board would not wait, Mr. Kates, the head of the foreign department, was chosen because of his knowledge of French.

His first screen role was in Adolphe Menjou's recent picture, His Private Life in which he played the part of a dumb boy. His work was so satisfactory that Paul was immediately cast for an office boy part in The Wolf of Wall Street.

And, now—one thing still remains to be told. Rachel Smith, the school teacher in whose charge he has been placed, knew of his passion for the divine Clara. Learning one day that IT was on the lot, she looked for Paul so that they might be introduced.

But our little pantomimist is a fast worker. He had already met the lady, and been photographed with her!

Madame Williams DK-81, Buffalo, N.Y.

Doug in his famous role of D'Artagnan in "The Three Musketeers."

Is Doug Through?

With one bound she flew to the window and shouted: "Douglas Fairbanks, don't you dare crack that around my dog!" So Douglas, with the grieved air of an unappreciated artist, had to lay off the dog.

His best athletic feats, however, were as a gymnast. He told me one time that he could swing himself up anywhere that he could place the first two joints of two fingers.

Douglas never quite grew up. One day, after he had become a world-famous actor, I saw him playing some kind of crazy game with old auto tires on his stage. "I'll tell you," said Douglas, Jr., who was at that time a little boy, "why don't you fellows stand on your heads on that rolling platform; and I will throw you off into that rose hedge." "Yeh; that's great," said Doug, Sr.; so they stood on their heads and were hurled into a rose hedge full of thorns by running the platform into an obstruction.

LITTLE Mary Pickford never knows what is going to happen to her. One day she was telling me about a theater in Paris when she suddenly felt herself hoisted into mid-air by two arms that closed about her in a big bear hug—and left her little legs kicking the atmosphere.

"Isn't love grand?" I said, with a grin. "Yes," she gasped, "if your ribs can stand it."

IN THE years they have been making pictures, both Doug and Mary have become famous citizens of the world.

Prince George of England came straight to Doug and Mary with the unerring instinct of a homing pigeon upon the occasion of his recent visit.

He has been received as an intimate friend by the King of Spain, and the Queen of Sweden has taken Mary around the corner of a shrub at a royal garden party to ask what Dick Barthelmess is like off the screen.

SONG POEM WRITERS!

Submit poems for examination. If work is good, will offer contracts. M. Paul Manganella, 4695 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood, Calif.

Whenever they go abroad, the police of foreign cities have to guard the streets to keep them from being crushed to death by their admirers.

At home, in Los Angeles, they are recognized as the leaders of the town. Mary sits in on big financial conferences; is consulted about traffic plans and city parks. Douglas lays more cornerstones and opens more fairs and games than the Prince of Wales.

They have already made preparations for the days of their retirement—when they are simply Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks. Douglas has purchased a beautiful 1,200-acre ranch at the head of the San Dieguito Valley, about half-way to San Diego. Here he proposes to revive the old traditions of California—traditions of the days when the Gringo came. When the ranch is remodeled to their liking, no one will be permitted inside the gates with an automobile; you will leave your car in a garage attached to the hacienda and an old-fashioned rumbling stage coach with four horses will meet you and escort you to the casa.

IN THIS actor business, plans change overnight. But if Doug goes through with his present idea, he will forsake the business of acting and become a producer. I do not doubt that it is there he will find his greatest career.

In my opinion, he has the greatest motion picture mind that ever has touched the screen. The trouble with the average director is that he does not tell his drama in pictures at all; he puts on a spoken drama in front of a camera—leaving the audience to imagine the words. Douglas deals with a picture as an entirely independent medium. He uses pictures to appeal to that part of our imagination that uses images—not words.

He and Mary have plenty of money whereby to finance any pictures that they may choose to make without outside capital. They are both very rich.

Mary is said to have $2,000,000 in bonds; and their real estate holdings are enormous.

I think it very probable that Mary will also close her career as an actress before very long. She has avowedly forsaken the little-girl parts forever.

Like Douglas, I know that Mary's ultimate dream is to become a producer; and I predict that she will produce pictures with her childhood chum, Lillian Gish, as star.

As I have said, there is a possibility that Douglas and Mary will make a picture together before they finally make their exit.

Douglas has told me several times what this picture is to be; but it would be unfair to tell. It would be like publishing the combination of some one's safe.

But I can decently tell this much: that it is an extraordinary idea whereby Mary would play just the kind of parts for which she has been famous: Douglas his kind and the two to be blended in a story with a big epic sweep of thought and action.

Harry Carr Comments

By the terms of it, he is to be a movie star for six months every year; for the rest of the time he can do anything in the money earning line that he chooses—provided it is not motion pictures.

At the conclusion of his next picture The Pagan, he will go to New York to make some phonograph records; after which he will go to Berlin for voice study. Music is Ramon's first love. He has always been frank in saying that movies mean nothing but money to him. His real goal is grand opera. He expects to have a concert tour of Europe, singing Spanish and Mexican songs much in the manner of Raquel Meller; then he will try for grand opera.

I have never known any other person who could sing Mexican folk music so charmingly. Some of Ramon's songs are so old that they are shrouded in folk lore and tradition—songs of the cow boys, sung from time immemorial to the herds.

Tush! Tush, Aileen

AILEEN PRINGLE is going to revive the pictures in which sex just throbs and throbs. "Three Weeks" stuff.

There is some possibility that Mrs. Elinor Glyn may again produce them, nobody else having succeeded in supplying quite the same intensity of heat.

The funny part is that, Miss Pringle is about as far, in real life, from these simple-minded Glyn parts as could be imagined. She is cold, sophisticated and intellectual.

why ask how I would like to be something else?"

Gloria got up from her seat by the simple process of her kicking out her little-girl legs and sliding out of the big chair to the floor. "Come on out," said she. "I will show you the only chow dog in the world that isn't snobbish and I will show you my children; then you'll know how old I am."

And so the little girl that is Gloria went out to another little girl who is also Gloria and we were upstaged by the chow dog who was not in a democratic mood.

Von Stroheim, in his way, was quite as contrite and disillusioned as Gloria. He says all his troubles have come from a combination of meddlesome producers and a personal soul made in a Teutonic mould.

"It's the damn Teutonic thoroughness," said Von. "Everything has got to be just so—or I can't stand it."

That's why every picture of his has been a tumultuous struggle between Von and the "front office." The producers have balked at his desire to have everything "just so"—at the price.

As for instance, when he made Foolish Wives, he insisted upon having the reverse side of a hotel set completely filled up with an electric bell system connected with mythical rooms. He said he just had to feel that it was a real hotel—even if it didn't show on the screen.

Just so, in The Merry Widow he had a heraldic college design, a complete set of medals of honor and distinctions for a mythical kingdom at a cost of $11,000—when even the Austrian critics thought they were just ordinary Austrian army medals. Just so, in the same picture, he had the royal arms embroidered on the undies of all the movie soldiers; he said he couldn't feel they were real soldiers otherwise—even if the embroidery never would be seen. Just so, he held up the production of Greed for days of expense because a scared actor wouldn't allow a bowie knife to be thrown past his nose . . . to go quivering into the wall beyond. The actor contended, with trembling lips, that it wasn't necessary. Von admitted that but said he couldn't get the feel of the scene without the blade of that knife sizzling past the actor's jugular vein. To show the actor how safe it was, he had a professional knife thrower hurl the blade at an ace of spades. He missed it a mile—but that is another story.

Well, there you have Von; and there you have Gloria—two vivid, striking personalities—sure to have trouble and sure to make a great picture.

Young Romance

ANN CHRISTY, Wampas Baby Star of 1928, who played leads with Harold Lloyd and other stars, is shortly to be married to John Darrow, the handsome juvenile who played the part of the young reporter in The Racket.

Waiting

ALL Hollywood is waiting breathlessly to see whether a romance will develop between Charlie Chaplin and Virginia Cherrill of Chicago, whom he has selected as leading lady for his new picture. Charlie takes his screen work so seriously that he has often fallen in love with his leading ladies in earnest.

NOW Ian Keith, stage and screen star, and Ethel Clayton, who was at the height of her fame not so long ago, have separated, according to reports.

Camilla's Secret

CAMILLA HORN, the fair German star who has been playing leads opposite John Barrymore has mystified Hollywood because she has escaped all romance. But now the secret is out. Camilla announced recently that she was married just before she came to Hollywood. She expects her husband, Claude Geerz, a wealthy importer, to join her in this country soon.

LEATRICE JOY'S brother, Billy Joy, is soon planning to add more Joy to his life. He is soon to marry Joy Auburn, beautiful titian-haired leading lady, it is said.

THE divorce surprise of this month in Hollywood was provided by Doris May and Wallace McDonald.

LUCY DORAINE, Hungarian beauty under contract to Paramount, who was once the wife of Michael Curtiz, famous director, is about to be married to Dr. Richard Reithmuller, wealthy surgeon and author.

PRINCE SERGE M'DIVANI, husband of Pola Negri, who recently returned to Hollywood on a business trip, leaving Pola in Paris, laughed loudly when asked if reports of a separation between them were true.

structions by means of his buttons and colored lights from the "mixer" to the cameramen, from the director to the man in charge of the amplifying devices which "step up" the human voices. The "mixer" working quietly up above, touches an electric button. From outside comes the deep musical cry of a three-toned horn. It is a warning to the carpenters on adjoining stages to be quiet. The least reverberation will be registered on the microphone.

From the recording engineer, over the telephone comes the starting signal. It is a single word.

"Interlock!"

This, Director De Mille explains to me in a low whisper, indicates that camera and recording device are both working together in perfect harmony and ready to register voices and action at the identical moment. The voice of the operator calls out,

"Quiet, please!"

The stillness becomes a hush. A red light flashes on the monitor table. De Mille learns through his head phones that the operators are ready to begin. He waves a hand to the actors.

There is an air of terrific tenseness now. There can be no mistakes, no false moves, no mistaken lines. The director cannot encourage or correct, shout or swear, until the scene is over.

Miss Chatterton and Mr. Warner are ready to begin. But they cannot allow themselves even a preparatory clearing of the throat. Cameras and microphones are both alive and sensitive to every sound.

Thus the scene begins.

Inside the great glass cages the cameras are grinding away in silence recording every move. The incandescents burst into a blaze of light.

Out beyond the circle of light the sound of the voice is hurried in the twinkling of an eye through the microphone over the wires to the recording apparatus where a tiny photo electric cell changes the sound waves into light rays and records them in thin lines of black and white on a strip of film. Then when the film is reproduced in the theater, a similar cell will transform these light waves back into sound waves again.

As the actors go on with the scene De Mille explains to me how many more things they must remember in talking pictures than in the silent drama.

In addition to keeping in mind the camera angles in registering the proper actions and expressions, they must also keep in mind the microphone angle and make sure that their voices always register on the little disc suspended in the air above them.

As the scene goes on a terrific argument arises beween the actors who play the part of man and wife. They must gesticulate and yet remember that every word registers clearly.

After several minutes of verbal abuse, Warner suddenly turns away, moodily goes over to the divan and sits down. Now he is out of range of both the first microphone and the first camera and one would think that the scene would be lost.

But another camera has been concentrated on him, and follows his every movement as he turns away, while another microphone is suspended directly over the spot where he is sitting. A moment later Miss Chatterton follows him over, and this scene is played from an entirely new angle.

All this time there has been no sound except the flat muffled voices and the barely perceptible rustle of Miss Chatterton's gown as she slowly walks across the stage.

Meanwhile up in the little mixing room against the roof, the engineer with the volume control has been raising or lowering the amplification of the voices, so that as they move nearer to or farther from the microphone, raise their voices or lower them, an even volume of sound is maintained.

But these are not all his worries. For example, when Mr. Warner moves across the room to the divan, he has to "cut in" the new microphone, so that there are two "mikes" in operation with the pair talk back and forth across the room. Then when Miss Chatterton walks across the room to join Mr. Warner, the engineer has to "cut out" the first microphone the minute she comes within range of the second.

At length this scene is completed. As the last line is spoken, De Mille waves his hand in signal to the man at the monitor table. The huge lights on the sets dim to a glow and the heat lessens. The three-toned horn sounds without as a signal to the carpenters to resume work. The giant doors swing open admitting sounds from the outer world. Everyone suddenly relaxes. The tenseness is gone.

Instantly the tomb-like quality of the stage disappears and it once again becomes a part of the studio and its noises. The cameramen emerge from their booths like deep-sea divers coming up for air. Conversations are resumed; the atmosphere of tenseness that infested the stage during the scene vanishes completely.

"Play-back!"

The words come from the man at the monitor table. Red and green lights flash on the signal panel. Again the workers stop their conversation and the doors are swung shut. The stillness returns like magic; an instantaneous transformation.

Now a peculiar sound is faintly heard at one end of the stage. A moment later voices are heard. We are hearing the audible reproduction of the scene our eyes and ears witnessed when the scene started. Every word uttered by Miss Chatterton and Mr. Warner comes back with lifelike fidelity. All these sounds have an eerie quality about them as they fill the huge room. They are like echoes of the voices we first heard ten minutes before.

During the running of the "play-back" record, De Mille and his staff of engineers are carefully checking the dialogue lines, the tonal qualities of the voices and the reproduction of the sounds.

The "play-back" record system in use at the Paramount studio is solely for purposes of checking against errors. The actual recording is made upon a separate reel of standard motion picture film. This film has many advantages over the record system, its chief ones being its permanency and clarity of tone.

That evening, we move outside for a street scene. Working in the out-of-doors entails even more painstaking effort than is involved in the sound stage, for cables carrying the microphones and other apparatus must be strung from the recording machines on the stage over to the "set," which may be a block or a half mile away. In The Doctor's Secret John Loder, in the role of the young English lover of Miss Chatterton, is the victim of an automobile accident. The filming of this scene was done at night, as called for in the Barrie play, and a special street "set" has been constructed at the Paramount studio. Microphones are strung about in many places, in order to record the sound of passing automobiles, the cries of newsboys and the murmur of many voices.

A man is crossing the street. He is Mr. Loder. He becomes confused in the traffic. A huge omnibus bears down on him with brakes screeching and horn snorting frantically.

Too late! In a moment we are surrounding the prostrate figure in the street. A crowd collects. The excited voices, the shrill whistle of the bobby, the bell of an ambulance, all register in the microphone and go back to that silent room where they are imperishably recorded on celluloid.

The next evening I am shown the "rushes" of the scenes we did the previous night. I see the crowds passing along the London street and the traffic crawling through. The self-same sounds I heard the night before come back with amazing realism on the little screen of the studio projection room.

Through the wonder of this intricate mechanism, this mysterious transformation of sound waves into light waves and back into sound waves again, a fragment of life is caught in its entirety to be reproduced for the entertainment of unseen millions, perhaps half way across the world.

The Letter That Saved Bob Johnson's Job

—and paved the way for a better one!

It was written to his employer by the International Correspondence Schools. It told how "Robert Johnson had enrolled for a course of home-study and had received a mark of 94 for his first lesson."

Bob answered the summons to the Chief's office with just a little fear and trembling, for a lot of men were being dropped—a lot more were having their pay reduced.

But as Bob came in, his employer did a surprising thing. He rose from his desk and grasped Bob by the hand.

"I want to congratulate you, young man, on the marks you are making with the I. C. S. I am glad to see that you are training yourself not only for your present job, but for the job ahead.

"We're cutting the pay-roll. Until I received this letter, I had you in mind as one of the men to be dropped. But not now. Keep on studying—keep your eyes open—and pretty soon there'll be a still better job for you around here."

Won't you let the I. C. S. help you too? Won't you trade a few hours of your spare time for a good job, a good salary and the comforts that go with it? Then mark the work you like best in the coupon and mail it to Scranton today. That doesn't obligate you in the least, but it will be your first step toward success.

wrote that no matter how badly he played, the Spaniards thought it was wonderful because it was real American jazz played by real American boys. This extra money enabled them to see five countries.

When they arrived in New York they found two other boys hunting for a way to get back to Kansas City. The four scraped together eighty dollars and bought a Ford. They didn't have enough money for food or beds so they stopped at the Phi Psi houses along the way, Cornell, Michigan, Northwestern, Chicago and Columbia, Missouri. When Buddy arrived in Kansas City, he borrowed enough money to take the interurban to Olathe.

I shall never forget that home coming. We were so excited. When he stepped off the car, we scarcely knew him. He was so brown and sort of hardened looking. He didn't look like my baby. For the first time I realized that Buddy was no longer my baby. He'd had his first trip into the big world. I sat down and cried. He cried with me.

We all sat around in the front room that night and listened to his experiences until the early hours of the morning. His tales were wonderful! And he'd brought us all home a present. A shawl for me—a Spanish mantilla. And cuff links, from Spain, for his father. A Spanish comb for Jerry, his sister, and a pair of real Spanish shoes for his little brother. He hadn't had enough money to eat on the way home but he'd had enough to remember everybody.

His second year in college was the same as the first only he made more money. As a Freshman he had averaged between thirty and forty dollars a week; as a Sophomore he made over fifty. He had his own orchestra. During the summer he took them out on chautauqua which gave him a chance to see something of his own country.

ABOUT this time we began to worry about Buddy's future. What was he going to do in life? The natural thought of all parents.

During his third year in college I had a letter from S. C. Andrews, a theatre man in Kansas City. He said Paramount was looking for young men and suggested Buddy come down and see him. I sat up that night after my work was done and wrote Buddy a long letter about it. I sent the pictures Buddy had taken a year ago that last Christmas for me. I like to think I had something to do with his getting into pictures.

Then it all happened so quickly. The first thing I knew my boy was way off in New York learning to be an actor and getting sixty-five dollars a week for it.

I went to New York for the Paramount School graduation. We were together a month. It was—oh, I often wish that Buddy and I could re-live that month together. We stayed in a small, inexpensive hotel and we used to get pleasure out of walking up and down Fifth Avenue arm in arm, talking about what Buddy would do when he made lots of money. Nobody knew him. No one knew he was going to be a motion picture actor. He was just "My Boy" like he'd always been, showing me the sights of New York City from the streets and busses.

When we went back for the opening of Abie's Irish Rose we had a suite at The Ambassador. It was not the same. Oh, Buddy was just the same. But everybody had a claim on him. Not just his mother. It made me proud, but it brought a lump into my throat, too, when I remembered that other month in New York City.

Buddy has been just as lucky in pictures as he was in school and in college. They have made him a star so quickly. He has never had to play extra. He never seems to have any real difficulty. Sometimes, I get a little frightened.

And he has been so wonderful to us—his family. Last year he gave his younger brother, who is a Senior in High School, a roadster for Christmas. He has me to go to California three or four times a year. I was on location for Wings with him. He wants me to come out and live with him. He wants to build a California home for us. But his father has had the newspaper for twenty years. He wouldn't know what to do without it. Jerry's married. But there's still the baby. Buddy insists upon sending him through college. However, my boy says that by next year he is going to have me in California with him. And my boy usually gets what he's wanting.

After all, even though he did get twenty-three thousand fan letters last month, he's just the same to us. He's just as happy about a new tie or a new suit as he was when he played his drums for it. He'll run in and say, "Oh, mother, how do you like this one? I paid forty dollars for it!" just as he always did. Or he'll wire us that somebody wants to write a story about him. Or that he thinks Mary Brian likes him a little. It isn't that he brags, it's just he's still a small boy who gets excited about everything which happens.

And no matter how famous he gets, how much money he makes, he'll always be just the same, just "My Boy" to his mother.

HOW I Discovered the Secret of Making $7500 a Year and More!

Here Are Some Amazing Inside Facts About Success As Discovered by a Man Who Has TRIPLED His Former Earnings in 3 Short Months! Read This Interesting Message Without Fail!

By N. C. Paige—Star Salesman After 3 Months' Experience

$104 in 3 days. $80 an hour! $7,500 to $10,000 a year!

Those are figures I was only dreaming about a few months ago. Then they seemed as far out of reach as the moon! But today they are chalked up in black and white on my sales record, and what is more important, in my bank book! And yet, to be frank, only a small part of the credit is due me. I just figured out a few things about this business of making big money and applied them religiously. Anybody with average ability can do exactly the same—if they keep their eyes open!

That's the biggest thing of all—keeping your mind and your eyes open! I know it sounds like a very simple thing, but you would be surprised how many men just hammer along in the same old rut, wishing and striving for better things that are right under their noses all the time if they would only see them! The only reason some men are richer than others is that they have been able to see and recognize opportunity when it stared them in the face!

Where the Big Money Is

Take my own case for example. Before I "came to," I tried nine different ways of earning money. They all sounded good, solid, substantial and difficult. The harder they looked, the bigger I thought the possibilities must be. None of my propositions panned out and I hardly made enough to keep going. Then I discovered KRISS-KROSS. The day I read about this amazing shaving device in Liberty Magazine was certainly a red letter day for me! Here's what I saw:

I'll Guarantee to Keep You in Keen Razor Blades for Life

"Think of it! 365 keen, cool shaves a year from the same blade. That's what KRISS-KROSS is doing for American shavers everywhere!

"This amazing invention marks such a radical advance in shaving comfort and economy that it deserves to be called much more than a stropper. Rather it is a blade rejuvenator. Makes hundreds of keen, quick shaves blossom where only one grew before.

"KRISS-KROSS strops your blade (any make) on the diagonal just like a master barber. Pressure decreases automatically. Nickel jig flies up to notify you when your blade is ready, with the keenest cutting edge that steel can take!

"And now for my smashing offer! To introduce KRISS-KROSS stropper, I will give you an amazing new kind of razor free. Really 3 razors in one. Can be made straight or T-shape in a jiffy. Comes with 5 special blades."

Naturally, I was vitally interested because cool, slick painless shaves are what every man tries to get and usually can't! And then at the bottom of the ad, I saw a little square:

"Agents: Make big money as a KRISS-KROSS representative—$75 to $225 a week. H. King made $66 one day. J. C. Kellogg made $200 in 7 days."

First Step to Success

At first I was skeptical about the money-making part of it! It looked too easy. But the stropper sounded so extraordinary that I sent for it. When it came, I saw it was even more astonishing than I had imagined. Really it was uncanny what it did to a blade in exactly 11 seconds. I took it over to show a friend and in less than 5 minutes he asked me to get him one. While we were talking, two more friends dropped in and made the same request that I get them each a KRISS-KROSS outfit! When I left I had nearly $5 cash profit in my pocket —money I had not made one single effort to get!

That opened my eyes all right. I saw my chance and grabbed it! The KRISS-KROSS people gave me exclusive territory, a wonderful lot of sales helps and a big, illustrated salesmanship course book that contained selling secrets worth $100 cold cash to me! My first week I made $180. The next 3 days I made $104. Just think of it! It didn't seem to take any effort. I didn't have to "sell" at all. Every man was just naturally interested the minute he laid eyes on the stropper. Lots of them had read about it in the big magazines and were waiting for a chance to see it. The orders rolled in like water over a waterfall! It was real success at last!

Up the Ladder Fast!

Right now, I figure my yearly earnings with KRISS-KROSS will be somewhere between $7,500 and $10,000! and it all comes from getting started with the right kind of a proposition. I'm not a bit smarter or different than I was when I was trying to sell suits, brushes, and ordinary kinds of things. My only "smartness" was in choosing an article that is so astonishing that it sells itself!

Mr. Paige's experience is typical of that of hundreds of KRISS-KROSS representatives. Practically every man who takes up this astonishing proposition in full time or as a side-line writes us that he is making money faster and easier than he ever dreamed possible. Right now, more KRISS-KROSS representatives and agents are wanted—to earn $30 a day and up. The same opportunity that started Mr. Paige on the road to $7,500 a year is open to you. Find out about it today! Clip the coupon and mail it at once! You'll never regret it. Paige didn't! So act at once!

Alice White's Secret Diary

"Every 3,000 Miles This Amazing Little Device Buys Me a New Tire... FREE"

THE money I save on gasoline more than keeps me in new tires. Figure it out . . . I was using gas at a rate that cost me $46 to drive 3,000 miles. Now I'm getting better than 26 miles per gallon. It saves $23 to $25 every 3,000 miles—more than the price of a new tire."

No matter what make of car you drive, the Stransky Vaporizer is unconditionally guaranteed to give you more miles per gallon or it costs you nothing. As a matter of fact, it is not uncommon for the Stransky Vaporizer to greatly increase gasoline mileage!

Note These Records

Forty-three miles per gallon from a Chevrolet, reported by F. S. Carroll. He also reports 40 miles a gallon in a Ford. Forty miles per gallon in a Dodge from Brownsville, Tex., to Tampico, Mex., reported by T. L. Brown.

Three Million Owners

Records like these are reported in every mail for every make and model car . . . from 72 different countries . . . the world over. More than three million Stransky Vaporizers have been installed.

43.8 Miles per Gallon

Mr. M. E. Miller, Kansas City, writes: "I have subjected the Vaporizer to a severe and thorough test. After installing one on a Chevrolet, I found I was obtaining 43.8 miles to a gallon. The actual test surpasses your claim."

FITS ANY CAR IN 5 MINUTES

Any one can install this device in 5 minutes. Simply loosen one connection to the intake manifold with a wrench. You can do the rest with your fingers.

Easily Installed

No bigger than a dollar coin—no more expensive than a good wrench—no more trouble to attach than a fan belt! Attaches to the intake manifold of any car in five minutes. Any one can do it.

Less Gasoline—More Power

The Vaporizer mixes air with your gasoline after it leaves the carburetor. Vaporizes the gasoline more thoroughly. Under this ideal condition you get more compression out of less gasoline and a more complete explosion. Both power, pickup and speed are noticeably increased. Starting is not interfered with as the Vaporizer automatically shuts itself off when the motor is idle.

Make This Test

Test the Stransky Vaporizer on your car—and expect results that will amaze you! Increase your mileage—forget carbon trouble, sluggish motor and fouled spark plugs from over-rich mixture—and save enough on your gasoline to more than keep you in tires. These results are guaranteed or the test costs you nothing.

Now You Can Reduce 2 to 4 Lbs. in a Night

Eat what you please
Wear what you please
Do what you please
Take no risky medicine

Send the Coupon for your first three Fayro Baths

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs are now Brought to You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Lose Weight Where You Most Want to

Fayro reduces weight generally but you can also concentrate its effects on abdomen, hip, legs, ankles, chin or any part of the body you may wish.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost from 2 to 4 pounds. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. Soon you will be the correct weight for your height. No need to deny yourself food you really want. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro at Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full-size packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it.

HERE'S PROOF

"I weigh 16 pounds less and feel younger and sleep better. Fayro is wonderful."

"My double chin vanished in the magic of Fayro baths."

"My hips were always too prominent until I commenced Fayro baths. I have lost 12 pounds."

"Thank you for Fayro. I lost 14 pounds in three weeks; feel better and certainly look better."

"Since childhood my thick ankles have always been a source of embarrassment. Fayro baths have reduced them beautifully. Thank you very much.

For obvious reasons, names are not quoted, but every letter published has been authorized and name and address will be given on request.

If each healthful bath of Fayro does not reduce your weight from 2 to 4 pounds, we will refund your money without a question. You risk nothing. Clip the coupon and mail it today.

The EDITOR'S OPINION

Capt. Roscoe Fawcett

LETTERS which have come pouring in from delighted readers indicate that they feel they are receiving their money's worth and more—in the new, enlarged and improved SCREEN SECRETS which went into effect last month. The many beautiful pictures and art studies in varied and attractive colors of rotogravure have come in for particular comment. The increased number of intimate features about the stars has also aroused tremendous enthusiasm among the stars. We are especially proud of these colored rotogravure art studies for they represent the fruits of long labor and study to make them available to our readers.

Real Progress

WE HAVE been reticent about giving full endorsement to the talkies since it is our policy to take into consideration the likes and dislikes of our readers. While they are still far from perfect, nevertheless we feel that the last few talkies to be released, such successes as The Singing Fool, Interference, and The Ghost Talks, have demonstrated that at last this new form of entertainment has reached a stage where it is worthy of acceptance by the public.

Inside of a year such amazing progress is promised for talking pictures that we will scarcely be able to recognize them as a distant cousin of the "talkies," which have been offered to us heretofore.

From now on every phase and angle of this fascinating new development in the industry will be fully covered in SCREEN SECRETS.

We are inaugurating a new department devoted entirely to the talkies. In addition, authentic articles on this subject will appear from time to time.

It is our intention to give our readers not simply the cut and dried scientific facts, but all the human incidents and little known developments which will be of interest to our readers.

Up to the Public

THERE is another angle to be considered in this talkie business, the angle of the scientists and engineers who are still toiling silently hidden away in little laboratories as they have been for years to perfect this new mode of entertainment for the public. J. A. Du Bray, secretary of the American Society of Cinematographers, who has made the development of talkies his life work for the past thirty years, said:

"It is entirely up to the public whether or not talking pictures are brought to a stage of greater perfection. If the public will realize that we are doing the best we can to perfect the talkies and will continue to patronize them in spite of their imperfections, they will make further progress possible because it will be commercially successful.

"If people had laughed at the radio when it was in its early stages and refused to buy any crystal sets would the improved electric radios of today have been possible? Decidedly not.

"It is the same with talking pictures. Make them commercially successful and the improvements will come."

A Treat in Store

BEGINNING next month we are happy to be able to offer you the life story of Lupe Velez, which in my opinion is perhaps the most astounding true life story that has ever come out of Hollywood. At nineteen Lupe Velez, the tempestuous little Mexican, has run the gamut of existence—she has tasted romance and adventure, disappointment and success, fame and hunger. She has faced death, angry lovers, and sudden fame with equal composure.

Although Latin to the core, Lupe's outlook on life is that of the modern American girl. You'll be delighted with the naive, natural way in which she tells her story, with her spontaneous outbursts of humor and drama.

The Talented Newcomer

LUPE VELEZ promises to be one of the sensational hits of all time. The fact that she has the natural emotional reactions of a child is one of her geratest assets as an actress.

In Masquerade, which she recently completed with William Boyd, Lupe suffered by being too clever a comedian. In the first scenes she was so uproariously funny that preview audiences refused to accept her as the tragic heartbroken little dancer in the heavy emotional scenes toward the end of the play.

However her magnificent performance leaves no doubt as to her promise. Perhaps in The Wolf Song, a romance of old California which she is now making with Gary Cooper, she will score even a greater hit.

Worried

W. J. LOCKE, the British novelist, who was imported at the expense of $50,000 to write a screen story for Norma Talmadge, is showing uncomfortable signs of activity.

He came over here to write a story. He wants to get busy and write it.

Such a thing is absolutely unheard of. Many highbrow authors have—ere this—been brought to Hollywood to write for the screen. The wise ones merely picked out a good golfing country club and visited the studios on pay days as long as their contracts lasted. Mike Arlen didn't even wait that long. He gave a dinner to the newspaper profesh and took the next train out. While Mr. Locke was on his way to Hollywood, Norma was on her way to the South of France to visit her sister Constance.

Colleen Moore as she appears in Synthetic Sin, a picture that marks her return to the flapper roles she formerly played. The ranks of screen flappers needed this ever-pert Irish addition badly, and it's to be hoped she'll stay put.

Mary Brian, who played opposite Buddy Rogers in Varsity, continued the partnership in Someone To Love. If this partnership continues in real life, as so many expect, it will again demonstrate the very special rewards to be had in the movies.

Alice White indicating that Hollywood life is an open book to her. Here she is with the famous diary in which she has kept an intimate record of her life among the movie stars.

Alice White's Secret Diary

Hollywood life from the inside—impressions and experiences in the city of gayety and grief recorded with amazing frankness in the famous "Little Red Diary," by the playgirl of pictures.

By Alice White

HERE is, we believe, the most astounding document that has ever come out of Hollywood, a daily record of the life of a motion picture star, of her adventures with other picture stars written with all the keen observation and witty comments which have made Alice White popular among picture people as well as on the screen.

Ever since the beginning of her career, Alice White has kept a pretty finger on the hectic pulse of Hollywood. She has recorded faithfully her encounters with all the stars as they flashed across her path while they were fresh in her mind; dinners with Gilbert Roland—parties at Betty Compson's—chance meetings with John Barrymore, Jack Gilbert, Colleen Moore, and many others.

Small wonder that the "Little Red Diary," as it is known in Hollywood, the book which is often talked of, but never seen, has had a hectic career. Several times unaccountably lost, once barely rescued from the flames, and once purloined by a desperate sweetheart who wanted to keep its pages from prying eyes, it was each time recovered by its author.

We are happy to give to the world for the first time this new slant on Hollywood life from the inside, this startling chronicle of a movie star's real life, written by a star who is herself a typically modern girl in accordance with our policy of giving the world facts about the fascinating film city instead of fluffy inanities.—THE EDITOR.

Aug. 30, 1926. Signed First National contract. This is the beginning. Here goes for a motion picture career. Much argument with Famous-Players. Hardly knew what to do. Decided have done best thing. Hope so. Many 'phone calls from mysterious person urging Paramount contract.

Sept. 3. Went over to see Mr. S., at Famous-Players.

Alice, with her chow dog, in the early days of her career before she dyed for her art.

Advised him I had signed with First National and he was quite annoyed, as he wanted me to play Clara Bow's twin sister in It. He predicted a great personal success. I told him there was no room on the screen for two people who were alike. I want to create my own personality.

Sept. 10. Went to a dog show. My darling Ching-a-ling won first prize in the puppy class. He is six months old Friday, the most adorable Chow in the whole world. Arthur was very sweet and chauffeured me around.

Sept. 14. Met Richard Barthelmess today. He is cute. John McCormick and Mike Levee introduced me. He sure gave me the once-over. Felt like a dog in a pet show. Hope he likes me well enough to give me the lead in The Patent Leather Kid.

Sept. 17. Went to the Cocoanut Grove with Gilbert Roland. Felt very lovely in a long black velvet dress and a Spanish shawl. He looked very handsome and we had a grand time. Mickey Neilan was there.

Sept. 19. Went swimming at the Gables with Ivan Kahn, my manager, and Gilbert. Gilbert is a peculiar boy. But aren't all men peculiar boys? He admired a ring I had and so I gave it to him. Wonder if he will wear it?

Sept. 26. Out with Ivan and Gilbert again. Went to the Plantation. Gilbert was very moody. He hurt my feelings, so I called a taxi, left them flat and went home. Drat men! We say that, but how many women mean it?

Sept. 28. Took my poor darling Ching to the doctors.

Sept. 29. My dog is recovering.

Sept. 30. Ching is better and I'm happier now.

Oct. 3. Went to church for a change.

Oct. 7. Put on make-up for banker's skit today. Went to Bowl for personal appearance. Was very panicky. Presented with a box of candy. Many stars made appearances. Monte Blue accused me of looking like Clara Bow, darn it! Wonder when they'll just recognize me for a change?

Oct. 8. Met Ray Rockett today. He talked to me of part with Dick Barthelmess. Oh, how excited I am over it. He told me I would have to dye my hair so it would go dark. Women have dyed for less. I pray that I will pass this test and will get this glorious chance. Oh, I do want to do this part more than anything.

Oct. 12. I'm now a red-head. Had my hair dyed henna for test. It looks quite pretty. Here's hoping.

Oct. 13. Took make-up test and a wig test. Hope they turn out O. K. Haven't been stepping much. Devoting myself to my art, as it were. Well, I may get my reward in electrics.

Oct. 14. Saw my tests. Fairly good. Wig looked like a million dollars. Have my fingers crossed. Hope I get this part.

Oct. 18. All excited. Bought my first automobile—Hup Straight 8. It's rather expensive. It's a darling car but I feel I will pay for it in time.

Oct. 21. Went over to United Artists studio to meet John Barrymore. He has always been my favorite movie crush. Wanted to tell him that but was rather tongue-tied. All I could say was "I—I am so glad to know you." Some day I hope I'll have enough nerve to tell him that I used to cut out all his pictures and paste them in my corner of the wall in boarding school.

Oct. 25. Met Jimmie Hall for the first time. He was very lovely. Joan Crawford and he are madly in love. Wish they weren't. I think I might like him, too. Saw John Barrymore again today. He came over and greeted me. Wish I could get to know him better. He is exceedingly fascinating.

Oct. 27. Bought a gorgeous white coat today. Everyone liked it a lot. Cost plenty. It's pretty, so who cares?

Oct. 28. Forgot what I did today.

Oct. 30. Dinner with Arthur tonight.

Oct. 31. To the theatre with Q. Why did I ever think he was clever? I'm afraid I'm getting tired of him, although he's an awfully nice person. I get sick of the same man all the time. Men are interesting for a time but after a while they get annoying.

Nov. 3. Out to a movie with Doug Fairbanks, Jr.

Nov. 5. To tea with B. He has a lot of s. a. He made violent love to me. These men . . . ! Q. was waiting when I got home. Was furious because I had been with B. Threatened to go over and knock him out. Does he think he owns me? Told him that. He grew absolutely white with fury. Said he was going out and kill himself. He'd make a good dramatist. Went for a drive in his car with him. Up one street and down another, arguing. Then down to the sea. Threatened to drive over the cliff. I wrenched wheel from his hands.

Alice in her first "hottish" love scene with Mutton Sills in The Sea Tiger, which caused her much embarrassment because they had hardly been introduced.

Wise and wide-eyed! That's Alice White, whose typically modern combination of innocence and sophistication is brought out in this recent photo.

What a different Alice White is this in her first starring role in "Show Girl." She has finally convinced producers that she has plenty to show.

Talked with him. Told him no man could dictate to me. Q. is too frightfully jealous. He cried. We had argued into the wee hours of the morning. Q. was shame-faced, penitent. Asked me to forgive him. I did. But I could never love him. Forgiveness with Q. is a nice passive emotion. Loving Q. is far too hectic.

Nov. 7. Tea dance at the Grove. Lots of fun.

Nov. 15. Cotton Club with an old beau. Thought I was going to be terribly thrilled. It was really very boring.

Nov. 22. Started my first picture, The Sea Tiger, with Milton Sills. Was very, very frightened. Billie Dove, Lew Stone and Millard Webb came on set and watched me with attitudes of: "Well, I've heard a lot about you, let's see what you're going to produce." Was petrified, but decided that my chance had arrived and I certainly was not going to flop. Had a very difficult love scene to do. Had to kiss Sills very hottish. Was rather bashful, as I had never said more than "How do you do?" to him. Anyway, I did the scene. Had a funny costume on, mostly undress. That made me more self-conscious. Colleen Moore is a peach. Caught her standing in the wings, applauding me. It encouraged me and gave me confidence to go through with it.

Nov. 23. Met Johnnie Hines. He's a lot of laughs.

Nov. 24. At the studio today, made up, but didn't work. Costume all wrong, or something. Made my first personal appearance tonight at the Cinderella Roof. Supposed to dance, but too panicky. I bandaged my ankle and told them that I had hurt myself working that day. Said I'd slipped getting out of a boat or something. I did. But that isn't where I landed.

Nov. 25. Dinner at home with my family for a change, this being one day I always like to celebrate at home. It's a rather thankful Thanksgiving this year. I feel it's the beginning of a lot of interesting things.

Nov. 27. Had to make more violent love to Milton Sills. Sure felt strange. Mr. Dillon, my director, was very nice to me. Hope my scenes are O. K. Dinner at Montmartre. Met Blanche Sweet, Mickey Neilan, Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor. Mickey told me I had a great future on the screen.

Nov. 28. My hair dyed again. And on a Sunday!

Nov. 29. My fourth day's work. Things felt much better to me. John McCormick and Carey Wilson came over to talk to me. They were very pleased with the rushes. It is nice to have people encourage you now and then. Sort of spurs one on to greater efforts. Party at the gaiety girl's house that night. Had a lot of fun. All of her beaux were there and I had fun chiseling, which seemed to annoy her. She put on a grand crying scene. I hope I get to be that good an actress some day.

Nov. 30. Saw my first rushes. Like some of them, but most of them were terrible. Oh, I do want to be a success.

Note: "Rushes" are the first showing of the film shot during the day at the studio.

Dec. 1. Worked today and then saw more rushes. Was very thrilled tonight. People are saying nice things about my work. Here's hoping!

Dec. 3. Worked today and was beaten up by Mary Astor. That girl swings a mean right arm.

When a string of famous British journalists recently touched Hollywood during a good-will tour of America, film Lili Damita, Ralph D. Blumenfeld, Joseph M. Schenck, Camilla Horn, Ronald Colman, Lady Peake, John Barrymore,

So This Is

INFLUENZA has raised havoc in Hollywood this winter. Although there were no casualties, there was scarcely a star in the business who did not have it. Dick Arlen was seriously ill and his wife, Jobyna Ralston, a picture girl with true domestic inclinations, insisted upon nursing him. Jobyna nearly passed away with her attack of it.

Wallace McDonald was in bed for two weeks with the disease. His recently divorced wife, Doris, rushed to take care of him. She spent three weeks in the hospital recuperating. But this double dose brought about rumors of reconciliation.

Evelyn Brent recuperated just in time to get married; Gary Cooper took down just in time to have the new gal-friend, Lupe Velez, nurse him.

Richard Dix was hard hit, but no one seems to know who ran to his bedside to console him. Perhaps it was the nurse who cared for him during his recent appendicitis operation. He has been seen taking her places.

Clara Bow is a football enthusiast. She went to San Francisco to attend the Stanford-California game. But after the game the influenza got her and when her train arrived in Los Angeles, an ambulance was there to greet it to take Clara to her home. She recovered okeh.

Baclanova was laid up and the minute she was out again it was rumored that she and her fiance, Nickolas Soussanain, were secretly married.

Even influenza may have its advantages.

The White Diamond

THE eyes of Hollywood are on Alice White's left little finger. On it is a sapphire, in which a perfect star gleams. It's Alice's favorite gem, in case you want to know, which gives her something in common with Napoleon. Poor Nappy, he wanted to conquer the world. But Alice, without half trying, has already conquered the movie world.

The ring is set in a plain band of platinum and is flanked by two large triangular-cut diamonds. Rumor has it that a wealthy young London chap slipped it on her finger.

Fire and Warmer

WHICH reminds us of another about Alice. A fire broke out at First National Studios. From the set where we were working it appeared that the projection room was on fire. There was much excitement. "Now, what caused that?" someone cried.

Director Santell looked up calmly and said, "Probably running some of our rushes." He had been directing Alice White.

Honeymoon—Sometime

ON THE same day that Dolores Costello was married to John Barrymore, a wedding also took place between Betsy Lee, formerly known as Bubbles Steiffel and Reginald Denny. The ceremony was held at the Hollywood Athletic Club in the presence of a group of friends.

The couple are forced to postpone their honeymoon on account of their picture work. They plan a trip to Honolulu when they can get away. After the wedding they managed to escape long enough to spend a week-end in Denny's mountain cabin.

IT SEEMS that Mary Philbin's romance with Paul Kohner has struck a snag. There are rumors in Hollywood that their marriage, which was scheduled for January, will not take place after all, even though their engagement was officially announced a few weeks ago just before Kohner sailed for Europe.

Hot and Bothered Loud

THEY were making talkies at the Fox Studio. Farrell and Mary Duncan were putting on a sizzling love scene.

"Breathe harder, honey," Farrell said, "This is a movietone."

Too Busy For Cupid

DOROTHY SEBASTIAN is so busy running from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to Quickie studios, working nights in one place and days in another, that she can't find time for her marriage to director Clarence Brown. It's no put up job, this constant discussion of the hardships that the motion picture gals have in saving time for the boy friends or their husbands.

Putting It On

LEW CODY was sitting peacefully having dinner in a Hollywood cafe when a young man approached and held out his hand in greeting.

"Hello, Lew," the young man said enthusiastically. "How's Mabel? That's fine. Say, meet a friend of mine, Lew, Mr. Blank, of Kansas City. Good scout. Drop in and see me sometime."

Lew was amazed by it all. He had never seen the man before in his life. As the stranger left the cafe he slipped over to Lew's table and whispered in that astonished gentleman's ear.

"You really don't know me at all. My friend thinks I'm a big shot out here in Hollywood and I just wanted to put it on. Thanks for playing the part."

And he walked out.

More For the Mailman

BILLIE DOVE'S fan mail has steadily been creeping up on that of Clara Bow. This last month the First National figures show that Billie's was a few thousand more than Clara's.

What does this mean? Are the sweet I'm-not-that-kind-of-a-girl actresses going to replace the hoydenish come-hither flappers?

Clara doesn't seem worried. Neither are we excited about it. It's good acting that keeps Clara where she is —not just being a flapper!

Billie has taken up painting as a side issue to the art of acting. Her first canvas work was a bowl of pansies, which she presented to her husband, Irving Willat, in commemoration of their wedding anniversary.

Her Public

DIRECTOR George Fitzmaurice is very nervous, almost temperamental. He was directing Colleen Moore. A great many visitors were on the set and they annoyed Mr. Fitzmaurice. "Get these people off the set!" he told his assistant.

Colleen spoke up, "Better leave 'em on. They're probably the only ones that will see the picture."

It Fell For Her

THE explosion of the powder plant at First National which killed two men, nearly did away with Corinne Griffith. She was entering the studio in her car and was only a few feet from the powder building when the accident happened. A huge rock fell within three feet of the front fender. Forrest Halsey, the scenario writer, who has adapted Saturday's Children stood a few feet from the other fender. Even with death groping for him he could not forget that his duty lay in complimenting his employer.

"Oh," he exclaimed with loud nonchalance, as fragments continued to fall about him, "even a stone must fall at the feet of Corinne Griffith!"

He deserved the reward of writing her next picture! And he got it!

Here and There

CLARA BOW'S father is spending most of his time somewhere between Hollywood and Vancouver. His steakhouse on Beverly Boulevard, which Clara recently gave to him, no more demands his attention when he gets a wire that his bride, Tui Lorraine, also thinks she needs him. You see, Tui is in Vancouver because she is a citizen of New Zealand and a British subject. She had been married three days when the United States Government found her time in this country had expired. She is trying to get re-entrance papers from Canada.

Achilles Was a Heel

THE playwright Arthur Caesar has been signed by Fox Studios to arrange his plays for the talkies. He was explaining scenes in Napoelon's Barber to Sol Wurtzel.

"This is where Achilles comes in—"

"Cut him out!" said Wurtzel. "Too much footage."

The Sun Dodges

A PRODUCER, new in the business and not wishing to be found out, charged up all errors to his little assistant.

They were taking a death scene out of doors. It was the high spot in the picture. The heroine had waited all day for the sun to shine that she might die. It was a long scene, she was to die hard.

Finally the sun came out and the scene was started. Before the heroine breathed her last the sun ducked behind a cloud, "There," yelled the producer, to his assistant. "You've lost the sun for me."

The dying heroine laughed right out loud and spoiled the entire shot.

Dorothy Gulliver and her adopted baby, Sheba, a Shetland pony just two weeks old. This seems to make it a horse on Dorothy.

Vamping Uncle Sam

LUPE VELEZ received a notice from the government to report for an income tax conference on the 15th of November. She remembered it on the 16th. Her friends were seriously worried about the oversight—but not Lupe!

"I'll just go down and smile at them and they won't do anything about it!" she insisted. We'll grant that Lupe is the best vamp in Hollywood but if her powers extend to vamping the Government we're going to present her with a bronze trophy.

Rare Bird

RAMON NOVARRO has his own ideas about the tropics. For instance, when he left for Tahati, to film his tropic romance, The Pagan, he promised his friends at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio, that he would bring back a "South Seas Whifflebat."

"The whifflebat," he explained, "is a tropic bird with a mournful cry. You can catch him only by going into the forest and shaking dice. When you shake the dice, the spot looks to the bird like a splick-bug, one of which whifflebats are inordinately fond. He comes down for it—and you clap the dice box over him. Dice boxes are in great demand among the natives—to trap the birds."

Don't say Ramon doesn't know his natural history.

Lucky Number

PERHAPS you wondered about Joe Murphy, the living embodiment of the chinless Mr. Andy Gump of the comics. And then perhaps you didn't. Anyway, you can't stop us now. Mr. Murphy drives a dashing green sedan on which, in golden characters, are emblazoned the words "Joe Murphy." This on the front door of the car.

The touching thing about the whole matter is that his license number is 348, the same as that of the celebrated Andy. And if you remember your comic history you will recall that dear sainted Old Doc Yak bequeathed the famous combination of numbers to Andy Gump when his creator, Sid Smith, decided to dispense with Yak and devote his life to the adventures of Mr. Gump.

Needs His Humor

JOHNNY HINES was a Smith man. He campaigned for Smith and was a good loser. As the votes began to come in avalanche manner for Hoover, he smiled. A Republican bystander admired his spirit and said, "Well, at least you have a sense of humor."

Johnny smiled, too. "All Democrats have. We have to have to stand all you Republicans."

Inside Looking Out

DAVID BUTLER, who took Nick Stuart abroad to film Chasing Through Europe, spent about as much time in jails as he did making pictures. It seems there is a law abroad which prevents the taking of films in European countries by companies from America. They posed as newsreel men but the police in Spain, England, France and one other country got wise and jailed Butler. He had a nice time getting out. But he managed to and came home with a picture.

Good Deed

SOME visitors were on a set where John Gilbert was making scenes for his next picture. He was in a costume similar to tropical uniforms worn by the British soldiers, and was somewhat embarrassed by the nudity of his legs.

"Oh, a Boy Scout picture," exclaimed a nice old lady. Gilbert did one good deed that day. He didn't curse.

Wrong Man

ALL through the sorrows of Al Jolson and "Sonny Boy" in The Singing Fool, Paul Bern refused to weep, although Mary Duncan, whom he had squired to the performance, had shed myriads. Blinded by tears as she walked the aisle, she turned to see the man at her right flourishing a large hanky.

"At last, you old reprobate!" she whispered, none too softly, sure that the man was Bern.

But the face that appeared, astonished, from behind the very large hanky was that of a total stranger.

Mary walked hurriedly on.

In Love With Love

A NEW romance is being talked about in Hollywood. The principals are Bessie Love and Eddie Foy, Jr. Eddie had to leave Hollywood to go east on a vaudeville tour, but Bessie is soon to join him according to reports.

A Wicked Lady

Corinne Griffith tells why she enjoys the sin in cinema, and announces her intention of leaving the screen.

By HARRY CARR

WICKED ladies seem to have shown Corinne Griffith the road to happiness.

At intervals during the years, I have had long heart-to-heart talks—like little oases of mutual understanding—with her. Each time it seemed to me that I saw a new Corinne Griffith.

Well—and we have just had another one. And I have left another Corinne, different from all the others.

Hers was a curious position when she reached Hollywood. A Southern girl of gentle breeding and accustomed to be regarded as of "the quality," she made her first success in pictures because of the pure marble beauty of her figure. She was in all physical essentials a Greek statue which moved.

I remember writing of her at the time; that she wasn't quite of this world; that I was convinced she did not go to bed at night; but that, when the lights went out, a fairy ship with silver sails came for her and she sailed off on perfumed seas propelled by winds that played Viennese waltzes.

She wrote me a grave letter of reply in which she said that I was laboring under a misapprehension; that she went to sleep every night in a regular bed; and that she had been known—when she had a sore throat—to wear a red flannel band soaked with camphor.

Corinne indulges in a very pretty pout in a scene from "Outcast."

TO MY dying day, I shall absolutely refuse to believe this. After all, one must cling to some of our beautiful illusions. Not, if they put me on a rack or made me listen to radio sopranos, would I ever consent to the idea that the lovely Corinne ever wore a red flannel choker soaked with camphor.

The next time she and I had one of our talks, I found her sitting all alone on a set where—as I remember it—she was making Black Oxen. She didn't see me when I first came up. Waiting there, I thought I had never seen so beautiful a girl or one so sad. Her face was so petulant, so discontented and so tragically sad.

She was, at the moment, helplessly sinking beneath the waves of the black waters of a bitter domestic tragedy. Her marriage was going on the rocks that seem to threaten most Hollywood marriages. She looked as though she were sitting there waiting for the keel to bump.

I saw her briefly now and then during the years. She was very much the same—a self-contained, reserved Southern young lady who might encounter tragedy; commit murder; die for a "Cause;" or be burned at the stake; but who, never in any conceivable circumstances, would use the wrong fork at dinner.

That was a good deal

In Corinne's snappy modernistic studio bungalow on the First National lot, special mirrors enable her to see herself as others do.

the matter with her pictures. They were always lady-like, always beautiful, but didn't tell you much. She had the unique experience of rising to the height of one of the richest and most famous stars of the screen without ever making a good picture. You always came away from her pictures thinking: "Well, it was pretty tame tea; but Corinne was lovely. I must see her again when she makes another picture."

I saw her again the other day. She was just starting in on the making of a new picture—Maxwell Anderson's play, Saturday's Children.

She had on a queer shabby little dress, very much out at the elbows; and her eyes looked a little wan and feverish, for she had just gotten up from a siege of the flu. But she had a look that I had never seen before. It was the look of one who has arrived. The look of one who has just finished a good dinner. The look of attainment. And, if I may be so risky and so rude, the look of the cat which has just swallowed the canary.

And this is likely to be the last time we shall see her; there is not likely to be a new kind of Corinne Griffith, for she is near the end of her screen journey. She tells me that she intends to make four more pictures in order to fill out a contract. Then she will probably retire from the business of play-acting It seems to be in the air; so many stars are intending to do the same thing.

It is symptomatic of a condition—of an era. The pictures, as we have known them, are coming to an end. Talking pictures have brought about another Year One. With the passing of the silent pictures, the stars do not care to risk their fame by starting the battle over again. The cards are being shuffled all over again; and there will be new face cards.

AS THIS is the last time we may ever have a heart-to-heart talk with Corinne, we may as well look her over — politely. As it were, out of the corner of our eyes.

She is about thirty years old, I should judge. She is very beautiful. It is not the vivacious, sparkling beauty of Clara Bow. She is languid, rather distant, well-bred and always the aristocrat. She always makes me think of a thoroughbred race horse—the same clean, slim limbs, the proud carriage and the game fighting heart that nothing can down—whether of adversity, sorrow or hard luck.

She has been married twice—once very romantically and unhappily to a motion picture director named Campbell. At present to Walter Morosco, the son of an old-time theatrical family dating back to the days of forty-nine in San Francisco when the theaters were in halls. He is very charming and amiable and very attentive to Corinne. He had a good start as a director of pictures, out gave up his own career to manage hers. He does so with success. He fights all her studio battles—which is one reason for the new light of relief and happiness you see in her eyes. Rather non-committal, cool, inquiring eyes that see much and tell little.

In spite of the wicked parts she's been playing, anybody can see that Corinne really prefers the home stretch.

According to all reliable reports, Corinne is very rich. She has made a pile of money out of her pictures—despite the fact that few of them were very good ones—and more out of Beverly Hills real estate.

She had a lovely home in Beverly, next door to Tom Mix. She sold it a year or so ago, at the top of the selling market, and went to live in a very fashionable apartment house in Beverly. Now she has bought another home in Beverly, forsaking the apartment house in high indignation because they wouldn't let her keep three dogs in the rooms.

Like most Southern girls of her social class, she has to have a raft of horses and dogs around to make her happy. In spite of her exquisite and delicate beauty which suggests shaded lights and drawing rooms, she is an out-of-door girl. She loves to work with a trowel and a spade in her rose garden.

She takes a greater part in the social life of the film colony than you would expect. There are circles within circles in Hollywood. There is a group of screen stars who, more or less, rotate around Corinne. Girls like Florence Vidor.

Out of my real regard for her, I would like to say that she is an angel on the sets and the pride and joy of each and every director with whom she works. But she isn't. She is very hard to handle and is very exacting and very determined to have her own way. The saving grace is that she has a clear, logical mind and thinks—as they say—like a man.

She left United Artists in a towering rage because she didn't like the way they made her last picture there—The Garden of Eden. At First National, the executives shudder when they know she is going to demand something. She is a lady who gets her way—never losing her poise or her dignity; but never losing her predominance of the situation, either.

I asked her whether—looking back over the battle—it had been worth while. I know what most stars would have replied. Most of them hate Hollywood; hate pictures and feel only bitterness for the path they have trod.

"Indeed, it has been worth while," she said. "I haven't one word to say against pictures. I have had many a hard scuffle; but so has everyone in every line of business. I am only grateful and glad of every experience I have had. I will always look back with a feeling of pleasure and thankfulness."

"Look back?"

"Yes; I have four more pictures to make. I imagine that will be the end."

Extra Money—

DOROTHY SPENSLEY

our staff correspondent, describes her day's work as an extra in the hectic whirlpool of a Hollywood set.

M. Leloir, expert on seventeenth century customs, teaching the ladies-"The Iron DOT SPINSLY," the voucher read. "Amount—ten dollars."

"Here ya are, Dorothy," said the stranger behind the cashier's wicket. "Take it over there and get it signed and then come back."

"This way, Dorothy," said a red-whiskered individual.

Well, here I am an actress. Me with my knock-knees and that vaccination mark. I am one of those with histrionic talent. Now I'll have to get me a hobby. And endorse cigarettes.

Here I am an actress in one of Mister Douglas Fairbanks' super-productions. I've got a dress weighing twenty pounds, and aspirations. I wanna be a Pola. Give me that laurel wreath. Who said it didn't fit?

I want a pink Rolls-Royce with lavender louvers. I want a permanent pass to fame, with stop-over privileges. I want a . . . I want a . . .

This is the way it started.

"Why don't you," said Mr. Fairbanks, stirring his tea in brisk fashion, "why don't you be a lady-in-waiting in my next picture, The Iron Mask? We are going to have Countess Bambii (or was it Zambesi? Or is there a Countess Zambesi? I never was much for geography. I always excelled in recess)."

"And," continued Mr. Fairbanks, "we are going to have—ah—er—Carlotta Monti, the Spanish dancer, in the court room scene."

So there you are. What could I do? I had always wanted to meet a real Countess. The town is full of synthetic Countesses, since that last bear raid. And I had just missed seeing Countess Peggy Hopkins Joyce Morner on her last trip to the coast. It happened there was a band concert at Griffith Park that day, and you couldn't expect me to miss that, could you?

Doug buzzed a button and up popped two assistants. One was "Lucky" Humberstone, and the other was Vinton Vernon, and we soon decided it was a situation that needed a woman's gentle aid. There are moments like that. "Come over tomorrow at eleven and get a costume," said "Lucky," making a quick getaway.

"These costumes weren't made for you modern girls," sighed May Hallett, the next morning. "The seventeenth century women lived on pastries and chatter. They were all curves. You girls have shoulders like coat hangers. Perfectly square," pulling in a handfull of cloth to give that voluptuous, cake-eating look. The effect was more like a pretzel, from nature's deficiencies, not Miss Hallett's.

All around were beautiful girls waiting to be fitted into brocades. Violet-eyed girls with soft, crimson, pouting lips. Blondes and brunettes, gazing with dewy, wide-eyed, blue-lidded innocence. That is, they were gazing.

They are ladies-in-waiting, too. Waiting on one foot and then the other. Waiting to try their costumes on. Waiting to go onto the set. Waiting for the camera to start grinding. Waiting for some director to discover them. Waiting to be starred. Waiting for the "breaks."

Hollywood is full of ladies-in-waiting. Only some do it more gracefully than others.

I am a lady-in-waiting. What am I waiting for? Well, just now I'm waiting for Fred Ryle to tell me what to do with this brown paste that looks like shoe polish. Already my face is smeared with sunflower-colored greasepaint. My brows are anointed. My lashes mascaraed. My lids painted. Grand Canyon at sundown has nothing on me.

They Earn It!

in-waiting how to curtsy while waiting in Doug Fairbanks' Mask."

" . . . and you should have your eyebrows plucked," continues Fred. But I think an actress should retain her individuality.

The brown shoe polish goes on my lips. They're using panchromatic film.

"Now you'd better get your wig. Up one flight of stairs and to the right."

The wigroom is full of blonde, brunette and auburn scalps.

Nina Roberts picks one up. It's ash blonde, with corkscrew curls to the fore of each ear. Around my head goes the wig band, a four-inch wide gauze on which is anchored the wig. The wig is crammed down. The curls adjusted, and so are the beau-catchers that rim the forehead. Pearls are linked about the puff at the top of the head. I look like grandmother's maiden sister. But you have to make some sacrifices to Art.

"There you are!" chuckles Nina Roberts.

And here I am, an actress. All I have to do is to take off my make-up and report for work at eight o'clock, sharp, in the morning.

Well, this wasn't too hard for Pola. Gloria had to do the same thing. And Colleen Moore. And Estelle Taylor. But did they have to wear wig bands and brown lipstick?

Came the dawn, at the usual hour. And eight o'clock on its heels. There should be no eight o'clock.

Dorothy Spensley, who put in the tough day described in this article, makes one more bow to her readers while she's still able.

Get your time slip. Get your costume. Run upstairs and get your wig. The dressing room is a long stall with lockers, presided over by an aged watchman, with a jangling ring of keys. A returned Casanova, perhaps, making his way through an earthly paradise of luscious forms. Lovely bodies scramble into satins and laces, curls flying, powder clouding.

"Locker man! Locker man! Will you lock this?" a haughty beauty of the court of Louis, a moment ago a bobbed-skirted flapper, commands.

Girls with sponges and bottles of pink liquid rush after sunburned shoulders, revealed by decolletage. Wig adjusters fly here and there applying hairpins, combing out curls—"wasps" were the style, the research department has just discovered. Wispy strands of hair.

My wig band is gone. Where, oh where, is my wig band? What will happen? Is this the end of my career? Did George Washington wear a wig band? Well, certainly he must have lost it at one time or another. What did he do, then, with his peruke? What did the Father of Our Country do when he lost his wig band? That's something to ask Rupert Hughes. What did he do . . . he do?

The clock is nearly at nine. Assistant directors are dashing in to tell the ladies-in-waiting of the court of good Louis the Thirteenth to rush to the bedchamber of their Queen, an heir is about to be born. What's an heir, when your wig band is lost?

Put the wig on without a wig band, then, and lose it in the middle of a big dramatic scene.

There is much whispering among the ladies of the court. Someone has just brought word that unless a great portion of feminine anatomy above the tight bodice is shown, the ladies of the court will lose their appointments, not alone their ten dollars.

"Not for ten dollars a day will I show an inch more," a lady of the grande dame type declares.

In some quarters stockings are hastily snatched from slim legs and crammed into brocaded bodices.

Last call. It's nine o'clock. Down on the set, everyone. Allan Dwan, the director, is waiting for you. We are going to start with the grand processional.

There are seventy-five, maybe a hundred, of us—dames and gallants. You can tell the men because they have their necks covered. One of the three pages in pink is a girl, French and Spanish. A beauty. I know she's a girl because she dressed in our dressing room.

We have to learn to bow, the royal curtsy. None of your synthetic dips. "Stand firmly on your right foot, point your left in front of it. Cut a wide circle with your left and bring it far to the back, bending, with right leg extended, toe pointed. Bend as far as you can to the floor." Ouch! Etiquette was never before like this.

The dames of the court are lined up and as M. Leloir, of France, original illustrator of the Dumas books, expert on seventeenth century customs, passes each one, she curtsies.

"Tres bien!" he says, but of course when a girl has natural grace it comes easily. Ouch! that old left leg.

Now we are on the set. Overhead the Kleigs are sputtering and casting blue lights. Assistants are darting about. Wardrobe women are making last minute repairs. Fans and long gloves are being passed out.

My partner is a nice Englishman with a beard.

"Now listen," said Harry Weil, one of the assistants, "when I shout 'two' you walk out that door with this guy. Remember, now, 'two'."

The camera is through that door, and there is the grand promenade and the stairs, just below the camera. Isn't this simple? He shouts "two" and my partner and I walk into the foreground. The camera grinds. And yet they say acting is hard. Why, it is to chortle. Ha ha! And they are paid thousands a week to do this. It's like bumping off a log or something.

All right. Here we go. People are all arranged. The lights sizzle.

"Ready, folks! You're talking. Act interested, lively."

Allan Dwan (seated, with megaphone) and assistants prepare to follow Doug with the camera when he enters the courtroom in a scene from The Iron Mask—"What the extras need," says Miss Spensley, "are iron legs."

My partner turns to me, "And-so-and-so-and-so-and-so-and-so-and-so-and-so-and-so-and-so-and-so." He sounds like a cracked phonograph record. I am amazed. Is the man daft?

He smiles, "and-so-and-so-and-so . . . Now you talk to me. Say something, just so your mouth moves. That's what we always do."

People are swishing about, majestically. This is the court of a Louis. Whoopee, Louis!

"Two!" someone bellows, and we start forward. "And-so-and-so-and-so-and-so," I coyly insist, waving my feather fan, nervously. My overskirt, trailing behind, feels like a freight train, overdue.

Some people are walking up the grand stairs. Nice party, this. Here come some pages, tooting on trumpets. Hurrah! we've made the door. Here comes a pompous boy in satins. Wonder if we can make it before the traffic signals change? Come on! try and cut across in front of him.

"Down! Down! Down!" Probably some fool extra they're yelling at. We go sublimely on. Almost knocked down the big boy in satins. All about are people sinking toward the floor. Gallants and dandies scrape their heels.

"Down!" yells one voice. Oh, it's Mister Fairbanks right there by the camera. See, it's Mister Fairbanks. He waves his arms up and down, like morning exercises. "Down!"

Oh. He means me.

It seems that the big boy in satins is the King and you are never supposed to cross a King. You're to drop everything and rush into a curtsy when he arrives.

Mr. Fairbanks and Mr. Dwan had a conference, then and there, and decided to title the scene immediately. They called it N. G.

Maybe it was just as well that Harry Weil gave No. Two to some other couple, because it really was rather tiring to walk across the floor that way, and, anyway, I'd rather wait awhile and learn all I can about the business, rather than to be prematurely featured.

Well, that's over. It only took a couple of hours to shoot that shot. And, really, I rather enjoyed standing in the background, it gives one a chance to think, you know. And how seldom one finds time to do that these days, what with the radio and reducing exercises and all that.

Now they are going to change the camera angle. The King is about to enter our reception room. It leads into the Queen's bedchamber, where the heir will soon be apparent.

"Remember, you make a pathway when the King approaches, and bow, keeping your eyes on him. Eyes on the King all the time! He stops to talk to Richelieu, but you stay bowed."

The King comes, he pauses, he stops. We bow. Will that old left leg bear up? It shakes. It quivers. What if my wig should decide to slip, too? The King still talks. He's smirking. The King is smirking. Isn't that funny? But what would he do if the leg of one of the ladies of his court gave way? Would he smirk if she sat, suddenly? Goody, he's leaving Richelieu, and well he should. Oh, what I know about Richelieu! Hurry, King. Hurry, hurry. The old leg can't stand this much longer.

Happy Ending

Dolores Costello and John Barrymore bring to a happy culmination in marriage the romance which started when John chose Dolores for his leading lady in "The Sea Beast."

By JANICE DAILEY

AN UNOSTENTATIOUS white altar—

Two figures kneeling before it. One in simple white satin; the other in conventional male afternoon attire.

Just three attendants. Helene Costello standing back and a little to the side of her sister, Dolores; Lionel Barrymore in the same relative position to his brother, John; Mrs. Mae Costello hovering about with the usual tears of a mother losing her first daughter in marriage.

The guests had been invited for three-thirty. They thought they were arriving for the wedding. But Mr. and Mrs. John Barrymore greeted them hand in hand; the wedding ceremony had been performed at three o'clock in the privacy of the family.

John's eyes were still wet with tears. "It was the biggest thrill of my life," he told each of his intimate friends as they congratulated him. And those friends declare that for once John Barrymore was not acting. His emotions, his tears which overflowed at each new word of encouragement, were genuine.

Mary and Doug, Ernst Lubitsch, Commodore Blackton, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Warner, Bess Meredith, Louis Wolheim, Michal Curtiz and a score of others—only the most intimate friends of the couple; witnessed these emotional feelings—and they were the only ones to enjoy the huge cake with its candied bride and groom tethered with a ball and chain, the one touch of humor in the solemn occasion.

LATE though they were for the ceremony, they pressed around to offer congratulations to the couple, to Dolores radiant and lovely, to John, still powerfully affected by it all.

Dolores was wearing a gown of cream chantilly lace over a slip of bisque satin of the utmost simplicity, her only ornament a marquis diamond pin holding a cluster of lilies of the valley in the hollow of her shoulder. She wore a wreath of orange blossoms in her hair. Barrymore was garbed in formal afternoon dress.

And even these friends were denied the use of their rice which they had, according to custom, brought with them! Mr. and Mrs. Barrymore slipped away through the garage and disappeared to the groom's Beverly Hills home while their friends waited in the front lawn wondering why they did not come out to the car, too obviously waiting.

The fulfillment of a three year romance—this wedding.

A notable union joining two of the outstanding families of the world of mimicry, Dolores, daughter of Maurice Costello, adored idol of movie goers a generation ago, sister of Helene; and John, brother of Ethel Barrymore and Lionel Barrymore, son of John Barrymore the elder and nephew of the late John Drew.

Are they happy? Just look at this picture of Dolores and John taken immediately after the wedding and judge for yourselves.

BUT LET us go back three years—a little more than three years.

Among the flickering luminaries of George White's Scandals were two specialty dancers, girls in their teens, gay, with eyes full of laughter. Their names were Dolores and Helen—but they were billed as the daughters of Maurice Costello.

They were playing in Chicago.

Jack Warner, executive of Warner Bros., stopped off en route from New York to Hollywood. The same Jack Warner that Maurice Costello had known, a wide-eyed, penniless boy about the New York theaters, now become a powerful producer.

He saw the two girls and he saw Dolores' wistful smile. He brought them to Hollywood.

John Barrymore was working at Warner Bros., then

John was an ardent wooer in one of these scenes from When a Man Loves.

He had a typical Barrymore contract which stated that all the people connected with his picture must meet with his personal approval.

They were casting for The Sea Beast. But the leading lady whom Warners had chosen for him did not meet with the Barrymore approval. Practically every leading lady in this city was brought before him. Again and again he smiled that quizzical Barrymore smile and shook his head.

Things were at a standstill. The star lolled in his dressing room while casting directors combed the ranks of the battalion of beauty and talent in a vain effort to please his fancy. Barrymore sat and smoked and shook his head.

Meanwhile the Costello sisters had come to Hollywood. But there seemed to be no place for them. They were lost in the ranks of the extras.

One morning, Barrymore, idling on the long balcony which runs across the front of the administration building at the studio, found his attention suddenly arrested by a fleeting vision of a blonde beauty in a group of extras below.

"Who is she?" he demanded.

He would not rest until Jack Warner had sought her out for him.

He questioned her, he studied her. Then at last one day he called Dolores to him and broke the news. He told her that he wanted her for his leading woman in The Sea Beast.

Dolores could not believe at first that this had really happened to her, an undistinguished extra, so lately a dancer in the Scandals, scarcely known except as the daughter of a once popular idol of the screen.

But at length Barrymore succeeded in persuading her that he had actually brought this miracle to pass. There followed long days of preparation for the part, days in which they existed only in the romantic past of the picture, while Barrymore imbued her with his conception of the lovely heroine, so that Dolores, appearing before the camera for the first time in an important role, seemed to be living the part instead of acting it.

Dolores in a regal pose.

IN THOSE days of preparation sympathy and understanding were born between them that formed the foundation of the love that was to come.

Barrymore was attracted by Dolores' humor, wit and charm, as well as by her ravishing beauty. He has often said that he considers her the greatest leading woman he has ever had on stage or screen. Dolores, on her part, felt the attraction of his dynamic personality.

That first picture assured her a place of prominence on the screen. She was an immediate sensation.

Barrymore was not yet free. He was still married to the former Blanche Oelrichs, New York society woman, who has made a reputation for herself as a playwright under the pen name of Michael Strange, although he had been separated from her ever since he came to Hollywood several years before.

Very quietly they set about getting a divorce, so quietly in fact that when Mrs. Barrymore received her final decree, no one knew of the fact.

This very quietness lead to complications on the eve of the wedding.

Hollywood was startled when Dolores Costello and John Barrymore appeared before the license clerk and filed declaration of intent to wed, as required by the California law. It was thought that Barrymore would not marry again., He gave his age as forty-one. Dolores gave hers as twenty-two.

Then the storm broke. An anonymous phone call informed the license clerk that Barrymore was not free to marry. Reporters besieged him for three days until the very date of the wedding, but could learn nothing more. Hollywood was agog with excitement. Such marital tangles had happened before.

There was Barbara La Marr who found an unsuspected legal bar to romance; Jacqueline Logan who sought a second husband to find she was still legally tied to a first.

In the face of all the sudden furore aroused by the rumors that he was still married, Barrymore maintained a characteristically detached and sophisticated position.

He was bombarded with telephone calls. Newspapers came out openly and demanded an explanation. Barrymore refused to make a statement. He let the hue and cry rage about him. He went quietly ahead with the wedding without a word to any one.

Dolores, too, was not without her difficulties. The day before the wedding some obscure young gentleman who apparently imagined himself a rejected suitor appeared on the lawn of her home and held forth at length regarding the impending ceremony. He was removed by the police.

At the eleventh hour there came a dispatch from Michael Strange in France, saying that the final decree had been granted several months ago.

The wedding day was the first period of serenity after days of turmoil. Love had leaped the hurdles, triumphing over obstacles in true story book fashion to reach a happy ending.

A joyful tale this, of love supreme finding its fulfillment.

But like many happy tales it has its shadow.

The shadow is the story of a broken, disappointed man, a gentleman and an actor of the old school who sought to remain the master of his own home—and failed.

He is Maurice Costello, once the glory of Broadway and the old Vitagraph Studios, and the father of two talented daughters, Dolores and Helene.

It goes back some time to the day when Costello came on from New York to join the family. He arrived to find John Barrymore the idol of his household. He was relegated to a secondary place.

COSTELLO did not approve of John Barrymore dancing attendance upon his daughter. At that time Barrymore was still married. He was considerably older than Dolores. Furthermore he was an idol of the screen, just the sort of an idol that Costello himself had been in his day.

He knew well the tempestuous life required of a screen and stage star. It had not brought him peace and happiness. How could Dolores find happiness, then, with a screen idol for a husband?

He felt that his position as head of the house, should make his advice heeded. He had been the sole bread winner for the family and had given the girls the best education possible. He had watched over them and cared for them.

But now things had changed. Dolores was the star instead of Maurice, and she was of age. Both of the girls were financially independent.

"Things came to a crisis one night," Costello declared afterwards, "I said to the family, 'I am going to step out of my character as the bystander and say something. I want Dolores to stop going with John Barrymore.'

"Dolores pointed out that she was of age and entitled to do as she pleased. There was nothing else to be said, so I left the house."

Maurice Costello never returned to live with his family. They would come to see him sometimes, but he did not go back.

Dolores spending a leisure hour in the yard of her magnificent Hollywood home with her Scotch terrier.

Dolores Costello as she appeared in the first scenes of The Sea Beast, with all her wistful beauty displayed to advantage.

Dolores and John in a scene from The Sea Beast, which ripened their love and brought Dolores to stardom.

Several months later he was awarded a divorce from Mrs. Mae Costello on grounds of mental cruelty.

On the evening of the day that Dolores Costello and John Barrymore announced their intention to wed, Maurice Costello was dining out with a friend. As he got up from the dinner table and went into the living room to get a cigarette, he heard these words coming over the radio—in the digest of the day's news—"John Barrymore applies for license to wed Dolores Costello." Was he dreaming?

He could not believe his ears. He could not realize that it was true—that this thing that he had tried so hard to prevent was happening.

Costello rushed to the telephone to call the papers. It was out of order. He ran out onto the street seeking a copy of the paper. It was only six-thirty. The early evening edition of the morning paper does not hit the street until seven-thirty. The next hour was perhaps the longest in the former movie hero's life. He lived over again every detail of the turmoil that had gone before in his life.

At seven-thirty the newspapers confirmed the radio announcement.

Maurice Costello went home to a nondescript bungalow on a typical Hollywood street of their nondescript bungalows. All night long he paced the worn carpet in the bare living room.

Now and then he looked out the window and up the street. Far above him on a hilltop he could see lights twinkling in a magnificent hacienda. Behind those walls which gleamed faintly white in the moonlight through the pepper trees, hasty and happy preparations were being made for the wedding.

There were pictures on the bare walls—pictures of Dolores and Helene—quaint old-fashioned pictures taken when they were little girls playing minor roles with their distinguished father.

"Helene, my baby, if only you would come to see your poor old daddy!" he murmured brokenly.

All night long he struggled with himself. At last as day was breaking he decided to do the generous thing for his daughter.

He sat down and wrote a long letter concluding with the following lines:

"I have given my forgiveness and I give my blessing for a long and happy wedlock. Lovingly, Dad."

He did not go to the wedding to give the bride away.

While John Barrymore was crying tears of surpassing joy at the vistas of happiness opening up before him after the storms he had weathered, alone in the solitude of his little bungalow, Maurice Costello, whose name was once magic on thousands of lips, cried, too, with no one to press his hand. Who knows what his emotions or his thoughs were?

Will this wedding, uniting two of the greatest acting families of America, which promises such happiness, bring peace with it as well?

Talkie Talk

A new department devoted to development and personalities in the sound picture movment—a feature in SCREEN SECRETS every month from now on.

WITH the importance of sound pictures looming greater every day and unfolding new possibilities constantly, no real fan can afford to miss the developments as they happen—especially now in the early thrilling days of this stupendous innovation. For this reason we are happy to place before our readers TALKIE TALKS, a department in which last-minute news and inside stories from the sound studios of Hollywood and New York will appear each month.—THE EDITOR.

Louise Fazenda and John Miljan are listening to the "playback" record of their voices in the first scenes of The Desert Song.

Quiet, Please!

MOST every day some amazing or puzzling experience with the "talkies" is encountered. Roy Pomeroy, in charge of their production at Paramount, has found, for instance, that a beaded dress creates a loud commotion; that the jingling of bracelets and the almost imperceptible creaking of strands of pearl beads also record. Which, strange as it may seem, is necessitating the acquisition of rubber jewelry.

The delicacy of these recording instruments was exemplified during the filming of Interference at the Paramount studio recently. Clive Brook was speaking lines before the microphone and becoming nervous, as many do, got his words tangled. In exasperation, because the scene had to be done over again, he slapped his hand against his leg. The slight concussion blew out every tube in the recording machine which had been attuned only to voices.

Norma Shearer, said to have one of the finest reproducing voices in Hollywood taking a test.

Five Songs In This One

IN LUCKY BOY, the forthcoming talkie starring George Jessel, this well-known singer-actor will sing five songs. One of them will be the theme song called My Mother's Eyes.

What Are the Sound Waves Saying?

PAUL LENI was filming The Last Warning for Universal with Laura La Plante. The day's "rushes" were run in the projecting room. The star's words seemed at times to be ejected through her teeth. There was a little "cheet cheet" at the end of some lines and occasionally a sort of suppressed whistle. Again, when she was saying nothing at all, there came a "sui-sui" from her lips.

"Say, Laura!" interposed Leni, "what's the idea of all the whistling? That isn't in the script. English, 'aren't spoke' that way, you know. I never noticed that you try to whistle and talk at the same time."

"I don't!" replied the blonde star indignantly. "That whistling isn't mine."

The same thing occurred during the showing of the next day's rushes. Only, the entire company seemed to have gotten the "cheeping" habit. They cheeped at everything. Which started an investigation immediately by studio officials.

Here is the vast new Fox Studio plant, recently erected, devoted exclusively to the production of sound and talking pictures. The buildings are as follows: (a) administration building, (b) projection room, (c) recital hall, (d) cutting room and test laboratory, (e, f, g, h) sound-proof stages, (i, j) air conditioning building, (k, l, m) engineers' buildings, (n) transportation building, (o) generator building, (p) cooling tower, (q) electric building, (r) drafting room building, (s) foundry, (t) paint shop and prop department, (u, v, w) directors' offices, (x) garage, parking grounds.

An electrician discovered that sparrows in the studio eaves were doing their bit for the microphone. The singing of the birds was barely audible and yet the sensitive instrument picked up their notes and reproduced them. Naturally, some of the scenes had to be re-taken. Universal now has its sound-proof stages. Shortly all studios will be thus equipped.

Making It Harder

THE long-established list of preferred extras, kept by all studios, is coming in for drastic revision. As a result of the talkies, the lists must now be prepared with special emphasis on the vocal qualifications of the extra, and tests of the most promising extras are now being conducted. Heretofore it's been a matter of personality, type, and wardrobe, but now the casting director decides after hearing what the extra has to say for himself.

IN AN effort to determine whether or not the public likes talkies, SCREEN SECRETS will offer Five Dollars each month for the best letter by a reader giving a frank opinion of the talkies.

Thumbs Down

A VIGOROUS protest against the talkies comes from that unfortunate group, the deaf mutes, who contend that the action of pictures is now much slower and that without explanatory subtitles they are difficult to follow. And that if it's a question of lip reading, they'd prefer stage performances for the color and closer proximity of the actors.

Voices in Arcadia

DOLORES DEL RIO has recently been going over the sound stages at the United Artists studio, having them explained to her in preparation for the forthcoming picture, Evangeline, in which she will star. At present she is expected to sing a song or two in this picture, she being equipped with an excellent and well-trained voice. Having heard Mary Pickford's voice tests, Dolores reported enthusiastically that America's Sweetheart has a voice of arresting beauty and tone.

A New Film Roster?

ANOTHER outstanding talkie voice is that of Norma Shearer, and this despite the fact that she has had no stage experience whatever. But hers is the exceptional case; drastic changes seem certain to occur in the roll call of stars as we know it now. Judged by successes thus far, these seem scheduled for permanent top positions: Al Jolson, Lionel Barrymore, Gladys Brockwell, Edward Everett Horton, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson, Vondell Darr, Johnny Arthur, Evelyn Brent, William Powell, Clive Brook, Bert Lytell and Doris Kenyon.

What, No Girls?

AS IF the novelty of sound were not enough, the Movietone feature Friendship will have no girls in the picture. Edward Earle, back in Hollywood after a year in New York, will play the leading role, and others in the cast include Robert Edeson, Donald Gallagher, Carl Miller and Joseph Striker. The absence of feminine appeal proves once more that anything's possible in Hollywood.

Not So Young

TALKING pictures are not as new as the public imagines. The principal on which it depends, the photographing of sound waves, was known fifty years ago.

In 1909, Charles Pathe, president of Pathe Films, sat in a projection room in his Paris office while a picture that talked was run off before him. It was a breathless RAMON NOVARRO has found an excellent foil for his swarthy comeliness in the blonde beauty of Anita Page. They played together in The Flying Fleet.

Ramon's Dreams Come True

A musical career on which he is about to embark has been the rainbow in Ramon Novarro's sky.

By HARRY CARR

Ramon is a dreamer, as can be seen from this picture, but he has the happy faculty of making his dreams come true.

RAMON NOVARRO'S dreams always come true.

I have never—in all my experience—known another case like his. As a dreamer, he calls his shots like a pool player.

His whole life has been one long series of little goals—little hills to be climbed. And I suppose that this is the real story of any man's life: what his heart called for, and what he got or didn't get. What we know of the average man's life is just the stuff he keeps in the show window.

I happen to know this other life of Ramon's.

It is a valuable story for any one to know and to hear because Ramon says that any one—holding to the right thoughts—could do what he has done. He ascribes all his success to his philosophy. His looks, his talent, his charm—they were just the tools he used; his philosophy was the motive power.

AND so I am going to tell you the story of this little Mexican boy who started with everything against him and every obstacle to climb; who took one bunker after another until at last he has achieved the one great golden dream that—back of all his other dreams—has been the rainbow in his sky. This was his ambition to be a grand opera singer. He has just signed a contract that will make this dream come true. Under the terms of it he will be on the screen half the year; the other half he will give to music. Nobody ever before tackled grand opera under such favorable circumstances—the ambitious singer starving on $5,000 per week.

Ramon drank in mysticism and philosophy with his mother's milk. He was born in Durango, Mexico; and in his veins ran the blood of an ancient and forgotten race. The one great pride of Ramon's heart is that he can trace his descent back through the Aztecs to the Mayans who once inhabited the lower part of Mexico and Central America.

They were a very remarkable people . . . as we know from the ruins of their empire. What is to be especially stressed in this story of Ramon Novarro, however, is that they had great knowledge of such arts and sciences as astronomy, numerology and so on. They knew certain properties of higher mathematics fully 1,000 years before European scientists had figured them out. To this day, no calendar has ever been produced which recorded time as accurately and perfectly as the ancient Mayan calendar found in their jungle-grown ruins.

These were the people to whom Ramon's heart reaches back. I once wrote a story in which I suggested that Ramon had been one of the beautiful boys who—every year—were sacrificed on the high altars of the Mayan temples—their hearts cut out of their living bodies and the bleeding body then thrown into the dark depths of the sacred lake of Chichen Itza. And Ramon more than half believes it.

Born, as I say, near the one town where the Aztec language is still spoken—or twittered, for it sounds like the twittering of birds—Ramon was sent as a child to a Jesuit College to be prepared for the priesthood. There—although he did not remain to take his holy orders—he learned many mysterious things not given to the knowledge of many men.

WHEN he came to California to try to break into the movies, Ramon's first thought was to set all his mental conditions right.

His family name was Samaniegos. He found, upon experiment, that it did not work out right in numerology. So he persuaded the family to lop off the final "S."

When he touched the fringes of Hollywood, however,

All the time that Ramon has been working in pictures he has kept up his study of music on the side. Besides his vocal accomplishments, he is also a master of the violin.

he found that it wasn't a name worth a hang for the screen so he changed it to Novarro. Of course the right way to spell this old Spanish name is with an "A"—Navarro. But this didn't work out correctly in numerology. So he made the A into an O.

Having got his bearing right for the voyage, he fixed up his colors. He is always careful in this regard for he is a firm believer in the power of colors on the mind.

For instance, he once visited a little country place where I live most of the year in a mountain valley near Los Angeles. We were standing on the top of a little hill when Ramon turned to me curiously.

"Did you say this place was very soothing to you?"

"Yes—very."

"Do you know why?"

"Sure; nobody to bother me."

Ramon smiled. "That hasn't a thing in the world to do with it. What color do you see when you look around you?"

I looked across the little valley to the mouth of the Big Tujunga Canyon; then west to the San Fernando Mission and east to the snowy heights of Mount San Antonio. Everywhere I saw a soft violet mist—filtered down into the little valleys like old wine. And so I told him.

"Violet," he repeated. "That, my dear Harry, is why the place is soothing to you. It's the color."

HAVING arranged all these details, Ramon started to batter the gates of fame and fortune. His first goal was dancing. It came naturally to his slender feet; but the experiences he had trying to get a chance would have turned back a boy with less of a feeling of destiny.

Ramon tells me that he never had a qualm during all these days as to his final success. He says that every time he was turned down, he always said to himself: "I didn't get that particular thing because Providence had something better for me to wait for."

During his toughest times, he was always fortified by a little story they told him in the Jesuit College—or perhaps it was his mother who told him. Anyhow, this was the story:

A man burdened with a woe too great for him to carry prayed for light and for help. In a dream Christ came to his bedside and asked him what was the matter. He said that his cross was too great for him to bear; he could stagger no longer under it.

"Come," said the Christ in compassion. He led the afflicted man to the edge of a great pit. The pit was filled with crosses. Christ said that the man might pick out his own cross inasmuch as the old one was too heavy.

In a corner of the pit, the man saw among the crosses a little tiny, tiny, tiny cross. He almost hesitated to ask for it; but at last mustered up his courage and said he would take that one.

"That," said Christ, "Is the one you are already carrying."

I have told this little story because the lives of men are fortified and made strong by various thoughts; each one different. This was Ramon's strength.

In this early day one of his cruelest disappointments came at the hands of Mary Garden. She was singing in Los Angeles. He couldn't get a chance to see her; so he waited in front of the theater until she came out after the show. He rushed up to her as she came down the steps—almost flinging himself at her feet.

"Oh, Miss Garden," he cried, "Please give me a trial. I can dance, sing and act."

"What a very remarkable young man," said Miss Garden, coolly, as she swept on past him.

I saw him get another cruel blow in the Griffith studio. He had been waiting for a long time for a try-out and at last it came.

Ramon had made up a little play in which he played

Now It Can Be Told!

Clara Bow—She was easy to recognize, wasn't she? Clara is still the big-hearted kid she was before she acquired movie fame.

Marceline Day—A trifle difficult for some fans to name. She first played in bathing girl comedies and is reported engaged to Richard Dix.

Marie Prevost—Most fans knew her. Too bad Marie's married life with Kenneth Harlan couldn't last. She is now getting a divorce.

Janet Gaynor—Those who saw "Seventh Heaven" identified Janet. She's going to marry soon. And the man's a young San Francisco attorney named Lydell Peck.

June Collyer—This is the girl who was difficult to name. And strange, too, as she is very popular. She is the young lady who gets specially designed dresses for each picture.

Buddy Rogers—Everybody knew Buddy, the boy who, in spite of his stardom, lives on $18.00 per week lodgings at the Hollywood home of a fraternity brother.

SCREEN SECRETS Magazine's $1500 "Guess Who" Contest, has closed with the entries still uncounted. Did you guess the names of the six stars correctly? Here their identities are revealed—with news of this big contest.

THE stampede is on! Hundreds upon hundreds of letters from film fans the country over—and many from foreign ports, too—have literally swamped this office with answers to SCREEN SECRETS Guess Who Contest which started in the December issue.

And hundreds upon hundreds more are coming! Each hour of the working day finds more of the heavy canvas bags packed to the full with answers—the winning ones included, but who knows where—added to the truck loads that already have been unloaded.

Never in the history of SCREEN SECRETS Magazine has there been such a humdinger contest. Though perfectly simple—any movie fan in the world would have had a good chance of winning a prize — the Guess Who Contest has struck the popular appeal, thus following the tradition of SCREEN SECRETS.

The letters from the fans, telling who their favorite stars are and why, were particularly interesting. You will remember that it was largely on the basis of these letters that the prizes were to be awarded—after the correct identification of the stars had been made, of course. The letters ranged widely both as to choice of star and reasons for approving that star above all others; some were mere expressions of personal liking, while others were serious critiques of the actor's art. Certainly many stars will be surprised at the impressions they have created in the minds of some fans—impressions gathered from the far corners of the earth and from people whose opinions are rarely expressed in print. Some of these letters will appear in the March issue—don't miss them.

Film fans from everywhere have participated in it. From the smallest hamlet and village of the country to sunny California and metropolitan New York contributions have arrived. Even movie fans of Canada, England, Hawaii, France, Belgium and other foreign parts have tried their memory and skill for the big prize money.

A special staff of clerks has been added to the Contest Editor's department in order to assist the judges in finding the twenty-four winning answers and letters.

The Contest Judges are tabulating the answers now, weeding the wheat from the chaff, and facing a colossal job to segregate the entries into the eligible lists. It is hoped that their announcment of the prize winners will be ready for the March issue. Watch for the next numbers of SCREEN SECRETS—will your name be among the winners?

Winners of this Contest Announced in Coming Issue

Will your name appear in the next issue as winner of one of these big cash awards? Here are the prizes that will be given to the winning contestants—

GRAND FIRST PRIZE	$750.00
SECOND PRIZE	300.00
THIRD PRIZE	200.00
FOURTH PRIZE	50.00
ALSO TWENTY PRIZES OF TEN DOLLARS EACH	200.00

The House that

Here is the architect's drawing of Harold Lloyd's new home which overlooks the estates of other movie stars in beautiful Beverly Hills.

CASTLES in Spain are of flimsy stuff and usually fail to materialize. The exception proves the rule. Harold Lloyd is erecting his house of dreams upon a hilltop overlooking Beverly Hills. And the mansion that Harold is building is far more beautiful than most dream palaces.

Half-hidden among the trees that adorn the summit, you do not glimpse the magnificence of the palace until you enter the rock-walled garden and its full glory bursts upon you suddenly. At the extreme end of the garden stands a mosque-like observatory. At its base are rare potted plants and citrus fruits in fine old urns. A lily pond mirrors the California sky and looking over the balustrade you see Beverly Hills spread out like a map before you, with the soft purple outlines of Catalina Islands showing in the dimming distance.

Coming up the walk you pass the decorative rock cascade down which the water falls with a delightful murmur. In the center of the forecourt is an immense bird bath. The entrance court on the left is graveled and decorated with brilliantly flowered plants and palms, with a large sculptured fountain in the center. An iron stairway leads up into the reception hall which staggers you with its immensity and grandeur. The walls within are of hand-carved walnut and all hardware is gold-plated.

ON THE extreme right is the French drawing-room. Immediately opposite is a decorative spiral stairway leading to the master bedroom suite directly above. Turning the corner you enter the library, whose massive beam ceilings and walls are heavily carved in early Tyrolean. There is a long bench around the room beneath the arched windows where story conferences will be held. Behind the carved panelling at the entrance of the room is a dumb-waiter. Each room boasts a massive fireplace with mantels of imported Italian marble.

Thoughtfulness of others and a desire to share the pleasures of his abode with his family, friends and servants have been woven into the warp and woof of Harold's building plan. This is apparent the moment you set foot

Even the old oaken bucket is brought up to date at Harold's house.

Laughs Built

Harold Lloyd will soon occupy his new estate, the most magnificent in Hollywood, built from the laughs of the world at the antics of a freckle-faced boy.

By MARY SHARON

inside the palace. The living room illustrates the keynote of the entire scheme of the estate. It is spacious, with walls of solid walnut, hand-carved and inlaid. The ceiling is ornate and decorated in gold leaf. A huge fireplace makes for friendliness and warmth. The room is done in early Tyrolean, elegantly decorated. At one end, stands a large pipe organ. At the other is a hidden projection room where film features may be shown. A private underground passage has been made for the servants so that they may enter at the rear and see the films without disturbing the guests. There is an underground passage for the convenience of the operator also, who can pass to the projection room without intruding in the living room.

To the right of the living room is the orangerie or sun-parlor. The floors are of marble and the dome shaped ceiling and walls are being decorated by an internationally famous Italian artist. The breakfast room and dining room are of gumwood and are decorated along the same scheme as the orangerie, the color scheme being palest green with floral decorations in warm pinks and flame.

THE kitchen has every modern electrical help, including dishwasher, Frigidaire, and electric range. The drain boards are of solid mahogany.

The servants' quarters are on the western extremity and comprise a suite of seven rooms with six baths.

The house is of early Italian, built around an elaborate inner court which has an ornate marble fountain in the center surounded by potted plants and palms and a brick and stone courtyard. Enormous arched glass doors and windows open into the courtyard from every room and the outer walls are decorated with brilliantly colored mosaics. Each bedroom has a pastel-colored tile bathroom with built-in scales and marble bath and shower. There is also a full suite of closets and drawers for each bedroom. These are of gumwood lined with cedar.

There is a mahogany check room where guests may check their wraps at formal dinners and banquets. There is a glassed-in sleeping porch for each bedroom suite. There is a diet room with solid mahogany drain boards and tier upon tiers of drawers and shelves. There is a steam room of tile where the family and guests may avail themselves of steam baths.

The master bedroom is of hand-carved walnut as is the adjoining dressing room. Mrs. Lloyd's French boudoir is on the left of the master bedroom with an adjoining dressing room which boasts a smaller room entirely lined with mirrors.

LITTLE Gloria's suite of rooms faces the west. The nursery is a dream of beauty with its tiny toy cupboards, bookcases and shelves and dainty mantel. Her bedroom and sleeping porch are decorated in pastel colors and follow the same scheme as the others. Her bathroom is ravishingly beautiful and fit for a small princess with its pastel colored bath and marble decorations. Directly over the bath is a life-size inlaid replica of little Gloria herself, chasing butterflies in a flower garden. Glass encased scales are built into the walls for her convenience, similar to the built-in scales that are in the other bathrooms.

Care and discrimination have made for permanence in this house that laughs built. The material that is going into its making will be as good or better one hundred years from now than it is today.

A subterranean passageway, reminiscent of a mediaeval castle, leads underground to the game room, which is sound-proof. Here in the large stone-walled room, guests may disport themselves in whatever sport or pastime they desire; secure in the knowledge that they cannot disturb others or be disturbed themselves.

One matchless corner of the estate has been set aside for little Mildred Gloria. Here stands a thatched roof bungalow, completely furnished with every toy that might delight the heart of a child. There is nothing left to be wished for. The four poster bed in the spacious little rose-curtained bedroom is large enough for a child to sleep in. There is a small walnut vanity and chest to complete the suite. Dolls without number of all kinds and sizes inhabit the tiny house. There is a grand piano and electric range—everything.

On the lawn stands a tiny couch hammock. There is a stone slide, from the top of which the man in the moon looks out to tell the time of day. There are sand tables, swings, bars and trapezes, and a real little oaken bucket hangs in a real little well, where Mildred Gloria may draw her own water when she grows thirsty. The outside entrance is walled in European fashion. On the garden gate are the words "Come in and play."

The thing that impresses the casual visitor is the class of cars in which the skilled artisans and laborers come to work. There are no flivvers in the large number parked around the entrance. Only the most skilled workers have been employed to execute this dream in marble and stone. The mural artist who is decorating the orangerie, breakfast room and banquet room is being paid seventy-five dollars a day and he is in no great hurry to complete his work. Other workers are paid commensurately for their labor.

Fifteen gardeners are employed on the estate which comprises sixteen acres. Five years have passed since work was begun on it. It is now nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy in April.

Beyond little Gloria's bungalow is the tennis court with its matchless green stone floor. On the left is an open air pavilion decorated with variegated stone and colorful mosaics. Here lunches may be served or amateur theatricals indulged in. On the summit of the hill above the tennis courts is a rest room similar in design to the observatory in the fore court.

ON THE right of the mansion a series of winding stone steps lead down to the plunge. There is a wading pool for little Gloria and the entire pool is made of green-blue stone which gives the water a deep aquamarine blue color. The plunge is lighted electrically under water so that midnight swimming parties may be safe as well as enjoyable. It is easily the most beautiful pool in California. The bath house is constructed of rose-colored

Cupid's Bulletin

What—Again?

GRETA GARBO and John Gilbert, just after the wise ones had decided their romance was a thing of the past, have fooled everyone again. When Greta decided to pay a visit to her native Sweden, many thought that her romance with her former director, Maurice Stiller, would be revived. But Stiller died in Stockholm, and the screen's flaming pair are almost constantly together again. Tricky fella, this guy Cupid.

Another Crash

GARDINER JAMES and Marion Blackton, daughter of producer Stuart Blackton, have agreed to divorce. This comes as a surprise to Hollywood as the pair had been considered the film colony's "married sweethearts." Married in 1926, after James made a dramatic entry into Hollywood penniless, two years finds them ready to call it awful.

Next!

JACK DOUGHERTY, actor and former husband of both Barbara La Marr and Virginia Browne Faire, is apparently considering a third venture. The object of his attentions this time is Lottie Pickford, sister to Mary. The fact that they were recently held up by thugs while together, has not diminished his ardor.

Feathering New Love Nests

FAY WRAY and John Monk Saunders, the author, who were recently married, have purchased the beautiful home of Florence Vidor and will arrange it for their permanent residence in Hollywood. Miss Vidor has bought a new house which will be in readiness when her husband, Jascha Heifetz, returns from a concert tour of Europe.

Speaking of Opposites

ONE of the most interesting of Hollywood's many romances is that of Lupe Velez and Gary Cooper—can you imagine a greater contrast than the volcanic Lupe versus languid, stoical, westerner Cooper?

Rough Going

DURING the course of their recent European tour Dolores Del Rio and her director, Edwin Carewe, experienced temperamental differences that resulted in Dolores and her mother returning to this country alone, after Carewe. Although frequently rumored that Carewe was in love with his protege, Dolores has always denied reports of their marriage. Since the Mexican star is to appear in Evangeline, under Carewe's direction, they'll have to be careful that no noise of battle gets into the sound-recording devices.

More Wedding Bells

CUPID had his day in the film colony recently when John Barrymore and Dolores Costello received the nuptial vows at the Costello home, while over at the Hollywood Athletic Club, Reginald Denny and Betsy Lee were joined in wedlock. Both couples have had to postpone their honeymoon trips on account of work.

NOAH'S ARK, Warner Brothers' stupendous creation, sailed magnificently into the harbor of Sid Grauman's Chinese Theatre. At four o'clock in the afternoon, crowds began to gather, armed with folding chairs and boxes; by night, gorgeous rainbow lights—cunningly contrived by Frank Murphy, lighting expert—flooded Hollywood boulevard from high points in the surrounding hills.

Wonder of wonders, there was no traffic congestion! With each set of gold-colored tickets came a police pass for the car, and from eight o'clock on, all cars without this magic sesame were rerouted off the boulevard within a certain radius. Louise Fazenda twinkingly observed that this forethought spoiled many grand entrances, as stars who had counted on traffic holdups, arrived on time to their secret chagrin.

Many dinner parties were given before and after the premiere. At the Montmartre, every table was reserved. Among the hosts of large groups were Mr. and Mrs. Jack Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Willat (Billie Dove), Miss Dolores Costello, Miss Sue Carol and George O'Brien. Joseph Schenck entertained at the Roosevelt, his guests including the Samuel Goldwyns, Alexander Kordas (Marie Corda), Captain Alistair McIntosh (you remember the captain was Constance Talmadge's former husband), Lili Damita and Camilla Horn. Bess Meredith's party after the show with Michael Curtiz as honoree was a brilliant affair. Mr. Curtiz directed Noah's Ark and was a proud and happy man that night.

In the theatre itself, one's eyes became blinded counting the stars. Towering Monte Blue was easily discerned, and Noah Beery, who registered an instantaneous hit in the picture, was there with his husky young son; the two newlyweds, Fay Wray and John Monk Saunders; the lovey-doveys, Joan Crawford and Doug Fairbanks, Jr.; and the perennial sweethearts-tho-married, Vilma Banky and Rod La Rocque. Noted in George O'Brien's party were Olive Borden and Larry Kent; in Dolores Costello's, her mother and sister and John Barrymore. Buster Collier with red-haired Audrey Ferris. Lina Basquette and Peverell Marley.

Paul McAllister (Noah, in the production) received a special little ovation of his own when Conrad Nagel, as master of ceremonies, explained why Mr. McAllister could not join the other players on the stage for presentation but would rise and bow from his seat. Paul was the victim of an automobile accident a few hours before the opening; two girls were racing their cars and collided with him at an intersection, leaving the actor with a broken nose and dislocated shoulder. Despite these painful injuries, he bravely attended the premiere.

WITH twelve hosts, the welcome-home-from-Europe for Miss Marion Davies was bound to be a success. A dinner-dance at the Ambassador was given and since Miss Davies had received a famous decoration in France, the Parisian cafe idea prevailed as the decorative motif in the French ballroom where the fete was held.

The dozen hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Leonard (Gertrude Olmstead), Mrs. Louella Parsons, Miss Bebe Daniels, Charlie Chaplin, Harry D'Arrast, Joseph Schenck, George K. Arthur, Matt Moore and Harry Crocker.

One hundred and fifty guests were invited and among the more noted were Messrs. and Mesdames Harold Lloyd, Richard Barthelmess, Irving Thalberg (Norma Shearer), Antonio Moreno, Adolphe Menjou, and Irvin Willat (Billie Dove); Countess De La Falaise (Gloria Swanson—the marquis is still in France)—Lili Damita, Aileen Pringle, Josephine Dunn, Loretta Young, Marie Dressler, Lila Lee, Betty Bronson, Sue Carol, Dorothy Mackaill and Claire Windsor; Count Andres de Segurola, Nils Asther, Charles Farrell, Ralph Forbes, Robert Castle, Jack Gilbert, William Haines, Charles Rogers, D. W. Griffith and Eddie Sutherland.

THE William Fox Movietone City was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on a certain Sunday this month. Over 65,000 people gathered within the beautiful walled city to watch lovely Mary Duncan unveil a bronze placque and listen to brief, interesting speeches by the Rev. Neal Dodd, Dr. Isadore Isaacson, Rev. Father Joseph Sullivan, Oscar Lawler and George L. Eastman.

Later, hilarity reigned as a most amusing radio announcer introduced scores of stars. Judging from the applause, Louise Dresser and Louise Fazenda were the two most popular actresses, with little Janet Gaynor a close second. J. Farrell MacDonald made a hit with his "bit of chat." He said that his elocution teacher had told him there were three essentials in public speaking—"Stand up! Speak up! Shut up!" Sparkling Sue Carol, Lois Moran, Sylvia Fields, Helen Twelvetrees, Nancy Drexel, Sally Phipps, Eddie Lowe and Lilyan Tashman, George O'Brien, Victor McLaglen and Bodil Rosing, all responded graciously to the summons. Marjorie Beebe obligingly made a few of her funny faces and Sammy Cohen earnestly hoped that his "mamma and papa were listening in."

DESPITE a pea soup imitation of a London fog, Paramount's premiere of their first talkie—Interference—at the Carthay Circle Theatre, was a gala affair, attended by hundreds of celebrities. The four stars—Evelyn Brent, Doris Kenyon, Clive Brook and William Powell—received a tremendous ovation when they appeared on the stage at the close of the performance. Clive Brook stepped forward and, speaking for himself and fellow players, declared that tribute should be paid Roy Pomeroy for his marvelous direction, and forthwith dragged him out on the stage.

Seen during the intermission . . . Gary Cooper smilingly autographing programs for an excited crowd of pretty girls . . . Lupe Velez, whom Gary had escorted, entirely surrounded by males . . . Milton Sills proudly basking in his wife's glory (Doris Kenyon is Mrs. Sills) . . . Ronald Colman and Richard Barthelmess beaming on their pal, Bill Powell—these three are known as the Three Musketeers, so close is their friendship . . .fans

She Does as She Pleases

Clara Bow's first rule is to have none—in matters of dress, social activities and pastimes—she follows her own whims.

By
HELEN STARR HENEFIN

IS IT possible for a star to do as she pleases? Dress as she likes, go only where she likes, entertain as she likes—in brief, be herself? Clara Bow is the answer—an emphatic "Yes."

For many years it has been taken for granted that the answer is "No," equally emphatic. The demands on a star have been considered law, as regards dress, social activity, and many other matters of personal inclination.

Especially has this been true of fashionable dress since Hollywood developed ambitions of surpassing Paris as a style center. Informality or the slightest variation from what is accepted as correct has been unthinkable—and most of the stars have observed the rules.

Socially, custom has dictated that a star be seen at certain functions regardless of her personal preferences. At the important openings, for example, and at many of the elaborate parties given by the movie colony's socially elite. Certain places are smart for luncheon, certain others for various weekly dinner dances, and so on through a list of activities considered essential by the great majority. Some stars really like them, of course—Billie Dove attends every Hollywood party, large or small—but the individual's desire to attend has usually been a matter of secondary importance. The chief thing is to be there.

Not so with Clara Bow, the star who does as she pleases—and in so doing manages to please almost everybody else. Her costume for the day is decided by that day's whim, not by custom or other outside influence. She is as apt to appear for a party dressed in some simple sports costume as not. That is, when she goes at all, but she is rarely to be found at the parties so glittering with celebrities, and her own parties are as informal as they are enjoyable.

Clara serves buffet. Has her German cook put the cold meats and the salads on the dining table and turns her guests loose to appease their hunger as best suits them. Everyone has a good time at Clara's house for nobody has to suffer with a hostess who is in anguish over the danger of being a personal flop.

After seeing Clara out adventuring on the screen, you wouldn't picture her as a star who makes a bee line for home after studio hours. But she does just that—is quite eager to be at home. Either in her modest five-room bungalow in Beverly Hills or, more often, in her beach house at Malibu—an ocean front bandbox that is so overflowing with friends on a Sunday afternoon that most of them cheerfully take to the sand and waves for elbow space.

Clara Bow, as she appeared in Three Week-Ends, although from the looks of this picture it shouldn't have taken that long for captivating Clara to do her vamping.

Clara Bow (second from the left), showing that she can step with the best of them. At home, her hobby is practicing some of the tough ones.

THIS domestic spirit works a great hardship on those of the public who gather at various smart eating places to scan at close range the faces of the stars being filled. There is Madame Helene's, for example, a sort of Hollywood institution. Madame Helene very capably manages the smart and amply expensive tea room located on the Paramount lot. She used to be an actress on professional boards and she knows how to stage her stuff for the tourists.

"Anna," she calls to the head waitress in her best gallery-reaching voice, "reserve a table for six for Richard Dix. And, Anna, Esther Ralston, Wallace Beery and Clive Brook are coming. Their tables, please, at once!"

Colleen Moore very rarely ate her luncheon in Madame Helene's tea room when her company, several years ago, was busy on this same lot. But another girl so closely resembled this Iris star that the gaping tourists could not distinguish the difference. And Madame Helene, realizing this, capitalized on the resemblance by singing out orders to draw up chairs for the Shamrock queen.

But there isn't the slightest opportunity for tourists to watch Clara Bow eating her noonday snack. She not only munches her tid-bits in the seclusion of her own dressing room but Clara has no double to withstand the stares of the populace in her stead. Nor does she dance at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove on Tuesday evenings or care how many affluent tourists lose their dignity by tearing down the door ropes at Montmartre on Wednesday noons. Clara is simply not on exhibition.

She admits a somewhat paradoxical desire: she wants always to be in the public eye professionally, but she wants to avoid close-up mob applause. She doesn't even go to opening nights when it's the accepted thing for thousands of sideline youngsters to cheer themselves hoarse at Bebe Daniels or Gloria Swanson stepping from their carriages swathed in ermines. Clara would get no kick out of a paragraph in a newspaper social column to the effect that "Miss Bow wore a crystal-beaded gown and a fox-trimmed canary yellow evening wrap." Studio officials even have to plan a campaign of battle to get her to make a personal appearance. She'd a lot rather climb into a sleeveless sport dress at home and bury her head in a phonograph to hear some new records.

"Sour grapes," say some of the cinema kitties. "Perhaps Clara isn't being asked out so much."

But if you think you ever heard incessant and persistent telephone bells, you ought to hear Clara's. Aside from the usual number of calls from small town youths

Clara, as a sweet little country miss in straw hat and overalls, ought to make the potatoes open their eyes.

Clara Bow waves a greeting from the running board of her new limousine—no wonder the motor purrs contentedly when she is an occupant.

who have somehow discovered her private telephone number, and those from ambitious young actors who hope to get along, she has a constant stream of invitations from other stars to attend their exclusive dinners—and from people prominent in the social world. Going out socially doesn't please Clara, so she doesn't go.

The beautiful gowns she so often wears in her pictures are the products of studio designers, not from her own wardrobe—and she is so little intrigued that she doesn't even have the things copied. And as it pleases her whim, she arrives at the studio each day in a different outfit; one day a sports dress and tight felt headgear, another day a sweater and skirt or perhaps trousers and boots if the mood suits her. One time when Clarence Badger, the director, and his wife invited Clara to spend a week-end at their country home in the mountains, they were not a little surprised to see her arriving in an aviator's outfit—leather trousers, sheep's wool-lined coat, football helmet and all!

WITH all her whims, it cannot be said that Clara is extravagant. She has bought her home in Beverly and her house at the beach, and while there is a small gymnasium in each, there is nary a swimming pool or tennis court. She has established her father, Robert Bow, in business as the proprietor of a cozy chicken dinner cafe on Beverly Boulevard at the edge of Beverly Hills. At home she has no butler or footman, and her chauffeur has a snap—half the time she drives herself, red hair streaming back from a frank, white forehead. A bank handles a trust fund for the star that protects her generous earnings, and she has an investment manager whose burden is made light by the rare entries he must make for her purchases of jewels and ermines, oil wells and phony stocks—Clara just doesn't nibble.

As an example of the kick she gets out of a new hobby, witness Clara these days with a pistol. Starting with practice at the Clarence Badgers' mountain house, the craze continued when she returned to the studio and deftly punctured available tin cans until somebody persuaded her to call it off when she requested a gun of larger calibre.

It is said around Hollywood that Clara Bow can make new guests feel at home in less time than any other star in town—a wonderful trait for social conquest. If she should ever feel like going to a party, she gets one up and selects her own crowd. And many are those who respond to her frequent invitation to "come down Sunday afternoon." The house is overflowing at this time, the parties are informal, and mixed as well. Among the guests may be a meek little studio employe whom she likes, rubbing elbows with a highbrow New York magazine editor like Donald Freeman, who recently met Clara with skepticism and remained to be fascinated by her ready wit and excellent common sense.

Harry Carr

Harry Carr

Harry Carr is one of the busiest of the men writing for and about pictures today. In addition to his monthly column of comment which appears exclusively in SCREEN SECRETS, he is also the most famous daily newspaper columnist on the Pacific Coast and yet finds time to write titles and scenarios for some of the outstanding masterpieces of the screen. He has been intimately associated with the industry since the early days when he was D. W. Griffith's right hand man at the old Mamaroneck Studio.

WELL, I guess you gotta treat them rough.

Anyhow, it looks to be that way in the case of Fay Wray.

In the making of The Wedding March, Von Stroheim had Miss Wray in hysterics most of the time. That was her normal condition. She cried enough tears in her dressing room to float the furniture away.

The shocked and chivalrous directors who guided the young lady's artistic footsteps in the pictures that followed treated her As A Perfect Lady Should Be.

The sad footnote I have to add is that she has never been so good in any of these pictures as in the one where she was constantly miserable.

Hair Trigger Emotions

THE truth about Fay Wray is that she is not of the actress temperament. Girls like Clara Bow, Rene Adoree and Joan Crawford wear their emotions on their sleeves with a hair trigger attachment. They have no inhibitions; no self-consciousness; no restrictions. They are just impetuous children.

Had she been Juliet, she would have said to herself: "Well, it's tough luck; but there are other Romeos."

I shouldn't be surprised if, in the end, she turned out to be a writer rather than an actress.

Bessie's Little Pal

THERE'S another movie girl who is likely to turn out the same way: Carmel Myers.

A professor of English in the school where Carmel and Bessie Love went to school together told me that Carmel had the most brilliant mind of any pupil he had contacted in a teaching experience of more than thirty years.

An Overdose

IT GRIEVES me to say that I think the sizzling condition of Carmel's gray matter has been a handicap to her. An overdose of brains is to a Hollywood actress about like having two extra thumbs. That's what has always been the trouble with Aileen Pringle—too much brains, not too many thumbs. She has just exactly the right number of thumbs. Same with May Busch and others I have known. Directors don't like to work with them.

This Is Love

AS A devoted young husband trying to get into soul sympathy with his bride, I shall have to vote the palm to Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

Comments—

In her chorus girl days, Joan Crawford had a good many hard and bitter experiences trying to bust into Broadway. Hunger and tears.

So Douglas, in order to bring his soul into complete sympathy with all her sorrows, tells me that he went out and slept in a park. When the cop came along and whacked him over his distinguished Trilbys, why, Doug felt that he and Joan were one at last in all essential things.

Gosh, but Love's great!

Marriage—and Careers

THE loving and catty friends of the young couple helped along the romance by telling them that marriage will surely ruin them both.

I happened to be the first house guest at their home. Joan had to climb up into Doug's lap before they dared ask the frightened question.

In a quavering voice, Doug asked me: "Do you honestly think our marriage is going to ruin our careers . . . so very much?"

To which I replied: "Oh, rats!" It's the truth. If the public takes a fancy to an actor, he could commit a murder every morning before breakfast and it wouldn't hurt — until the public unaccountably grew tired of him.

If You Have IT

AS I once heard D. W. Griffith say: "If you've got IT, it does not matter what you do in front of the camera. If you haven't got IT . . . . it doesn't matter what you do in front of the camera.

A Thrill

THE British journalists who have been touring America at the expense of the Carnegie Foundation got a thrill out of Hollywood visiting the studios, and especially watching the acting on the sets.

I met them at a dinner just after a day in which they had been shown the wonders of the Huntington Library, the oil fields and incidentally a peek into the movie world at Hollywood.

"My word, old chap," said one of the Britishers, excitedly, "we saw Adolphe Menjou kissing a gel. Right in front of the camera." They were so agitated at this remarkable sight that they not only forgot the Huntington Library and the telescopes of Mt. Wilson—but even forgot to ask the name of the favored gel.

Cowboys Take to the Air

Tom Mix is still faithful to his pal Tony, insisting that a plane is a horse of another color.

Buck Jones was one of the first cowboys to desert his horse for a plane; he is seen here, going over his air cart to make sure it will all be there when he needs it.

Ken Maynard is torn between admiration for his new plane, in which he will make sky thrillers instead of westerns, and affection for his horse "Tarzan."

"Dick's Me Pal"

Dick Barthelmess is a "regular egg" to Shorty English, his pal in pranks and perils for ten years.

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY

Dick Barthelmess is shooting a few pictures of his own on location with Shorty English, his pal, who styles himself, "a weddin' present to the missis."

ONE evening last April, Richard Barthelmess, leaving the First National Studio at Brubank, looked from his car window and spied a little, sandy-haired, blue-eyed, rolling-gaited chap emerging from the extras' gate.

"Ahoy, there, Shorty!" cried Dick.

Shorty stopped, waved and grinned a merry little grin. He had been working in a "very dirty picture," and grime and grease decorated his weather-beaten face.

"Hop in!" invited the star, flinging the car door wide.

"But I'm filthy. Been jumpin' about in the mud the blessed day," objected Shorty. But, just the same, he hopped in. He and Dick had been pals for ten years.

"We drove out to the Beverly 'ills 'otel," related the little man, later. "Never been in the damn place in me life, but 'e says, 'Come on,' and I come. In through the lobby we went, people starin' at me as if I was a wild beast, but Dick just marched on up to a 'all and rang a bell. And inside of the apartment was a lady—she was Mrs. Sargent then—a-entertainin' a lot of folks. And Dick gives me a shove and 'e says:

"'Hi say, look wot I brought you! Surprise!' 'e says. And she laughs, and says, right back at 'im: 'It's Shorty!'

"And then Dick 'ad me sing, So 'Elp Me Cauliflower and While London Sleeps and do me dance. Soon after the two of 'em got married and I says I'm a weddin' present from Dick to the missis. And so I belong to them bofe and I always will.

"I've known Dick ten years and we've been through quite a bit together; I've never 'ad a better pal in me life, though I'm old enough to be 'is dad."

It was in 1918, when the soldier of fortune known as "Shorty English" was working as property man for D. W. Griffith, that Richard Barthelmess came to the coast. His first picture was The Oak Chest, and he was noticed by the future "wedding present" as a good-looking kid with jolly ways. After watching scenes in Broken Blossoms, this estimate was amended. Dick's hard-working sincerity in the Chinese role earned the comment: "One dead sure bet for pictures," and Shorty began to take a personal interest in the boy's success.

To those of us who see the star as a self-contained, reserved, courteous but aloof young man, the side of him that Shorty sees is a revelation.

Dick is a gay youth, fond of "prankishness" . . . .

When the Griffith company were making The Love Flower down in Nassau on a tropical river, the schooner used for love scenes drifted a bit too close to shore.

"Hop overboard, Shorty, and shove us off the sand bar," directed D. W.

Shorty jumped into the water, but he was too short to touch bottom, so started to climb back up the rope flung out for the purpose, when Dick put his head over the rail and motioned him to stop.

"Duck—they're shooting a scene!" he warned.

They weren't, but he kept the little man hanging on by his imagination for three-quarters of an hour before he owned up that he was "just kidding."

DICK'S favorite joke through the years that Shorty was with him was to dress the pint-sized property man up in borrowed plumage and present him at gorgeous social gatherings as "Sir Frederick Francis Summers, an eccentric nobleman from London." Shorty's real name is Frederick Francis Summers.

While they were making The Bond Boy in Homestead, Virginia, Mary Johnston, the famous novelist, entertained at tea—a function made interesting by the presence of the eccentric nobleman, who piled up six of the dainty sandwiches and took them all at a single bite, explaining to his fluttering debutante partners that he was rough and ready and did as he pleased.

The assistant director was robbed of a tuxedo suit for the grand ball at Homestead Hotel. Eight reefs had to be taken in the trousers, but Shorty felt very "'andsome" when he made his entrance with the star. Too many reefs, alas! Some of them disintegrated during the evening, and the eccentric nobleman fell over the waste length while he was dancing with a society matron. . . . .

Location in Havana, Cuba, for The Bright Shawl is looked back to now by both Dick and Shorty as the zenith of gaiety. From the first night out on the steamer—when Dick and Bill Powell kept Dorothy Gish awake until dawn by singing Sweet Adeline under her cabin window for five hours straight—till the New York sky line once again was sighted, the trip was one to wear out such commonplace adjectives as "merry" and "hilarious."

Bill Powell and Dick had not met until the steamer sailed; for no good reason, each was prejudiced against the other and had bewailed the fate that exiled them together. They began by walking about the decks, not speaking, but elaborately ignoring one another. A storm came up and a particularly violent sea swell sent Dick staggering into Bill and both collapsed on the deck. They sat up, sorted arms and legs and laughed, and there began one of the finest friendships in moviedom.

Their rooms were next door on the sixth floor of a Havana hotel, each window embellished by a sort of toy balcony, the railings of which were six feet apart. One day, after Bill had played some trick on Dick and Shorty, they all returned to the hotel to find invitations to attend a "plush dinner."

"Poor Bill!" Dick sighed to his English pal. "How hungry he's going to be!" But as he sighed he grinned and displayed the key to Bill's room. Bill was locked in. "And no telephone in his room, poor lad!"

However, Bill chalked up one on Dick by appearing at the dinner only a little late. He had leaped the six feet from his own balcony to Dick's. "And why 'e wasn't killed, I ask yer?" comments Shorty, "doin' a stunt man's job six stories up!"

It was in this picture that Shorty proved his value to the company in another line. John Robertson, the director, had a crowd of natives working in scenes in the interior of the island, one among them being a negro from New York who was passing himself off as a Cuban. Mr. Robertson wanted some simple maneuver executed by the natives, but, in spite of patient explanation through an interpreter, they seemed unable to grasp the idea. The director relieved his own feelings by putting into very warm language what he thought of their stupidity, incidentally calling the New York negro several uncomplimentary names.

"Hey, you-all call me dat, man? Last thing you ever do!" shrieked the negro,

Dick's love making is as fiery as ever in this scene with Loretta Young, from his latest dramatic spectacle, Scarlet Seas.

and forthwith fomented a riot. Long knives appeared as if by magic and the extras advanced menacingly.

THEN stepped out Shorty English, five feet high and game to the backbone. He had handled wild men in wilder places than this and he handled these men now with a twinkle in his eye and a joke on his lips without a drop of bloodshed.

Shorty taught Dick to box and in the intervals between pictures they had boxing bouts on the roof of the star's New York apartment. One day, shortly after their return from Cuba, Dick had the little man out to his home in New Rochelle to meet Hank Welsh, a champion, six feet tall who weighed two hundred pounds.

Dick thought it amusing to watch the two and everyone enjoyed it until Hank made a sudden lunge, knocked Shorty out and won. He broke two ribs, but Shorty didn't know it until he reached home, when he collapsed in agony.

"Tell Mr. Barthelmess!" he moaned to his landlady.

Dick could hardly get there quick enough. He brought the doctor, demanded that his pal be made comfortable and announced that he'd "pay the freight," which he did, most generously.

The greatest danger Dick faced in Shorty's company was during the making of Way Down East. They had been in Florida for The Idol Dancer and in the Bahamas for The Love Flower, battling tropic heat and tropic bugs, and had come directly from that to the worst winter New York ever experienced.

"That picture was all narrow escapes," says Shorty.

There was the time that Dick, coming down the river on a cake of ice, crashed into an ice jam. The ice that he had been riding on made a sudden dive and disappeared beneath the churning blocks ahead. Only a wild acrobatic leap saved the hero of the picture from certain death under the floe.

And there was the time that Dick was carrying Lillian Gish in his arms from ice cake to ice cake on the frozen river. He slipped between two blocks of wavering ice, fell into the water, and would have been drowned if Lillian had not caught on the farther chunk of ice and held on until they were rescued. Then, of course, they dried Dick off and let him do the scene over again!

Lillian, lying on a piece of oilcloth laid on the ice by the sympathetic Shorty, her little hand trailing in the icy river, passed out completely and had to be rushed to the hotel before she could be revived.

They worked in driving snowstorms, day and night; they had to cut roads to the studio through drifts four feet deep; they were all afflicted with frostbitten feet and noses.

But the hardest thing that happened to Dick had nothing to do with his scenes in the picture.

Sheep were used in the farm sequence made at Mamaroneck Studio, and one morning six or eight of the animals were found dead. They had all died from wounds and loss of blood but no one could solve the mystery of the tragedy until Shorty arrived. He had farmed in Australia and he took one look at the dead sheep.

"Let me see the dogs," he said at once.

There were two of them, one a pet of Dick's named "Friendless" who had attached himself to the Griffith company back in Hollywood. Both had telltale wool on their jaws.

"There's no stoppin' a dog as 'ad tasted blood," said Shorty, and advised shooting as the only cure.

Dick was heartbroken. Couldn't "Friendless" be sent to a farm? Couldn't he buy the dog and send it to his mother? But Shorty declared it wouldn't be safe. The condemned dogs were taken away to death.

"Poor Dick, I thought he'd never get over it!" sighs Shorty.

There was another dog in Dick's life. While they were making Fury aboard an old German square rigger, the star acquired a Great Dane, which he christened "Fury," and others on location.

Dick's greatest joy in life is his little daughter, Mary Hay Barthelmess, with whom he spends much of his time away from his work. She is also a great favorite with "Shorty" English.

That Little Tease

"Dorothy Mackaill will bite my ear in our next close-up if I'm not careful what I say, but here goes."

By Jack Mulhall

Dorothy Mackaill may be English but she has a sense of humor, says Jack Mulhall, her leading man in nine pictures.

WHAT do I think of Dorothy Mackaill? Come, come. This is putting a man at a terrible disadvantage. What would any sane man, with two observing eyes, say?

Could I say that she is homely, has a wretched temper, probably attributable to dyspepsia? And if I did, just to get a rise out of her, what do you suppose she would do to me in our next picture? There's no telling. Bite my ear, maybe, or tickle me in the ribs in one of those more tender close-ups.

Dorothy and I have made nine pictures together. Think of it. Nine. And never once has there been hint of a divorce. We are soon to start upon our tenth. As one of the screen's most blissfully teamed couples we can look back, fondly, upon Johanna, our first film; Subway Sadie; Just Another Blonde; Smile, Brother, Smile; The Crystal Cup; Man Crazy; Lady Be Good; Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath, and Water Front.

I like to work with Dorothy because she is responsive. There is always a thrill in going into a scene with her. We haven't grown stale. After working in picture after picture that is apt to happen. There is this, however, about constant teaming, we become subconsciously familiar with the other's physical reactions. Without being actually aware of it, I know just how Dorothy will react to certain situations. This knowledge has acted as a stimulant, rather than a detriment, as one might think, to the spontaneity of our performance.

It's a great incentive to have a co-worker like her, instead of what she might be. When I think of all the things a co-star might be that work hardships on the partner, I realize my luck. Little things that make all the difference in the world in one's attitude and thus in one's whole performance. None of the petty irritations from her.

There is this, too, about Dorothy. She is such a clean, wholesome girl. She doesn't reek of cheap scent and bad perfume. And while we are barging into informalities, I like that "fresh-from-the-tub" look that she has. And the pink and white of her English complexion, a pink unaided by cosmetics.

I like the simplicity of her dress. Her lack of glittering adornment. Dorothy's sole adornment, usually, is a strand of small pearls about her throat, and often she wears no jewelry. I like her ability to wear sports clothes without looking mannish and losing femininity.

Of course, she is not without her faults. She has a

That Crazy Irishman

"Jack Mulhall may be all right around the house, but here's what I think of him on the set."

By Dorothy Mackaill

JACK MULHALL is an Irishman. I'm from Yorkshire, in merrie old England. And did you ever hear of an Irishman and an Englishman who agreed on anything? If they aren't arguing about freedom, they are arguing about equality or the price of tobacco. Anything, just for the sake of argument.

They are as temperamentally unsuited as a Kilkenny cat and a pug dog.

But for three years we have been teamed together in pictures and neither Jack nor I have had a fight. A real, rousing display of pyrotechnics, I mean. We've had squabbles, of course, like the best of friends, like the most devoted couples. Little differences like Jack telling me I had on too much lipstick and other inconsequential things like that.

There have been times, too, when we have had spats, tiny spats, just to exercise our English-Irish ire, and I'd say to him: "Who do you think is carrying this team, anyway?" and he would answer, "Well, I suppose you think you are." And then our humor, instead of anger, would mount and we would both see how darned silly we were. And laugh it off.

I want to say right here and now, that of all the men on the screen, Jack Mulhall is the only one I would want to be teamed with.

There are lots of reasons for that—reasons why I have dozens of occasions to thank my stars it's not somebody else I'm dealing with. A player's co-star can make or break the picture, you know, and there are as many ways to manage this as there are motives for it on a Hollywood set. The more I hear of the tricks played by some stars who are suffering from an imagined grievance, the more I feel grateful to Jack for his unfailing consideration and unselfishness.

He is a dear, generous boy. Jack is generous to a fault. I often tell him that. He is so generous he jeopardizes his own career. "Be spunky, Jack. Be temperamental, a bit. They'll respect you more for it." But not Jack. He's one of those rare Irishmen, whose hot fighting instinct is tempered with tolerance.

Not that he is a pacifist. I should say not. Did you ever hear of an Irishman who didn't like a good fight now and then? And he packs a few mean punches that shoot straight from the shoulder when the occasion is entirely warranted.

Jack is unselfish.

Here is an example of that. We were discussing our newest picture to be made together, Children of the Ritz, and I said: "Jack, you have the grandest part. It's just your stuff. Made for you, absolutely. It should do you a lot of good."

He grinned his broadest Irish smile, and then said hurriedly, "Yes? That's great, Dorothy. But, say, you're the only girl for your part. Why, I can't think of anyone who could play it but you."

Jack Mulhall is the answer to a leading lady's prayer, in the opinion of Dorothy Mackaill, who ought to know.

Dorothy Mackaill shows touching faith in Jack Mulhall in this little scene. It would be so easy to cut a slice off her nose if he didn't like her and say the saw slipped.

temper that is as wayward as a barometer on a cloudy day. But she keeps it under nice control. Occasionally, it flares up on the set and I get the benefit of it. Occasionally, I blushingly admit, it is deserved. Occasionally, Miss Mackaill, it is not.

There is another thing in teaming with Dorothy. You never have to powder the back of your neck when you are going into a closeup with her. She never insists that you work with your back to the camera. On the contrary, she spends her time forcing me into the spotlight.

Dorothy has an amazing amount of vitality. She seems supercharged with good health. Never have I worked with any girl who had her untiring vigor. Constance Talmadge is effervescent, bubbling over with gaiety. Dorothy has sturdy vitality and a great sense of humor.

None of the sea stuff was too hard for her to do in Water Front. She's game through and through. In fact, it is this very quality of gameness that's got Dorothy where she is, and that will get her just about any place she wants to be.

I like the way she dances, with grace and surety. The way she rides, with class. The way she walks. The way she talks. She's a neat job, now that you are asking me.

She has a very definite sense of honor, and heaven help the person who falls awry of it. She is always on time for her appointments. She has a charming English accent that will be a knockout in talking pictures.

She is the one person I know who can correctly pronounce "whoopee" without making it sound as if it was derived from a children's ailment.

She's a darned fine girl. On that my wife and I agree unanimously.

That Crazy Irishman

What can you do with a guy like that:

Jack has another blessing, which I adore, and he'd be a poor Irishman if he didn't have. He has a perfectly gorgeous sense of humor. It doesn't manifest itself in the form of practical joking, thank heaven. He never plants tacks or puts flour in powder. He radiates a jovial good-fellowship. He's the kind of person you like to take your troubles to when you're blue and he'll laugh you out of them. He's a grand confidant because he gives you undivided attention. And who doesn't like that? His humor is blithe and infectious. Jack's dressing room is next to mine at the studio and every morning of the year that we work, I hear his nice voice, cheery as the dickens, calling "Morning, Dorothy!" You can't start the day wrong when the other half of your team is like that. He's a blues chaser, that lad.

I wish Jack could play the hoofer in Broadway, when Universal makes it into a picture. I can't imagine anyone who could get the song-and-dance man's psychology onto the screen the way Jack does. He's got the heart, for one thing. He understands them. He has the pep and rhythm.

He has a lot more stuff than you might expect from a fellow who portrays this type. Some people out here know what sort of headwork the boy is capable of, but you'd have to work with him day after day to give him full credit.

I thought he was that kind of person in real life when I first saw him with Connie Talmadge in The Goldfish. I thought he was a typical song-and-dance boy. He's far more than that. He's an all-around darling. A regular person. In fact, he's rather grand.

Really, you mustn't get me started talking about Jack.

Broadway Deserted

By ARTHUR W EDDY

The Great Exodus—"Roxy" is a ghost talker—phone tolls nothing to Nick—ladies and nicotine—and other news of doings along the Main Stem.

ONE by one—rather, dozen by dozen—stage and other celebrities are forsaking the Great Hot Way to make their voices heard in the talking studios of Hollywood.

Never were the prospects brighter for the trunk and suitcase industry; during the past few weeks a host of actors, night club entertainers, vaudeville performers and writers have simply turned out the bright lights, arranged to have the janitor give the apartment cat its daily bowl of gin and boarded the train of thought that runs to the studios.

Many are already established out where the West begins to pay the heavy sugar — George Arliss, Al Jolson, Ted Lewis, Eddie Cantor, Sophie Tucker, O. P. Hegge, George Jessel, Robert Armstrong and Joe Brown, to name a famous few. The arrived list also includes such creative wows as Dorothy Parker, writer; Irving Berlin, song bird; Gus Edwards, producer; James Gleason, actor-author; Robert C. Benchley, critic and humorist.

And of those who haven't actually gone yet, an impressive number are busily engaged in the sound studios of New York: Big moments such as Louise Groody, Charles King, James Hackett, Frances Williams, Vincent Lopez, Cliff Edwards, Tom Waring, Eva Le Gallienne, Oscar Shaw, Mary Eaton, Jimmy Hussey, Marion Harris, Jeanne Eagels and Joseph Regan.

Yes, the boys and girls who keep Broadway awake are going or going in such quantities that traffic congestion may not be such a problem in a month or two.

Heard But Not Seen

OF ALL the varieties of actor—stage, screen, radio, canine and bad—the latest is perhaps the most unique in performance and in method. This is the "sound actor" who is the big noise in many a picture without being seen.

S. L. Rothafel ("Roxy" of radio fame), is at present the world's champion sound actor. When you see and hear F. W. Murnau's Four Devils, you will notice that a clown introduces the production with a laugh. That laugh, however, comes not from the clown on view but from Roxy. Again, during the scene in Four Sons, where the boys in the trenches listen to the cry of a wounded German out in No Man's Land, that pitiful call of "Mutterchen" is the voice of Roxy, our new invisible star. And in Sunrise, when George O'Brien and Janet Gaynor muss up traffic by stopping to kiss, and irate truck drivers begin shouting at the pair, it is Roxy's voice that makes the most racket.

The Old Nick

ABOUT the first thing that Nick Stuart did when he landed from the "Berengaria," was to long-distance Sue Carol.

Ted Lewis, who is leading the rush from Broadway, is going to see that "everybody's happy" in Hollywood.

CAROL LOMBARD, Pathe player, shows how to take a husband on your knee, give him a talking-to, and wind him around your finger. It's all very well, if you have a knee like that to take him on, a mouth like that to do the talking, and a finger like Carol's to wind him around.

Clive Confides

Clive Brook's serenity hides emotions torn between longing for England and love for America, but he finds comfort in the vast possibilities of the talkies.

Perhaps Clive Brook sees memories of England and the war in the glowing embers. He is not one of those who can readily forget the past.

By CHARLES GRAY

"IT'S all quite confusing," he said thoughtfully; "Quite, quite confusing."

They were slow words and grave, words that gave a revealing flash of the man behind the mask of reserve he turns to the world. Lest the rare break in his aloofness immediately close, I kept my eyes on the ascending smoke of our cigarettes. It was a delicate moment in our conversation.

In a community of effervescent men, Clive Brook is noted for the manner in which he retains his dignity—and his own counsel. He welcomes consideration of his work, but there are things which as an individual he has no wish to share. Thus on the rare occasions when he speaks of himself as a human being, rather than as a screen shadow, the wise listener will listen as I listened. For only then is the real man apparent.

"I love England," he continued, in the slow, rich voice which is doing so much to talk the squeak and the squawk out of the Paramount talkies. "The British do, you know. It's something born and bred into us. It's as natural and as inevitable as life. And yet—" he paused and dabbed the ash from his cigarette—"yet I wonder if there ever was a country so remarkable as this one."

"Remember the line?" I asked, "'How happy I'd be with the one, were the other dear charmer away'?"

"That's it. Precisely. I'm homesick for the tight little isle, and yet I know that it never again can replace what in four years America has come to mean to me. Its vitality, its stimulation, are simply irreplaceable. The dynamic quality that's in the very air gives something to a chap that he can't bear to lose. No, I couldn't do without it. And what's more, I shan't!"

He smiled his rare, charming smile. "What am I then, fish, flesh or fowl? One of my children is an American—the other was born in England. I have ties, contacts, friendships, in both countries. Each means so much to me that I cannot be fully satisfied in either. It's all quite confusing," he said again, studying his cigarette.

It was an admission so startling—and yet so humanly

A Preview Of The DIVINE LADY

CORINNE GRIFFITH finds perhaps the greatest role of her career as the captivating Lady Hamilton, sweetheart of Lord Nelson, famous in English history.

The picture promises to be one of the most lavish spectacles of the year, with the picturesque costumes of the early nineteenth century produced in elaborate detail.

In this picture fans will see the historic battle of Trafalgar re-enacted with faithful exactitude. Experts were imported from England in order to make sure that every detail of the greatest sea fight the world has ever known would be reproduced correctly.

Alternating with the dramatic spectacle are tender love scenes between Corinne Griffith as Lady Hamilton, and Victor Varconi as Lord Nelson.

Chiefly due to the work of the principals, and the attention given background and setting, this picture will most probably be regarded as noteworthy among the historical films of the past few seasons.

A Preview Of The WOLF SONG

Lupe Velez

Miss Velez and Gary Cooper

LUPE VELEZ finds a gorgeous setting for striking Latin beauty as well as a field for her dramatic talents in The Wolf Song, a stirring story of pioneer days in California.

Gary Cooper is picturesque in the buckskin garb of the pioneer. The picture gives Lupe an opportunity to wear the beautiful and becoming clothes of the early Spanish regime in California.

It is another story of the coming of the treasure seekers to the land of plenty, with a stirring dramatic story.

Many of the scenes were shot on location in the beautiful mountainous country of Southern California, in the high Sierras, where many of the actors of Hollywood have summer cabins.

The story concerns the love affair and violent aftermath that await Cooper as he flees Kentucky and heads into the mountains of Southern California, accompanied by Louis Wolheim and Constantine Romanoff.

His love affair with Lupe, daughter of an aristocratic Don in an old Mexican town, involves him in dangerous encounters from all sides.

The best among the current pictures are reviewed below as a guide to readers in choosing

PICTURESQUE PEASANTRY

A German officer finds his better nature through The Awakening of love.

ENTER the beautiful Vilma Banky, principal of the erstwhile famous lover team of Banky and Colman, as a star in her own right.

In The Awakening, she has for her leading man, one Walter Byron, handsome and youthful, a recent importation from the British Isle.

It's all about the depredations of war upon the peasantry of Alsace, which gives Vilma a chance to appear in picturesque costumes.

She is the daughter of a poor but honest burgher and all goes well with her until Walter Byron comes along in the role of a dashing young Uhlan officer.

Later, the officer induces her to visit him in his rooms, and the Alsatians, putting two and two together, decide she is no better than she should be, and, according to a quaint custom of the country, they decorate her front door with pitch, which means she is no longer asked out with the best people.

After that, things go from bad to worse, until Vilma takes refuge in a convent. However, the fortunes of war and the ingenuity of the scenario writer which tore the lovers apart, bring them together in the end.

There are some beautiful scenes bound together with a rather ridiculous story.—Samuel Goldwyn.

MOTHER INSTINCT

When she goes to sea, Singapore Sal finds she wasn't meant to be a dance hall girl all her life.

THE cast of Singapore Sal reads like a roster of the rough-and-ready characters of the movies—Phyllis Haver, Alan Hale and Fred Kohler; a combination from which you might expect all sorts of slithering sin. And then they go and fool you.

Just when you think they're going good and tough on you, they suddenly become funny.

There's an amusing situation to begin with. And the actors wring all the humor out of it. Alan Hale is a hale-and-hearty sea captain who finds a baby foisted upon him without being able to do anything about it.

Being a man of action, he goes ashore and shanghais Singapore Sal, a dance hall girl, who is Phyllis Haver, to be the synthetic mother of the baby.

Singapore Sal is bored by it all until the baby gets sick. Then her mother instinct comes to the fore.

All goes well until a feud breaks out between Alan Hale and Fred Kohler over the girl.

Phyllis Haver does good work in changing in the twinkling of an eye from the flashy dance hall girl to the woman who is a mother at heart. Tense drama and comedy alternate with pleasing effect.—Pathe.

Madame Glyn has taken her old formula for Three Weeks, the novel which made her famous, and has given it another twist for Three Week-Ends.

The picture is just Clara Bow. That's about all there is to it, and that's enough.

She plays the part of a girl who knew what life in a tenement was like, and what love in a tenement would be like also. She dreamed of marrying a rich man and having her fling at luxury. And she got her chance Then when she got it she didn't want it. Couldn't you just guess she'd end up in the tenement after all and like it?—Paramount.

John Gilbert tries to comfort Greta Garbo.

HEART PIRATE

Greta Garbo is a girl who becomes A Woman of Affairs to hide a broken heart.

ANOTHER great lover team is about to fade from sight.

A Woman of Affairs marks the last appearance of Greta Garbo and John Gilbert together. When he takes her in his arms in this picture, it will be for the last time on the screen. Which is reason for weeping.

This is really taken from the story of that much talked-of book, "The Green Hat," by Michael Arlen. But don't breathe a word of it, it's all supposed to be a deep secret.

It's all about a group of super-sophisticated moderns, all just dying to be decent, but not able to manage it.

Greta Garbo is an English girl whose heart is broken when her lover refuses to marry her until he has made his fortune, and who immediately plunges into a series of hectic affairs in a desperate effort to forget. The ending will surprise you.

Although the plot of the picture is quite different from the story of "The Green Hat," yet it smacks of something that Arlen might have written in one of his better moments.

There is an able supporting cast consisting of Lewis Stone, Dorothy Sebastian, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Hobart Bosworth and John Mack Brown. A notable swan-song for Garbo and Gilbert.—M-G-M.

Emil Jannings discovers his blind son, Jack Luden.

LIKE FATHER

The Sins of the Fathers are not always visited upon the sons according to this picture.

EMIL JANNINGS seems to seesaw between screen masterpieces and pictures that are just not so good. The Patriot belongs in the former class, The Street of Sin belongs in the latter. So does Sins of the Fathers.

He has a sympathetic role as an old German restaurant proprietor who has two main interests in life—his son and his restaurant. His wife and his daughter he sacrifices for these.

With the coming of prohibition, his life goes to pieces. His wife dies of overwork, and when she is gone he falls an easy victim to a loose lady who craves the cash in his register.

At last, his business goes to pieces and he becomes one of the biggest bootleggers in Manhattan. Meanwhile his son has been living fast and loose. The picture comes to a climax in the conflict between these two.

The picture suffers, however, from too much action which prevents Jannings from developing his character role to its fullest possibilities.

It marks the German actor's first appearance in extended talking sequences and also brings to the screen the talents of Ruth Chatterton, well-known stage actress. Zasu Pitts and Jack Luden are excellent in supporting roles.—Paramount.

Bert Lytell is recognized by Lilyan Tashman.

NIMBLE FINGERS

The most polished burglar of them all is reformed by* The Lone Wolf's Daughter.

THE Lone Wolf is at it again, moving in the best social circles, plucking diamonds from beneath unsuspecting dowagers' double chins with neatness and dispatch.

It also marks the return of Bert Lytell to some prominence again.

There's nothing new about the plot. The Lone Wolf fights his way into society for the sake of his adopted daughter, Gertrude, but has difficulties in keeping from being recognized as the polished pilferer. All goes well until he is spotted by two fellow crooks, played by Charles Gerard and Lilyan Tashman.

At the crucial moment, he lines up on the side of society and prevents these two dirty workers from making off with the jewels at a week-end party.

If you're tired of spectacles and pictures where people just stand and talk, you'll find this old-fashioned but rapid-moving bit of movie hokum refreshing.

Columbia, producers of this picture, have a habit of picking up popular stars rejected by other companies and making them better than ever. That's what they've done to Bert Lytell in this one.—Columbia.

entertainment. Additional reviews will be found on Page 88.

Mary Astor is warned by her maid.

Doris Kenyon confides her fears to Clive Brook.

GAY PAREE

Dry Martini has as much kick as its famous namesake.

MR. MENJOU had better look to his laurels. There's a new sophisticated gentleman with that debonair touch upon the horizon. He is Mr. Albert Gran and he walks off with the picture, Dry Martini, under his arm.

It's all about what Americans do when they go to Paris, checking their scruples behind them at the customs office.

Albert Gran is an elderly roue who lives alone in Paris according to his lights, which are usually bright. Like a thunderbolt into his life comes Mary Astor, his modern daughter, who startles him by proving just a bit more dashing in her ideas than the old gent himself.

He tries to put up a respectable front for the sake of his dear daughter, but finds out to his chagrin that he really might as well have saved himself the trouble.

It all ends very conventionally, however, with the father joining hands with the 100 per cent American sweetheart to save the girl from the attentions of a bounder.

The picture is gay, amusing and racy. But don't take the children. They'll ask a lot of questions you'll find hard to answer.—Fox.

CLEVER CRIME

Pointing out the evils that arise from* Interference *in other people's affairs.

HERE'S one that will be remembered as the first great talking picture. All the lisps, snorts and wheezes that are usually in attendance have been eliminated from this film.

Evelyn Brent, Doris Kenyon, William Powell and Clive Brook have voices that delight the ear. For once the dialogue is brilliant and entertaining, not mere spoken subtitles.

The story has plenty of swank, with lavish scenes and gorgeous gowns set against the background of London's upper crust.

Doris Kenyon is threatened for indiscretions of her early life by Evelyn Brent, who is fascinating in her familiar role of a smouldering dangerous woman. William Powell is a superb blackguard who commits murder to protect the happiness of the woman he loves. Clive Brook is distinguished and dignified as an eminent heart specialist.

The weakness of the story detracts from the excellence of the picture. Written originally as a silent film, it does not readily lend itself to adaptation to talking technique and slows down the action considerably.

The company promises to be a successful one in talking pictures.—Paramount.

MASK OF THE Devil

Adapted for SCREEN SECRETS by DOROTHY H. CARTWRIGHT

When Irwin Reiner, the gayest young rake in all Vienna, fell in love with Virginia Gessner, it made no difference to him that she was the sweetheart of his best friend. But when he found that love returned, would it awaken his better nature to do battle with his evil desires? Read the amazing conclusion of this startling story of John Gilbert's latest picture in which the handsome reprobate comes to death grips with his devil's soul.

With a wave of exultation, he realized that she no longer struggled against him . . . he gathered her into his arms.

Resume of the story:

BARON IRWIN REINER, wealthy and unscrupulous nobleman whose career as a libertine was the talk of Vienna, gave no sign of his character in his face—a face whose angelic purity had led Count Palester to select him as the model for a painting of the Archangel Michael.

Even while posing for this picture in Palester's studio, he met the Countess Helene Zurmuhlen, winning her love, of which he was already beginning to tire when an old school chum, Manfred Dalcroze, presented Virginia Gessner, his bride-to-be, and the most beautiful woman Irwin Reiner had ever seen! Without a qualm of conscience, Irwin laid plans for the conquest of his best friend's sweetheart, first removing Manfred from the scene by having him sent on an exploring expedition he had wanted to undertake to establish his fame and fortune.

At the most spectacular and lavish garden party ever known in Vienna, given by Reiner in honor of Virginia, the neglected Countess Zurmuhlen tried vainly to renew her affair with her faithless lover. Finally, on being brutally dismissed by him, she threatened suicide. Irwin, eager to mend the break with Virginia caused when he grasped her in a passionate embrace from which she broke in anger, paid little heed. Seeking out Virginia, he gained her forgiveness and was about to renew his wooing when Palester interrupted the scene with the news that Helene was badly injured—she had plunged to attempted death under the wheels of a passing motor on the highway.

Count Zurmuhlen, aware at last of the affair between his wife and Reiner, attempted to shoot the Baron as he entered the house to see the desperately wounded Countess, but after a brief scuffle the pistol was discharged and the Count slumped to the floor, dying a few moments later. Through influence, wealth and personality, the Baron was acquitted of the murder charge.

After several weeks, during which he heard nothing from Virginia, Irwin received a note from her, expressing faith in him despite all the gossip, and inviting him to call. This he did promptly, but with a growing uneasiness, increased by catching a glimpse of his reflection—a leering, fiendish Mask of the Devil—in the glass covering of Manfred's photograph. Later that evening, however, he crushed her in his arms and poured forth a passionate declaration of love.

Now finish the story:

OH!" she moaned, struggling away from him, half-frightened, half-resentful. A moment later she had freed herself from his embrace and fled from the room, leaving him staring after her with eyes blazing with hatred and desire.

The young baron waited, half-expecting her to return. Finally convinced that she would appear no more that evening, he reluctantly went into the hall and gathered up his coat and gloves. He remembered to look in the pocket. Yes, there was a cablegram. Quickly he ripped it open.

"Why have you not written? Am returning immediately to know truth of this ghastly silence—Manfred."

Returning—immediately! Only a few days longer, then all would be explained. Virginia would know why her lover's fervent messages had never reached her, would be reassured of his love for her for which she had grieved; and Irwin, the culprit, would be bitterly denounced by both of them. Virginia would forever after scorn him. He moved dazedly toward his waiting limousine. He was about to drive away, when he suddenly changed his mind.

"Drive on," he ordered. "I'll follow later." As the car disappeared down the driveway, Irwin Reiner stealthily moved toward the garden. From where he stood, concealed among the shrubbery, he could look up toward Virginia's lighted room. It was only a few minutes later that she herself stepped to the window and pulled aside the drapes. For a moment she paused there, her slender young body softly outlined by the folds of her night-gown, her hair tumbling in childlike abandon about her shoulders.

Then she was gone. He could see her moving vaguely about in the room.

Quickly and noiselessly he reentered the house and stealthily crept upstairs to Virginia's room. The knob turned easily. Virginia was about to blow out the candles on her dressing table when she saw the door slowly opening.

THE CAST

Baron Irwin Reiner	John Gilbert
Virginia Gessner	Eva Von Berne
Countess Helene	Alma Rubens
Count Zurmuhlen	Frank Reicher
Count Palester	Theodore Roberts
Manfred Dalcroze	Ralph Forbes
The Little Dancer	Polly Ann Young
Madame Gessner	Ethel Wales

As the congregation rose, Manfred saw Irwin for the first ness—these were stamped mercilessly on his features.

"Mother?" she asked, turning. But the smile died on her lips as she saw Irwin Reiner slip swiftly into the room and close the door behind him.

"You!" she cried, so startled by his sudden appearance that at first she had no thought of fear. "What are you doing here?"

Now as he moved toward her, slowly, purposefully, there was no mistaking his motives.

"I love you!" he told her, fiercely. "I desire you! You are mine! We belong to each other!"

"You must go—please! Go!" Virginia clutched her thin gown about her in terror. His eyes seemed to unclothe her with their merciless searching of her thinly-clad young figure. The girl managed to fling a fragile negligee about her; yet, still his eyes made her feel naked before him.

Suddenly he leaped forward and caught her violently to him.

"No—no—please!" she breathed, trying to struggle from him, yet half-yielding. "You must not stay here—you must go quickly—before it is too late!"

time since their grim encounter. Bitterness, contempt, unforgive- Irwin turned away, suffering new pangs of remorse and self-hatred.

HIS lips crushed the words as she spoke them. Now he felt her body relax. She no longer struggled against him. Her lips, but a moment before denying him, now waited for his kisses—were eager . . .

He gathered her in his strong arms. How light she was—how small and soft and warm. The alcove across the room—he would carry her there. Every fiber of his being strained to the tempo of his passion. Fulfillment, for which he had already waited too long, was at last to be his.

Suddenly he stopped short, facing, so it seemed, an invisible wall. His arms, in which but a moment before the blood had raced vigorously, now sagged with the weight of his light burden, and the ecstacy of attainment no longer fired him with anticipation.

For once more he had looked into the mirror. Once more a face leered back at him—a sinister face, hideously ugly, distorted cruelly with lust and evil—the shadow of a soul from Hell—the Mask of the Devil. Irwin Reiner released the girl weakly and stood before her staring in anguish.

Shaken to the depths of her being, and greatly embarrassed by the strange new impulses that had possessed her for the first time in her innocent young life, Virginia faced Irwin. Her eyes were dazed. She was like a sleep-walker, roused from a dreamless, exhausted sleep, as she stood before him, hugging her frail garments pitifully about her slender little figure.

"I am cursed! Cursed!" Irwin Reiner's voice rose like a sob. "The face of the devil is my face! His laughter rings in my heart! Oh, Virginia, I knew not what I was doing. I'm mad—stark, raving mad! Forgive me—pity me—for I am a soul in Hell!"

He knelt at her feet and buried his head in the folds of her gown, his shoulders shaking with overmastering emotion.

"Irwin—?" Her voice was less even than a whisper. The girl swayed weakly, afraid of the tumult in her heart, puzzled by his words which she could not understand, and his contrition, which embarrassed her. "Irwin—?" Her hand reached out tremblingly—perhaps to comfort him, perhaps to reassure herself that it was not all a mad nightmare.

The man recoiled as from a tongue of flame. "Oh, don't touch me! I am unclean! I am possessed of a demon! I know not what I do! Look at me, Virginia, and you will see—I am the devil himself!" And with a terrible cry wrung from his very heart, he stumbled from the room.

Virginia watched him go, paralyzed with fear. Then suddenly she sank to her knees, buried her face in her trembling hands and sobbed as if her heart would break. No use now to struggle against him; no need for her to denounce him as a traitor, to tell herself she hated him, to speak coolly to him of friendship and believe herself sincere. She had learned the brutal, searing truth at last.

"Irwin—oh, Irwin — I— love you — I — love you——!"

Nights passed . . . . nights in which Irwin Reiner lived over the crucifixion of his own soul. From that memorable moment he had avoided looking into mirrors, lest again he see that hideous mask taunting him; but curiosity was strong in him. Perhaps, after all, he had only dreamed! Resolutely he strode to his pier glass and held the candlestick high, until it threw a kindly light upon his face.

THE shadows dissolved, and in the smooth surface of the mirror a face appeared—ugly, accusing, bearing the stamp of hatred and lust. As he watched, gripped in an awful despair, another face approached his from the far background—the ghost of Manfred, whose love he had betrayed.

With an anguished cry Irwin gripped the candlestick tightly and beat the mirror into a thousand fragments. That leering Devil's mask! Those trusting eyes of Manfred! They should not mock him!

Someone hurried across the room. A heavy, sustaining arm was thrown about his shoulders.

"Irwin! What is it?"

Manfred, bronzed by the tropic sun, stood anxiously beside him in the flesh. For a moment Reiner was unable to collect his wits. Slowly the candlestick fell to the floor.

"Oh! Oh, it is nothing—nothing at all. Nerves cracking. Let's not talk about it. Tell me about yourself. When did you return?"

MANFRED, greatly shaken by their dramatic meeting and saddened by his own problems, replied: "I came only today, and went straight to Virginia. She does not tell me what has changed her, but she no longer loves me."

Reiner looked compassionately on Manfred's stricken face, listened unhappily to his grief, struggling to tell him the truth, to make a full confession.

"For months she had not written me, had made no acknowledgment of my messages to her," Manfred continued wretchedly. "Oh, my friend, you cannot know the agony I have suffered, so far away from her, unable to understand her silence. Today when I called to see her, she seemed startled at the very sight of me. There was no gladness in her welcome. I asked her what had happened, but she made no reply. I asked her if she loved me; she would not answer. But I know—I could see the change in her. I stumbled away quickly, unable to bear the torture of her dear presence, knowing that her heart was no longer mine. It was only the faith I had in you, my friend, that kept me from killing myself."

My friend . . . . my friend . . . . The repetition of these words beat cruelly on Irwin's brain. Unable to endure another word, he sprang to his feet, his face convulsed with agony and hatred of himself as he began his shameful confession.

"I am not your friend—I am your worst enemy! While you loved and trusted me, I betrayed you, Judas that I am!"

Manfred tried to ease him into a chair, certain that his mind was unbalanced; but Irwin shook him off roughly.

"Don't touch me! I am unclean! I tell you I have betrayed you—stolen from you the thing you most cherished—Virginia. Don't call me friend again! Don't! Don't! I cannot bear it!"

"Y o u—took—Virginia—from me?" repeated Manfred through the fog of this strange revelation.

"Yes, I—your dearest friend—your beloved comrade! The moment I saw her, I desired her. It was I who contrived that very night to send you away on your long expedition; I who afterward intercepted your messages to her; I who insidiously planted in her the belief that you no longer loved her; I who sought to win her for my own—who tried to take her by force when she would not yield!"

"And Virginia?" Manfred's eyes, glittering with sudden hatred, were focused on Reiner's face.

"She was saved from me by the miracle of my own conscience."

Manfred's tenseness relaxed slightly.

"I am paying for my sin, Manfred," Irwin cried, hoarsely. "As God is my judge, my heart is being eaten away—slowly; my brain is on fire. At night I cannot sleep; the days are endless. I am a man condemned to living death. I am humble before you—ashamed, longing only for some way to repair the great harm I have done you. I, who have no right to use the word 'friendship' stand before you, imploring your forgiveness."

Manfred's face, cold, hard, unyielding, grew even more cruel with hatred. Slowly he raised his hand and struck Reiner a stinging blow upon the cheek. Then deliberately he turned on his heel and strode away.

Irwin Reiner stood motionless, his head bowed. Suffering had reached its peak in him.

IRWIN REINER would not have wished to admit how long it was since he had crossed the threshold of a church. On the Sunday following his confession to Manfred, he felt irresistibly drawn to the House of God where, perhaps, peace dwelled, and souls could be renewed. Kneeling in the quiet shadows, with the organ softly playing, he groped for words with which to voice a prayer. But he had long since forgotten how to speak to God.

Miserably his eyes lingered on every sign and symbol of faith, until they came to rest upon a Figure on the Cross . . . . They had brought to Him a man possessed of devils. And Christ spoke to the man and ordered the demons to depart from him, saying: "The devils shall come from the mind of him who hath faith." . . . . It seemed to Irwin that he was the man who knelt before the Christ; he who prayed: "I have faith in Thee and in Thy power." . . . . And the chains fell from him. His body became clothed, and the look of madness left him as Christ laid his hand compassionately on his bowed head . . . .

Into Irwin Reiner's heart peace entered; into his eyes, new vision.

Virginia, on Manfred's arm, had entered the church, and now sat across the aisle from Irwin. She saw him almost at once. Yet there was a strangeness about him that made her almost doubt that it was he. . . . . That penitent figure with bowed head—could that be the arrogant young baron who played with life as a child plays with a gaily-colored bauble?

Her steady eyes must have drawn him, for now he looked up and saw Virginia. For a moment he felt he was not strong enough to offer her friendship, when his whole being cried out for her love.

Manfred, unaware of Irwin's presence, looked jealously at the girl, whose tender expression betrayed her secret thoughts.

"You are thinking of Reiner!" he accused.

With an effort Virginia recalled herself from dreams of Irwin—an Irwin whom she knew she could trust—and love.

"No!" she protested, guiltily. "No! I have forgotten Reiner! Let us never speak of him again!"

Manfred, smug and satisfied by the vehemence of her

FAN CLUB DEPARTMENT

All questions regarding fan clubs will be answered by GRACE SIMPSON, Department Conductor.

HERE'S some good news for all Laura La Plante fans—a group of congenial people have joined hands and formed a fine club for your peppy little blonde favorite. All members receive brief reviews of the better pictures and interesting short subjects about Laura. Membership fee for one year is 25c, payable to Edward J. Strife, the secretary. "Will you help us to grow?" he asks. The club now numbers 132 members.

Baxter Club Affiliates

THE Warner Baxter Club has been taken over by the Hollywood Movie Fans' Club, with new headquarters in the movie city. The HMFC publishes a dandy club paper called Hollywood Close-ups and henceforth one full page will be entirely devoted to the Baxter club. Warner, by the way, is very much interested in his club and promises to send all new members one of his latest autographed pictures. Dues to his club are 50c a year and that includes the club paper.

Club Holds Contest

THE Kenyon-Sills club now is holding a poem contest, open to all members of the club. Doris Kenyon has offered a book of her own poems—to be personally autographed to the winner—as the prize for the best poem and she is to be judge. Miss Winkie Taylor is the President of this club and she tells me she has some fine snap-shots of Doris Kenyon, Milton Sills and their baby, Kenyon, which she will sell for 10c apiece. She also has snaps of many other popular stars and anyone may order as many as they like. The proceeds will go to the club to carry on with. Miss Taylor, by the way, is putting out a most attractive club paper called Baby Kenyon News, which is illustrated throughout with some of her own cute sketches.

More Stars Added

THE Movie Stars Fan Club has added Alice White, Betty Compson, Lupe Velez and Molly O'Day to their boosting list, and now has three new membership lists to send new members, including Starlight, the club magazine. Life membership is $1.00 and you receive five photos of your favorite movie actresses—yearly membership is 25c and you receive one photo of your favorite.

Second Elinor Faire Club

ANOTHER Elinor Faire club wishes to be mentioned in these pages. Miss Barbara Wayne of Brooklyn, New York, is the founder, and she says she is quite certain all those who saw Miss Fair in The Volga Boatman and in Jim, the Conqueror, will want to join and they are all invited.

Here is Norma Shearer aided by her mother in sending more than 22,000 letters to as many of her admirers.

Paper Contest

THE Fall Number of the Lina Basquette club paper is now out and it is very "newsy." The club has been holding a title contest (the winning title to be the permanent one of the paper) and so far Miss Katheryne Berry seems to be leading the race with The Spotlight. Mrs. Pearl Tice, President of the L. B. C., asks all members to send in some kind of a snap of themselves, for an album which will later be sent on to Lina. Mrs. Tice also welcomes all magazine pictures and newspaper clippings pertaining to Miss Basquette. This club also has lovely club pins—they are diamond-shaped, half being painted in red, and the rest in white (the club colors), and engraved across the center of the pin are the club initials L. B. C. These pins cost 25c but are worth more, and they can be ordered by Mrs. Tice only in lots of twelve or more, so you see it is necessary that she receive lots of orders from her members. The next issue of the L. B. C. paper will be issued sometime during the first part of December, and prizes are being offered for all material that is printed.

Free Entrance Fee

ANOTHER interesting and worthwhile club paper is the Rambova Rambler, issued for and by the Natacha Rambova fan club. It is edited by Miss Sunny Peterson and published every two months. It contains many items of interest about officers and members of the club, about Natacha and about the late Rudy. And every member who has any article printed in the Rambler may enter another friend in the club entirely free of charge for one year.

POSTAL POUCH

The Postal Pouch editor will answer your questions on this page. For personal answer enclose 2-cent stamp.

VERLE P.: Barry Norton was the youth who was killed in a roadster in the early sequences of The Legion of the Condemned. Write to him at the Fox Studios, where he is under contract. He has been loaned out to Paramount for a very fine role with Emil Jannings in The Sins of the Fathers.

YVONNE B.: Clara Bow is twenty-three years old, Billie Dove twenty-five, and Tom Mix about forty-eight. Write to Tom at the F. B. O. Studios, Hollywood.

NORINE G.: Barry Norton is the young actor whose work you admired in The Legion of the Condemned. He's an Argentine who made his debut as Mother's Boy in What Price Glory, and who is now at work in another Fox picture, The Four Devils. Write to him at that studio and ask him to send you his photograph. Yes, I send personal replies to any fans who enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope with their questions.

L. L. L. D.: Fox, F. B. O., Warner Brothers, and United Artists are in Hollywood; M-G-M and De Mille are in Culver City; First National is located near Burbank, and Universal is at Universal City. Thomas Meighan is under contract to the Caddo Productions, Metropolitan Studios, Hollywood. Patsy Ruth Miller, Jack Perrin, and Hoot Gibson can be reached at Universal; Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, and Dolores Del Rio at United Artists; Jackie Coogan is now in military school, but Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will still see that he gets his mail. Betty Bronson is at Warner's; Milton Sills is under contract to First National, Doris Kenyon is free-lancing while Antonio Moreno and Betty Compson have been working in pictures there recently; Marie Prevost is at Metropolitan; Tom Mix will release his Argentine pictures through F. B. O.; and the following players can be found at M-G-M: Marion Davies and (temporarily) Leatrice Joy. No, your questions don't make me sore. No questions, no work; no work, no pay; no pay—and I'd be just another butterfly puttering around in the rain.

Dolores Del Rio, ever popular with Postal Pouch fans, poses in a smart Spanish shawl which she acquired during her recent stay in Europe.

ANNA P.: Margaret Livingston is Scotch-Irish, and Sally O'Neil claims more than a dash of Irish, though she, too, is American born. All the others listed in your letter are plain Yankee. Esther Ralston and Jobyna are not related; neither are June and Julia Marlowe.

ARTHUR V. V.: The only way to find out if actors will answer your letters is to write them. Most of them do, however. Charles Farrell is six feet, two inches tall and weighs one hundred and seventy-five pounds. Virginia Lee Corbin is not married. If you take especially good photographs you would probably screen well; but it's no cinch to get into the movies, you know. You'd better stick to your Canadian Northwoods and become a brave M. P.

AVA: Clara Bow was born July 29, 1905, and Bebe Daniels January 14, 1901. Neither has ever been married. Colleen Moore's husband is John McCormick, a First National producer. She is about twenty-five years old. Renee Adoree is twenty-six, according to the statement given on her marriage license June 28, 1927, when she married Wm. Sherman Gill, a business man. She was formerly married to Tom Moore. Pronounce it Ree-nay A-do-ray, with the accent on the first syllable of each name.

P. C.: Why not P. S.? No, Ramon Novarro isn't the least bit Greek, nor is he Spanish. He's pure Mexican—and mighty proud of it, too.

JUST MODERN: You like my sense of humor, eh? Many's the night I've laughed myself awake dreaming of my own jokes. Molly O'Day is nineteen years old. The last I heard of Lila Lee, she was on her way to Europe to meet her husband, James Kirkwood. Just because you're built like a stove you're not so hot? Well, you sound mighty good to me—but don't take your movie ambitions too seriously. Write again any time when you're lonely and have read all the movie magazines you say you buy each month.

TEN YEARS AGO

Wallace Beery played a Swedish housemaid—Lon Chaney bent his knees—Cowboys pilfered film—and highest wage was $10.

Bird's-Eye View

BACK in the Vitagraph days there were no casting directors. In the old Brooklyn studio, a window in the second-story executive office overlooked the yard where each morning extras crowded, hoping for a day's work. The director would look out on the crowd and from this vantage point—too far away to listen to futile arguments—he made his selections for the day. Fifteen years or more later, casting is done by a very cautious process in the suite of offices housing the Central Casting Bureau, where there is a complete record of every extra in Hollywood.

Real Cowboys

WHEN the movies were still in swaddling clothes, back in the days when a two-reeler was a super-special, the rivalry was so heated between rival units of Western actors that the cowboys, armed to the teeth sat up all night and guarded their respective lots against arson, plunder, and other unwelcome visitations. Rival companies, none too scrupulous, stole each other's strips of film. Finally, in desperation, most of the studios adopted a trade mark, which appeared conspicuously on every inch of film, tacked against a tree in an exterior, or hung on the wall in an interior. In a "close-up" it was not altogether surprising to find the lower half of a kiss modestly hidden under a film company's distinguishing name or number, like the identification of a criminal!

Extra's Pittance

THERE were seventeen directors at Vitagraph from 1913 to 1915. Among them were William Humphries; Henry Gaskell; Van Dyke Brooks; Wilfred North; Larry Semon, who later turned comedian, and who died in October, 1928; C. J. Williams; Ralph Ince; Harry Davenport; Sidney Drew; S. Rankin Drew, his son; James Young; Left Johnson, and Wally Van. They paid $1.50 a day for extras in a "mob" scene; $2.50 for general extra work; and $5.00 for extras wearing evening clothes. Some very talented players were given contracts guaranteeing them $15 a week, for three days work. If they worked four days, they got $20—$5 extra for each additional day.

A Has-Been

ONE of the oldest idols of screen fans is Florence Lawrence, who still plays occasionally in pictures. At one time she was a Biograph star. At the height of her career she met with an accident which made her an invalid for many months. She was starring in Pawns of Destiny, in which role she was required to rescue Matt Moore from a burning building. Moore weighed, at the time, 168 pounds, and Miss Lawrence, 110. Nevertheless, she carried him on her back, and wrenched her spine to the extent that it has ever been a source of pain to her. She recently played a small part in Me, Gangster.

The Stunt Girl

RHEA MITCHELL, long since faded from the silver screen, was the biggest star of the Broncho, Domino, and Kay Bee Companies twelve or fifteen years ago. She was five feet two inches tall, with very dark blue eyes and wavy red-gold hair. She was known as "the stunt girl," for she was famous for her daring leaps from cliffs and buildings; was constantly being rescued from burning ships; made a habit of getting lost in swamps and quicksands, and nearly drowned too many times to count.

Did You Know That:

WALLACE BEERY'S first screen role was in a two-reel Essanay picture? He played a Swedish housemaid . . . . Corinne Griffith made her first film for Vitagraph in 1916 . . . . Fifteen years ago Mabel Normand was starring in Keystone comedies?

NO matter how lacking you are in qualities of leadership, no matter how colorless, timid, unsuccessful and discouraged you may be, I GUARANTEE to so magnetize your personality that your whole life will be completely transformed!

I can give you poise that banishes self-consciousness, charm that makes you irresistibly popular, personal power that will indelibly influence the minds of others and amaze your friends.

I'll make you a fascinating force in social life, a powerful, dynamic, commanding figure in your profession. You'll become more popular, more prosperous, more gloriously successful than you ever dreamed possible!

Let me send you the proof — absolutely free! If within 5 days you do not experience a decided change in your personality, if you do not find yourself making new friends with ease, if you do not discover yourself already on the way to social popularity, business success and personal leadership—just say so! Tell me my principle of personal magnetism can't do every single thing that I said it would do. And you won't owe me one penny!

What Is Sex Magnetism?

What is that magnetic powerful influence that draws one man to one woman—forever, irresistibly? What is that strange, never-failing spark that awakens love? What is it, in man or woman, that seems to draw and fascinate—the hypnotic power that no one can resist?

You have it. Everyone has it. But do you use it?

What is Personal Magnetism?

What is this marvelous force that raises the sick to glowing, vibrant health, the timid to a new, confident personality, the unsuccessful to positions of wealth and astonishing power?

You have it—everyone has it—but not one person in a thousand knows how to use it! It is not a fad nor a theory. It is simply you, yourself—your manner—your own marvelous personal force, released and magnified a hundredfold in an amazingly clear-as-crystal, scientific way! More necessary than good looks. More valuable than money. For wthout it a salesman is handcuffed! Without it a business man is powerless to command! No actor, no teacher, no orator, no statesman can long hold his audience spellbound without this supremely influential magnetic force!

Personal Magnetism! How easy to release it! How wonderful its results! No long study or inconvenience. Not the slightest self-denial. Just a simple, clear, age-old principle that taps the vast thought and power resources within you, releases the full sweep of your magnetic potentialities and makes you almost a new person from what you were before!

Personal Magnetism is not hypnotism. Hypnotism deadens, Magnetism awakens, inspires, uplifts. Personal Magnetism is not electricity. It is like electricity in one way—while you cannot see it, you can observe its startling effects. For the moment you release your Personal Magnetism you feel a new surge of power within you. You lose all fear. You gain complete self-confidence. You become almost overnight the confident, dominant, successful personality you were intended to be—so fascinating that people are drawn to you as irresistibly as steel is drawn to a magnet!

The Facts are Free

The fundamental principles of Personal Magnetism have been put into an extra large volume under the title of "Instantaneous Personal Magnetism." It is bound in beautiful dark burgundy, with the title gold embossed. Its scope is as broad as life itself. "Fires of Magnetism," "Sex Influences," "The Magnetic Voice," "Physical Magnetism," "The Magnetic Eye," "Oriental Secrets," "Rapid Magnetic Advancement," "The Magnetic Mind," and "Magnetic Healing," are only a few of the subjects covered in this amazing book. A magnificent book that tells you just how to cultivate the magnetic influence of your nature.

You can sway and control others. You can command success. You can influence people to do the things you want them to do. Through this amazing book you gain the key to a magnetic personality in 5 days—or you don't pay one penny. That is my free offer to you!

Fans of England

THE Marie Prevost Fan Club, also The Clive Brook Fan Club, wishes to be duly recorded and announced. Mrs. Ethel Arnold has started them both way over in "merry England" and writes that she would be very glad to hear from any and all of their American fans.

Up and Coming

THE Richard Dix Club, run by our capable young friend, Harold Revine, now has a new policy of getting out an issue of the Dix Journal in honor of and right after the completion of every picture which Richard makes. The latest Journal—the Moran of the Marines edition, has just come into our hands and it is the best ever.

Right now a new membership contest—ending March 1—is being held. Richard Dix has promised a fine prize and a long letter to the member sending in the most memberships, renewals and club journal and magazine orders. Club pin orders count, too. And for every three memberships, a new photo of the club's popular star will be immediately sent you. The club pins, by the way, are beautifully designed and may be had for $1.25 each, postpaid. Richard himself recently bought four of them, one for himself and one for his mother, dad and sister. Dues to the Dix club are fifty cents yearly and that includes membership list and card and a cururent issue of the big Dix Journal.

Several new chapters have been added to the club, among them, The Charm Chapter, of New York, conducted by Elizabeth Barrett and named in honor of Richard's romantic picture, Too Many Kisses; and the Jim Bucklin Chapter, run by Madge Tullett and Beatrice Whitfield, and which, by the by, is the only official chapter of the club in Australia. Other chapters in America are the Quarterback Chapter, of Chicago, headed by Mary Frances Cooney; the Nophaie Chapter, of Los Angeles (the leading chapter of the club), run by Esther Cottingham; the Manhattan Chapter, of New York, piloted by Verna Pawlings; the John Storm Chapter, of Indianapolis, looked after by Mayme Sims; the John MacTavish Chapter, of Canada, taken care of by Ida Last, and last but not least, the new Redskin Chapter, which Mr. Revine looks after personally, besides supervising all the others.

The Most Daring Book Ever Written!

Elinor Glyn, famous author of "Three Weeks" has written an amazing book that should be read by every man and woman —married or single. "The Philosophy of Love" is not a novel —it is a penetrating searchlight fearlessly turned on the most intimate relations of men and women. Read below how you can get this thrilling book at our risk—without advancing a penny.

WILL you marry the man you love, or will you take the one you can get?

If a husband stops loving his wife, or becomes infatuated with another woman, who is to blame —the husband, the wife, or the "other woman?"

Will you win the girl you want, or will Fate select your Mate?

Should a bride tell her husband what happened at seventeen?

Will you be able to hold the love of the one you cherish—or will your marriage end in divorce?

Do you know how to make people like you?

ELINOR GLYN
"The Oracle of Love"

IF you can answer the above questions—if you know all there is to know about winning a woman's heart or holding a man's affections—you don't need "The Philosophy of Love." But if you are in doubt—if you don't know just how to handle your husband, or satisfy your wife, or win the devotion of the one you care for—then you must get this wonderful book. You can't afford to take chances with your happiness.

What Do YOU Know About Love?

DO you know how to win the one you love? Do you know why husbands, with devoted, virtuous wives, often become secret slaves to creatures of another "world"—and how to prevent it? Why do some men antagonize women, finding themselves beating against a stone wall in affairs of love? When is it dangerous to disregard convention? Do you know how to curb a headstrong man, or are you the victim of men's whims? Do you know how to retain a man's affection always? How to attract men? How to make love keep you youthful and fresh? Do you know the things that most irritate a man? Or disgust a woman? Can you tell when a man really loves you—or must you take his word for it? Do you know what you MUST NOT DO unless you want to be a "wall flower" or an "old maid"? Do you know the little things that make women like you? Why do "wonderful lovers" often become thoughtless husbands soon after marriage—and how can the wife prevent it? Do you know how to make marriage a perpetual honeymoon?

In "The Philosophy of Love,"—Elinor Glyn answers these precious questions—and countless others. She places a magnifying glass unflinchingly on the most intimate relations of men and women. No detail, no matter how delicate or avoided by others, is spared. She warns you gravely, she suggests wisely, she explains fully.

We admit that the book is decidedly daring. It had to be. A book of this type, to be of great value, could not mince words. But while Madame Glyn calls a spade a spade —while she deals with strong emotions and passions in her frank, fearless manner—she nevertheless handles her subject so tenderly and sacredly that the book can safely be read by any grown-up man or woman. In fact, anyone over eighteen should be compelled to read "The Philosophy of Love"; for, while ignorance may sometimes be bliss, it is folly of the rankest sort to be ignorant of the problems of love and marriage. As one mother wrote us: "I wish I had read this book when I was a young girl—it would have saved me a lot of misery and suffering."

Certain self-appointed censors may condemn "The Philosophy of Love." Anything of such an unusual character generally is. But Madame Glyn is content to rest her world wide reputation on this book—the greatest masterpiece of love ever attempted!

What Every Man and Woman Should Know

FOOT PAINS GONE in 10 minutes*

OR COSTS YOU NOTHING

Burning, aching, tired feeling in the feet and legs—cramps in toes, foot calluses, pains in toes, instep, ball or heel—dull ache in the ankle, calf or knee—shooting pains from back of toes, spreading of the feet, or that broken-down feeling—all can now be quickly ended.

SCIENCE says 94% of all foot pains result from weakened muscles that permit the foot bones to become displaced and press against sensitive nerves and blood vessels. Now a way is discovered to strengthen these muscles while holding the bones in position. Pains stop in 10 minutes when this amazing band, the Jung Arch Brace, is used. Stand, walk, or dance for hours—you just don't get tired. Just slips on—results are almost immediate. One of the secrets is in the tension and stretch. It is highly elastic and amazingly light and thin, yet strong and durable. An exceedingly soft sponge rubber lift is provided and urgently advised for severe cases. Worn with any style footwear. There is nothing stiff to further weaken muscles or cause discomfort.

Pain stops like magic. Soon band may be discarded and feet are well to stay. Nearly 2,000,000 now in use. Specialists, amazed at results, urge it widely.

Wear it 10 days; if not delighted, your money returned.

JUNG'S ARCH BRACES

1 Trouble starts in weakened muscles. Tiny bones of forward arch are displaced. Pain follows.

2 A super-elastic band assists and strengthens weakened muscles, replaces bones. Pain stops instantly.

Go to druggist, shoe store or chiropodist. If they can't supply you use coupon below and pay postman. Write for free book on foot troubles.

Harry Carr Comments

Greta's Grouch

"GOD," growled Greta Garbo at the farewell party given Eva Von Berne, who recently returned to Vienna, "you are a lucky girl. I wish they had sent me home."

Greta doesn't like Hollywood; but she condescends to take the money. They never learn to hate the cashier.

The Gloomy Swede

GRETA'S is a singular case. When Maurice Stiller came over here from Sweden four or five years ago, to direct Hollywood pictures, he brought an anemic, drab, morose, sullen little Swedish girl along. They didn't want her in the studio; but they had to take her because they didn't dare offend the great Stiller.

Mr. Stiller died in Sweden, a failure, but the little Swedish girl has become one of the greatest stars of the screen. She is still morose.

The Way of Lupe

THE girls who get to the top as play actors are like Lupe Velez who haven't an idea in the world why they do anything. They just walk up and smack the right emotion in the eye with the simplicity and unerring accuracy of pure instinct. As some one has said of a great boxer, girls like Lupe and Clara Bow and Joan Crawford don't THINK what to do; they SEE what to do.

Pola's Husband

POLA NEGRI'S husband, the nice little Georgian prince, slid into Hollywood and then slid out again. He said he had come to settle their real estate affairs. He said that Pola will make her future pictures in Paris; but I have a hunch she is negotiating for a return to Hollywood.

Pola came over here from Germany as the most successful star at that time in the world. Every picture she made in America has been a flop. They didn't like her in the smaller towns.

"Forbidden Paradise"

AT THAT, I think the best picture she ever made was Lubitsch's Forbidden Paradise. At least it contained one of the finest scenes that has ever been shown on any screen. This was the banquet scene where the innocent and badly smitten young huzzar officer toasted her as his ideal of pure womanhood—and she knew that all the huzzar officers were strangling with laughter. The picture didn't get to first base at the box office.

Here's a Queer Way To Learn Music!

No teacher—no monotonous exercises or confusing details. Just a simple, easy home-study method. Takes only a few minutes—costs only a few cents—a day. No "grind" or hard work. Every step is clear as crystal—simple as A. B. C. throughout. You'll be surprised at your own rapid progress!

WHO would have ever thought that the learning of music could be simplified? Seems almost too good to be true to think of learning to play your favorite instrument without long hours of practice—tedious scales and expensive teachers, doesn't it?

Yet that's exactly how you learn this new way. The only thing that is queer about this amazing method is the fact that it's so different from all ordinary methods.

But although this marvelous home-study method is different and comparatively new it has already been carefully tested and proved by almost half a million people all over the world. Judge from that how satisfactory, reliable and easy it must be.

Here's Proof!

"I am making splendid progress and can play almost any piece of music I pick up. My friends used to laugh when I first took up music with you, but now when I play pieces of Grand Opera and selections from Verdi, Mozart, Bach, etc., it is I who laugh. I owe all I have learned to the U. S. short-cut method."—J. W. R., Telstad, Mont.

"I have found the lessons very interesting and exceedingly easy. They could not be made any clearer in the English language. I will always give the U. S. School of Music my best approval."—A. F. B., Clinton, N. C.

"I do not understand how you can give so much for the money. The course is a musical education in itself. I wish more people in limited financial circumstances would realize that one can really successfully learn to play from your course, without the aid of a teacher."—W. E. W., Montesano, Wash.

Musical Talent Not Needed

Even if you have never touched an instrument before you can't go wrong this amazingly easy way. For every step, from beginning to end, is right before your eyes in print and picture. You always know what to do and how to do it. No guesswork. No delays. If you make a mistake you correct it yourself and continue. It's really fun learning to play this way, you proceed so rapidly. From the start you are playing real tunes perfectly by note. And almost before you realize it you will be able to play anything—the popular "Jazz" or those classical selections for which there is always a big demand at concerts and home entertainments.

Best of all no matter which instrument you choose the cost of learning is just the same in each case, just a few cents a day!

Have Fun—Win New Friends

Just think of all the pleasure you've been missing by not being able to play some musical instrument. Instead of being the center of attraction at parties—you've been unnoticed—out of the social picture. While you've been playing wallflower others have always had something to offer. Now you have a wonderful chance to turn the tables—to treat yourself to some real fun—to surprise your friends! Take some good advice. Learn to play this new easy way. Get your share of a musician's pleasure, popularity, profit. Start Now!

These explain our wonderful method fully and show you how easily and quickly you can learn to play at little expense. Instruments are supplied when needed—cash or credit. U. S. shrilling cheers as Janet Gaynor and Charlie Farrell appeared together . . . James Hall and Matty Kemp stagging it . . . Ruth Roland and Ben Bard . . .

WISH I could be nineteen every month!" cried Molly O'Day at the gay dinner-dance given her on her natal anniversary by her sister Sally O'Neil. A birthday cake had just been set before her when she made this naive remark.

"Wait a few years, darling, and you'll be voting for fewer birthdays and less of them!" advised Lilyan Tashman, wisely.

Miss O'Neil's guests included, besides the honoree, the Buster Keatons (Natalie Talmadge), Marshall Neilans (Blanche Sweet), Edmund Lowes (Lilyan Tashman), Don Alvarados, John Howards (Isabel O'Neil), Mrs. Ona Brown with her fiance Harvey Barnes, Misses Joan Crawford, Bessie Love, Phyllis Haver, Alice White, Josephine Dunn, Sharon Lynn and Messrs. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Buster Collier, Ben Lyon, Roland Drew, Jack Pickford and Barney Glazier.

THE flapper film set frolicked at a querade given by pretty Ethel Jackson. A jazz orchestra provided music for dancing downstairs while upstairs Sandra gazed in her crystal ball for all and sundry. In the receiving line were Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Jackson, parents of the hostess, and her aunt, Mrs. E. J. Gough of New York.

WELCOME to Hollywood—Maurice Chevalier, Idol of France!" So read the huge streamer above the hospitable door of the Hotel Roosevelt on the occasion of the renowned actor's arrival in the film capital. A group of celebrities—Baclanova, Adolphe Menjou, A. d'Abbadie d'Arrast, Mary Brian, Ruth Taylor, Ernest Vadja, Charles Rogers, Doris Hill, Robert Castle, Paul Lukas, Lane Chandler and Henri-Didot, French Consul—met the Chevaliers (Mrs. Chevalier is Suzanne Vallee, former dancing partner of her husband) at the station and escorted them to the hotel where a reception-luncheon was held.

One of the press representatives, arriving late and seeing someone he took to be an old friend, gave him a hearty jab in the ribs with a "How's the old boy?" Maurice Chevalier turned around with a beaming smile and returned the jab. "O. K.!" says he. The p. r., gibbering in embarrassed astonishment, tried to explain his mistake, but Chevalier laughed: "It is Holy-wood!" with an expansive wave of his arms.

Later in his speech, he told us how he had signed his "cone-tra" with Mr. Lasky to make his very first picture (and it's to be a talkie at that!) and how he "lofed Holy-wood" because it reminded him of his own Southern France. He regretted the absence of Mary and Doug, his so great friends . . .

EVERYONE had such a marvelous time at Bodil Rosing's party that it continued into the wee, sma' hours and wound up with breakfast. Bodil cooked the midnight Danish supper with her own fair hands. As Monte Blue, her son-in-law remarked, that announcement beforehand would be enough to cause a riot and a traffic expert would be needed to straighten out the traffic.

The hostess wore a becoming, but intricate Danish peasant costume, so Patsy Ruth Miller spent most of her time trying to discover how it was made. "But three caps, my dear, on her head! Most of the costume is in triplicate," sighed Patsy, exhausted with her efforts.

Myrna Loy and Barry Norton came late. That romance has lasted for more than a year.

Preston Duncan, noted artist-photographer, had lent his house for the occasion so everyone hand an opportunity to admire the exquisite studies he has made of Bodil Rosing.

Kamra, the fascinating new card game invented by Mrs. Tom Miranda, supplanted bridge at a luncheon and card party given by Mrs. Miranda recently. Those who enjoyed the game were Mrs. Monte Blue, Mrs. Jean Hersholt, Anita Stewart, Ruth Roland, Mrs. John Ford, Dorothy Dwan, Sharon Lynn, Mrs. Victor Schertzinger, Corliss Palmer, Peggy Hamilton, Claire Windsor and Mrs. Tod Browning.

It contains "The Magic Mirror" of Michael Nostradamus, the seer of the Middle Ages who was consulted by Catherine de Medici and King Charles the Ninth! What can this book tell you? Send No Money. Examine it for Five Days Free!

MICHAEL NOSTRADAMUS' method has nothing to do with palmistry, astrology, phrenology, or any other form of superstition. It depends entirely upon the properties which mystics have long attributed to the numbers from 1 to 20. Learned men have speculated about the strange revealing power of figures for centuries, but Michael Nostradamus was the first to use it so systematically and so definitely, that many Kings and great Nobles sought his help and advice in planning their conquests in Statecraft and Love. As the article from the authoritative International Encyclopedia states, the celebrated Catherine de Medici was one of his noblest patrons. Nostradamus' fame finally made him Court Physician to King Charles the Ninth of France.

And now you can use his famous system yourself! It indicates replies to the "one hundred and forty vital questions" about Life, Love, and Success.

What Will These Mystic Numbers Tell You?

In his lifetime, Michael Nostradamus was so great an authority on Arithomancy (Divination by Means of Fateful Numbers) that his house in Lyons, France, was constantly visited by crowds of the Great, the Wealthy, the Noble and the Learned of both sexes—all desiring his aid in drawing aside the veil of the future.

But then came ages when his famous method was lost sight of. It was practically unknown for 350 years, until the earnest search of a few people who believed in the truly amazing properties of Fateful Numbers brought to light in an old bookstore, a single dust-covered copy of "The Magic Mirror of Michael Nostradamus." In it the great quasi-scientist of the Middle Ages had explained his system fully, completely and unmistakably!

The ancient Egyptians practised Arithomancy, or Divination by Means of Figures, and depended upon it to reveal every detail relating to their Duration of Life, Future Health, Happiness, Fortune, Success in Life, Future Position, Love Affairs, Friendships, Marriage, Children, etc., etc. Their system was, however, known only to the initiated priests, and died with them.

But the system of Michael Nostradamus was set down in writing and has lived, hidden for over 350 years, in the pages of his "Magic Mirror." And now at last it has been republished!

Which of the "140 Vital Questions" Do You Feel Most Curious About?

Here are a Few:

- Shall I soon fall in love?
- Shall I be an old maid? bachelor?
- How many times shall I marry?
- Will my husband have a fortune? wife
- Shall I marry a handsome man? woman?
- Shall I become rich?
- Shall I take a journey soon?
- Shall I inspire real love?
- Is my affection well-placed?
- Will love give me happiness?
- Does he really mean to marry me? she
- Have I a rival?
- Is my rival as nice-looking as I am?
- Will my first child be a boy or a girl?
- Shall I be divorced?
- Shall I obtain the money which is coming to me?
- How many years shall I live?

How the Magic Mirror Works

"The Magic Mirror of Nostradamus" looks like an ordinary book — except that the front cover is pierced with a small square window. Through this opening the "Fateful Numbers" from 1 to 20 appear.

The remainder of the book is filled with the tables of replies to questions, based upon the abstruse and mystic methods laid down by Nostradamus between the years 1503 and 1566.

It takes only a few minutes of fun to refer to the "Magic Mirror" on any subject about which you are curious.

What the INTERNATIONAL ENCYCLOPEDIA Tells Us About NOSTRADAMUS

NOS'TRADA'MUS (MICHEL DE NOTREDAME) (1503–66). A French astrologer of Jewish descent, born at Saint-Remy in Provence. He studied at Avignon and medicine at Montpellier. During the pestilence of 1524–29 he went from city to city in the south of France, aiding the sufferers. He traveled for a number of years and in 1544 settled at Salon. The next year, when a new epidemic of the pest swept over the country, he was called to Aix and to Lyons. He treated his patients with a secret remedy that was credited with marvelous cures and gave him a great reputation. A few years later his claim that he had the power of reading the future attracted widespread attention. In 1550 he began to write his famous Centuries, mystic prophecies in rhymed quatrains, the first series published at Lyons in 1555. Catharine de' Medici invited their author to court, where he reached the height of his fame.

"THE LIFE STORY OF A DEVIL" is what Lupe Velez calls her own life story, which begins in the March issue of SCREEN SECRETS.

As Virginia's arms held him a little more tightly to her warm young breast, he knew that together they would find the world a beautiful kingdom of love.

denial, turned his undivided attention toward the procession that now came slowly down the aisle.

As the congregation rose, Manfred saw Irwin for the first time since their grim understanding. Bitterness, contempt, unforgiveness—these were stamped mercilessly on his features.

Choir boys and priests moved slowly down the aisle. From time to time Virginia caught a glimpse of Irwin's tragic face appearing and disappearing, separated from her by an actual spiritual barrier so like the one that now filled his heart and soul.

The procession had passed. Now in the rear of the church Helene Zurmuhlen, dressed in heavy mourning, entered slowly on the arm of a Sister of Mercy. The once lovely transparency of her white skin had taken on a strange ashen pallor, while her eyes held the vacant expression of a half-sleeping mind. Groping forward with movements pathetically childlike, helped gently by the Sister, she found a seat. Throughout the service she sat staring straight ahead, seeing nobody, conscious of nothing about her.

Again the procession of the chanting choir; then the congregation surged into the aisle. For a moment as Virginia and Reiner were thrown together, her eyes sought his steadily; but almost at once she turned away without a word of either challenge or forgiveness. Nor did Manfred give any sign of recognition beyond one hateful sneer. Irwin hurried away, eager to escape.

Suddenly he stopped, aghast; for before him, leaning on the arm of the Sister, was the Countess Zurmuhlen. In one glance he read the fearful change in her.

"Helene!" he cried involuntarily.

The staring eyes turned vacantly toward the sound of her name, but saw no one. She smiled dreamily, and wagged her head foolishly as if to deny what she had seemed to hear.

"Helene—oh, Helene! Don't you know me? Speak to me! Helene!"

In the agony of realization of what he had done to the woman who had loved him—too well—he put his hands firmly on her shoulders and forced her to look closely into his face. "Helene!" he whispered hoarsely, insistently: "Helene!"

She peered curiously before her as though a heavy veil hung between them. Then, as if it were suddenly lifted, she saw a face before her—a face that moved toward hers like a grim and terrible menace.

Helene Zurmuhlen screamed. "The devil! Kill him! Kill the devil!"

People, startled by her shriek, crowded about her. Reiner, backing away, horror stricken, turned to find himself looking into the condemning eyes of Virginia. Like a man persecuted and without hope, he fled from her, out of the church, to seek a solitary place where he could shield himself from the fearful evidences of his repented guilt.

For a brief moment Helene's eyes held a fleeting look of sanity. "Why doesn't someone kill the devil?" she asked almost reasonably, looking curiously from face to face. "Kill him! Kill him!"

Slowly a look of savage triumph crept

into her eyes. She herself would destroy the devil that was Irwin Reiner! She alone would avenge herself and the death of her husband!

IRWIN, determined to flee from Vienna and all its torturing associations, had closed his house. He was standing, a tragic and forlorn figure, in the midst of his favorite room—now shrouded, like all the others, in white covers, and with curtains snugly drawn—when the Sister of Mercy who had taken Helene to the church on Sunday was shown into the room.

"There are moments when Madame Zurmuhlen's mind is quite clear," she explained, coming directly to the point without unnecessary preliminaries. "It is then that she asks for you. All day she has cried your name."

Irwin bowed his head. "If she wishes to see me, I will gladly go with you," he replied simply.

Helene was sleeping quietly in her large, canopied bed when the Sister brought Irwin Reiner to her side.

"I will leave you," the nun whispered. "When she awakens there will be things she will have to say to you. I shall be outside when you need me."

Alone with her, Reiner searched Helene's face with pitying eyes. How could he repair the tragedy he had brought into her life? How could he restore vitality to this broken body, reawaken the smouldering fire in her beautiful dark eyes?

Helene Zurmuhlen's eyes opened slowly. For a while she stared vacantly ahead; but gradually she turned toward Reiner with a long, steady gaze.

"Helene," he said quietly, soothingly, as one speaks to a sick child. "I wanted to tell you the other day how sorry I am for everything—for this great wrong I have done you—I could not make you understand when I saw you on Sunday. Forgive me, Helene!"

Slowly she raised herself until she could see him more clearly. Then suddenly she went into convulsions of laughter born of madness. He, the sinner, talked to her like a saint! A weird, ravished creature, her hair disheveled, her eyes wild, she laughed until the tears streamed down her drawn white cheeks. The hollow sound of her hysterical mirth struck terror to his heart.

"Helene!" he cried helplessly. "Helene! For God's sake! Don't laugh like that! I can't bear it!"

The wracking laughter died into an ebb of half suppressed sobs. Helene in that moment looked more like a witch than a woman. Now in her distorted mind she was living over her past with Irwin Reiner, regarding it dispassionately, as a stranger, from a distance. . . . Their first meeting. . . . His mocking challenge. . . . Her haughty refusal to submit. . . . His passionate kiss upon her lips. . . . Her return to him that night, alone. . . . Hours—many hours, many weeks, of love. . . . His sudden coldness. . . . His ruthless turning from her to little Virginia Gessner. . . .

"I listened to his promises. . . ." she chanted aloud. "I loved him—oh, how very dearly I loved him. He was my life. . . . Heart of my heart. . . . I did not care to live without him."

Her face clouded. Now she spoke of her torturing memories. "He sent me away!" she shrieked. "He did not love me! He told me he hated me! I cried out for death. Oh, why do I live now—why?"

Irwin took her left hand, which lay twitching on the coverlet, in both of his and tried to sooth her. When she seemed quiet enough to understand, he said, "Helene, let me try to undo the past—to make amends." In his mind he groped for guidance. What would bring her peace and happiness now? "Let us marry," he said at last. "I promise always to cherish and protect you. Perhaps somehow we can rebuild our shattered lives—together—and find contentment."

Helene seemed not to have heard a single phrase. Her eyes were heavy with slumbering emotions, her brain befuddled with confused thought. At last she replied in a forced, unnaturally calm voice, "It is the devil who is the cause of all evil. When he is dead, I shall be free."

Slowly she drew her right hand from beneath the coverlet where it had been concealed. Suddenly a shot rent the room and Reiner, with a bullet in his side, staggered to his feet. There was no panic in him—only the realization that he was face to face with death.

The Sister rushed into the room. She did not notice that he was wounded, but saw only that Helene, exhausted by her emotions, had fallen back among the pillows.

"She must have hidden it in the bed," she exclaimed, picking up the revolver which had dropped from Helene's limp hand to the floor. "I don't know where she found it. I had no idea—"

Irwin Reiner listened gravely, successfully hiding from her the knowledge of his wound.

"Often a shock like this will awaken a sleeping mind," the Sister continued. "Recently she has had moments of clear sanity. I think—I am quite sure—she will recover now."

"Thank God!" he said reverently. Quietly, then, he left the room. The chauffeur looked at him curiously as he entered the car with an obvious effort, and ordered him to drive to the Gessner home.

Virginia would surely have noticed his unsteadiness had she not been so greatly startled by his coming to her again after what had taken place during the last few days. She tried to face him indifferently, even disapprovingly; but his tragic figure appealed to the woman in her, and her expression melted into tenderness.

Smiling through his pain, he said, without a conscious appeal to her sym-

"Embarrassing—but women must face this fact"

Says a woman doctor, authority on feminine hygiene

No longer need women fear offending others. Scientific deodorization* is a new feature of this modern sanitary pad, which excels in comfort and ease of disposability.

WOMEN who have had the advantage of medical advice already realize the importance of this latest discovery of Kotex Laboratories. Many others—unconscious offenders—should be told of this danger and how to avert it. There is no doubt that they are at all times offensive to others, in the world of business, in society—wherever they meet people. This knowledge, which once brought miserable self-consciousness, is now accepted easily, because the difficulty is entirely overcome. Each Kotex pad is now treated, by patented process*, to banish all odor.

No evidence of sanitary protection

All conspicuous bulkiness has been eliminated, by a new method of rounding and tapering corners of the pad. It fits snugly and securely, providing greater mental as well as physical comfort.

All the former superiorities

Kotex is easy to adjust to suit your individual needs. It is, as always, amazingly absorbent. Cellucotton absorbent wadding takes up 16 times its own weight in moisture. The fact that you can so easily dispose of it makes a great difference to women. And a new treatment renders it softer, fluffier than you thought possible.

Try The Improved Kotex—buy a box this very day. 45c for twelve, at any drug, dry goods or department store; also through vending cabinets in rest-rooms by West Disinfecting Co.

*Kotex is the only sanitary pad that deodorizes by patented process. (Patent No. 1,670,587.)

5 Important Features

1—Softer gauze ends chafing; pliable filler absorbs as no other substance can;

2—Corners are rounded and tapered; no evidence of sanitary protection under any gown;

3—Deodorizes—safely, thoroughly, by a new and exclusive patented process;

4—Adjust it to your needs; filler may be made thinner, narrower, as required;

and

5—It is easily disposed of; no unpleasant laundry.

pathies, "I am going away, Virginia, never to return. That's why I am here."

"Going away?" she repeated, not quite understanding the strange inflection in his tone.

"Yes—a long, long journey. . . . I shall never see you again. . . ." His voice broke a little Self-condemned, he stood humbly before her, awaiting the reproaches she would certainly heap upon him. But she did not speak.

"Though I do not deserve it," he went on at last, "a word of forgiveness from you will make my—my journey—easier."

After a brief moment's hesitation she accepted his outstretched hand. "I forgive you, Irwin. I, too, am sorry. But all that belongs to the past. You are going away. I hope you will find happiness. It lies within yourself."

"Yes—I shall find—happiness. . . . And peace. . . ."

Someone had entered the room with a heavy step, but they did not notice. Manfred stopped, aghast, when he discovered Reiner and Virginia. He made an involuntary move toward them as he saw Irwin lift the girl's hand gently to his lips.

"I love you," Irwin told her quietly. "The only love I have ever known. If there is any hope for my soul's redemption, it is in this one chaste, beautiful love."

Tears welled into Virginia's eyes, and were reflected in his own. A long, tender look passed between them—a last, beautiful moment of renunciation.

Into this moment Manfred crashed furiously like a storm cloud.

"You—here!" he snarled. "What are you doing here—you cur!"

Reiner's strength was ebbing fast. Fighting to keep from a complete collapse, he replied slowly, "I came—to say—goodbye. . . . I am going—on a long—journey. . . . I could not go—without her—forgiveness."

"Forgiveness! What insolence! What right have you to ask it—traitor that you are?" And then sternly, to Virginia, "What right have you to forgive him?"

Slowly Virginia turned toward Irwin Reiner with a look that betrayed her love for him. Quietly, then, she looked Manfred full in the eyes and answered, "We have no right to condemn—only to forgive."

Reiner turned to her gratefully. His strength was ebbing fast now. It occurred to him with sudden horror that perhaps he could not reach the door. He made a ghastly attempt at a bow; and then, at his first step forward he fell to the floor, as still as death.

Virginia sank to her knees beside him and gathered his head in her arms, her face reflecting the dead calm of despair. Then, as she saw a trickle of flood on the floor, she screamed.

Aroused by the sound of her voice, Irwin Reiner's eyes opened. Now he made a pitiful effort to rise, goaded by a desire to leave her like a man without a bid for sympathy, and because he was conscious of Manfred's distrustful staring. But the effort was too great, and he fell back against Virginia's breast.

"Manfred!" she cried. "He is dying! We must save him!" But Manfred made no move, so appalled was he by Virginia's very obvious love for the man who had once betrayed them—a love she no longer attempted to conceal. "Go—go!" she urged again. "Find a doctor! Call for help! . . . Oh, Irwin, beloved! You cannot die! Don't you see I need you—love you with all my heart?"

Her fingers brushed his damp hair from his cold forehead; her lips frantically sought his as if their touch might somehow renew his strength.

"I love you—love you, dearest," she crooned, kissing him now gently as if she were his mother, now passionately like a woman who has found her mate. Her face lighted with hope as his eyes slowly opened. Her voice was like a prayer as she repeated, "Irwin—I love you—only you!"

He struggled back to consciousness. A smile of happiness crossed his face; then sadly he shook his head. "I—do not—deserve—to be—loved," he replied with difficulty.

"Irwin, you are dearer than life to me!"

Memory flooded back to him—ugly memories of lustfulness and shame. "No, no—not that! The only thing left of me is this hideous mask of my own self—the devil's stamp on my face!" He shuddered as the horrible recollections beat on his tortured brain. "No, Virginia, no! Turn away from me. I have no right to your pity."

Irwin's eyes lingered upon her face, which now reflected heartbreak as well as compassion. Unable to bear her expression of infinite sadness, he turned away. He discovered what he had not known—that he was lying close to a cheval glass that reached to the floor. With a shudder he looked into its smooth surface, dreading what he would find reflected there.

But the face that looked back at him was that of a soul redeemed—chaste, spiritual, and kind. The mask of the devil was only a gruesome memory—a ghoulish dream. It was no longer a part of him.

Strength flowed back into his weak body; the realization of his redemption restored his broken spirit. As Virginia's arms held him a little more tightly to her warm young breast, he knew that he would live, and that together they would find the world a beautiful, happy kingdom of love. . . .

The End

LUPE VELEZ' LIFE STORY

—a story teeming with hair-raising events while she was still a child in revolution-torn Mexico, and no less exciting after she was launched on a stage career as an immediate sensation in a Mexican revue. Begin it in the March issue of SCREEN SECRETS, on sale February 10.

Speechless...When a Few Words Would Have Made Me!

But now I can face the largest audience without a trace of stage fright

THE annual banquet of our Association—the biggest men in the industry present—and without a word of warning the Chairman called on me to speak—and my mind went blank!

I half rose from my seat, bowed awkwardly and mumbled, "I'm afraid you'll have to excuse me today," and dropped back in my chair.

Speechless—when a few words would have made me! The opportunity I had been waiting for all my life—and I had thrown it away! If I could have made a simple little speech—giving my opinion of trade conditions in a concise, witty, interesting way, I know I would have been made for life!

Always I had been a victim of paralyzing stage fright. Because of my timidity, my diffidence, I was just a nobody with no knack of impressing others—of putting myself across. No matter how hard I worked it all went for nothing—I could never win the big positions, the important offices, simply because I was tongue tied in public.

And then like magic I discovered how to overcome my stage fright—and I was amazed to learn that I actually had a natural gift for public speaking. With the aid of a splendid new method I rapidly developed this gift until in a ridiculously short time, I was able to face giant audiences—without a trace of stage fright.

Today I am one of the biggest men in our industry. Scarcely a meeting or banquet is held without me being asked to speak. I am asked to conferences, luncheons and banquets as a popular after-dinner speaker. This amazing training has made me into a self-confident, aggressive talker—an easy, versatile conversationalist—almost overnight.

* * * *

No matter what work you are now doing or what may be your station in life; no matter how timid and self-conscious you now are when called upon to speak, you can quickly bring out your natural ability and become a powerful speaker. Now, through an amazing new training you can quickly shape yourself into an outstanding, influential speaker able to dominate one man or five thousand.

In this picture he plays a newsreel cameraman.

Sue went abroad with the company, directed by Dave Butler, but had to return to the Fox lot at Hollywood to put on make-up.

Through no fault of her own she hasn't had a good part in pictures since she gondolaed to America . . . Perhaps you remember Nicky Arnstein, who used to be her husband . . . Richard Dix hiking through Longacre Square and causing a ripple of comment among the vaudevillains who park in front of the Bond Building . . . Pierre Collings, who looks more like a leading man than a writer, getting his mail at the Shelton desk. Clive Confides possible—that I could not repress a smile for the irony of it all. To look at Brook—a taller, thinner, more sensitive man than he appears on the screen—one would think that here, surely, was one of the fortunate ones of the earth. Happiness seems his natural right. And indeed he customarily gives no other impression than that happineess is his. But this was a chill, dark day. The fog outside the windows might have been that of London. The reason for his nostalgia would readily have been apparent to anyone who has strayed from loved scenes.

As he sat wrapped in thought, a poised, clean-cut, fully matured gentleman, my mind passed over what I knew of those scenes which the weather was recalling to him. They formed a varied panorama, extending back to the days when the young Clive came down from Dulwich college, eager for the career which London surely must hold. That career, however, was slow in fashioning itself. A boy of varied talents, he moved restlessly from one thing to another. For a year he held an assistant-secretaryship at the Colonial Club, then passed on to newspaper work and the writing of short stories.

As an inheritance from his mother Charlotte Brook, the opera singer, he had theatrical ambitions from boyhood. After leaving Dulwich, he studied under Fry, the teacher of some of England's greatest actors, but his work was restrained to the elocution stage. Although he made his first stage appearance at fourteen, it was an amateur performance. He made no attempt to enter professional work until after the war.

When war was declared, Brook joined the Artists' Rifles. He was a private. Six months later, when the unit was dissolved, he was made a subaltern. His first commissioned duty was to take charge of the machine-gun section of a London regiment on lookout for Zeppelins on the east coast.

With the formation of the Machine Gun Corps, Brook was assigned to it, and with a "suicide club" he remained for the greater portion of the war. For gallantry in the front lines, he rose to the rank of major. At Nessines, however, he was buried under an avalanche of dirt when a mined area was exploded, and although he apparently escaped unscathed, serious after-effects developed and he was invalided home. Recovering, he was kept in London to drill troops—and he was instructing at Grantham, the machine gun headquarters, when the first contingent of American officers arrived.

"Things even up," he philosophizes. "It was terrible, of course—but if I had not experienced so much service I doubt that I'd be able to do a thing with my current role of Captain Durrence."

Durrence, it is to be recalled, is the doughty officer in A. E. W. Mason's excellent tale, Four Fathers, who car-

GROW—

Yes, Grow Eyelashes and Eyebrows like this in 30 days

THE most marvelous discovery has been made—a way to make eyelashes and eyebrows actually grow. Now if you want long, curling, silken lashes, you can have them—and beautiful, wonderful eyebrows.

I say to you in plain English that no matter how scant the eyelashes and eyebrows, I will increase their length and thickness in 30 days—or not accept a single penny. No "ifs," "ands," or "maybes." It is new growth, startling results, or no pay. And you are the sole judge.

Proved Beyond the Shadow of a Doubt

Over ten thousand women have tried my amazing discovery, proved that eyes can now be fringed with long, curling natural lashes, and the eyebrows made intense, strong silken lines! Read what a few of them say. I have made oath before a notary public that these letters are voluntary and genuine. From Mlle. Heffelfinger, 240 W. "B" St., Carlisle, Pa.: "I certainly am delighted . . . I notice the greatest difference . . . people I come in contact with remark how long and silky my eyelashes appear." From Naomi Otstot, 5437 Westminster Ave., W. Phila., Pa.: "I am greatly pleased. My eyebrows and lashes are beautiful now.", From Frances Raviart, R. D. No. 2, Box 179, Jeanette, Penn.: "Your eyelash and eyebrow beautifier is simply marvelous." From Pearl Provo, 2954 Taylor St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.: "I have been using your eyebrow and eyelash Method. It is surely wonderful." From Miss Flora J. Corriveau, 8 Pinette Ave., Biddeford, Me.: "I am more than pleased with your Method. My eyelashes are growing long and luxurious."

Results Noticeable in a Week

In one week—sometimes in a day or two—you notice the effect. The eyelashes become more beautiful—like a silken fringe. The darling little upward curl shows itself. The eyebrows become sleek and tractable—with a noticeable appearance of growth and thickness. You will have the thrill of a lifetime—know that you can have eyelashes and eyebrows as beautiful as any you ever saw.

Remember . . . in 30 days I guarantee results that will not only delight, but amaze. If you are not absolutely and entirely satisfied, your money will be returned promptly. I mean just that—no quibble, no strings. Introductory price $1.95. Later the price will be regularly $5.00.

Senorita Cyclone, Lupe Velez' Life Story

Begins in the March issue of SCREEN SECRETS—an amazing chronicle of the tempestuous career of this fiery, temperamental star from her childhood days in war-torn Mexico to her dazzling success in Hollywood. An intimate, startling story in which the star herself tells of experiences at the age of ten that would stagger an adult. On sale February 10.

ries on although stricken blind. It should be a great characterization, for Brook knows war and soldiering to the last bullet. Indeed, so thorough was his education in it, that when the fighting was done, he sought work as far as possible from its blood and noise. He approached Sir Alfred Butt, the celebrated producer, with a desire for stage work, and was immediately cast for the leading male role in Fair and Warmer.

After a long run and tour, he was placed under contract by Basil Dean, one of England's foremost theatrical men, and for him he played a varied succession of roles. His chief success, however, was in the polite drama of Shaw, Pinero, Arnold Bennett and the American William Hurlburt. In Bennett's Sacred and Profane Love he was cast opposite the popular Mildred Evelyn, an association which led to a romance, and in 1920, to marriage.

When Betty Compson went to England to make Woman To Woman for Graham-Cutts, Brook was cast for the male lead. When the picture was shown in this country, American producers began to bid for his services. For two years he held out against them, before accepting a contract from the late Thomas Ince.

Brook is given to laughter, recalling the experience. "Ince had all the vigor which later I was to associate with the United States. He made arrangements for me to leave immediately. We finished a picture in Paris, working at night in the Follies Bergere. I caught the eight o'clock boat for London, arrived and sailed immediately for New York. In New York I was hurried across this immense country, hurried out to the studio, and hurried before the camera to make a picture that I can't recall without blushing, Christine of The Hungry Heart.

"The fact is, if it hadn't been for Florence Vidor, who was being featured, I would have chucked it all and gone home. That is, to what I called home in those days. She was marvelous to me, and I was particularly delighted that I had the opportunity of playing opposite her in her first starring picture, For Alimony Only.

"Anyway, I stuck it out, and finally managed to bridge the adjustment gap. I can't say it was a particularly happy experience—but after free-lancing for a time, and a term with Warner Brothers, I came to Paramount. They are fine people, and believe me I've had reason to be grateful to Miss Vidor."

"Truthfully?" I asked. "What if she hadn't troubled to help you accustom yourself to Hollywood, and you had gone back to England. Mightn't you have been happier?"

"No," he answered promptly. "The failure would have fretted me forever. Something I'd flunked. And that, of course, would have been worse than the topsy-turvy state I'm in now. At all events, the fact remains. I stuck."

"And here you are—"

"Here I am, still chasing the rainbow's end."

"But if you went back to England, don't you think that you'd be able to slip back into the old grooves?"

He moved his head slowly. "I think not. Percy Marmont finally did—after a terribly unhappy time. But I don't think I could. For one thing, I've been pretty steadily successful here, and that's always heartening. Percy didn't work his entire last year in Hollywood. Naturally, he was unhappy, and England looked rosy indeed. And so, after the first few months, it proved for him. But I don't believe it ever will for me again. Of course—"

He fell silent, and I knew that he was thinking of the glamour of Piccadilly Circus, the Mall, the slow pace of the Thames and the gay wonder of that season which prompted Browning to cry, "Oh, to be in England now that April's there!" Then he shrugged, and said: "However, that's that. And now that the talkies are here it won't be long before the proudest of us will be happy to admit being a movie actor."

"You are sold on the talkies?"

"Absolutely!" His eyes began to shine as do Peggy Joyce's when someone mentions diamonds.

"Hitherto," he went on enthusiastically, "pictures have been fragmentary. When you see an actor open his mouth to speak, words naturally should come forth. When they do not something very important is missing. But on the other hand you have facial pantomime that is denied in the theatre to all but the holders of the front seats. Talkies will combine the two."

"You don't think, then, that after the novelty of sound is gone, that we will revert to silence? You know there is already some cry against sound pictures."

"Of course. There are people ready to shout down anything new. But their criticism is mainly on the score of the present imperfections that presently will be ironed out. And, man, think of the opportunities of listening to men like Gilbert Murray and Dean Inge. Shaw has appeared — why shouldn't they? He should, by the way, make another appearance, a serious one. The chances are amazing. No, I don't think we'll go back to the dumb drama any more than a legless man who has regained his limbs would go back to wooden ones!"

"They'll be great for you," I admitted. "But how about that great army of the unprepared?"

"More characterized roles, perhaps." He shrugged and smiled. "But that's their problem. If they're big enough they'll solve it; if not, at least they've had the struggle—and the knowledge that at least they are alive!"

Despite his smile, his eyes were shadowed, and once more the man behind the mask was revealed. In that instant I was granted the impression that it is not dreams but unrest, the eternal ferment which keeps the spirit on the qui vive, which forms the stuff that real actors are made of.

EARLE LIEDERMAN, The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling" "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health" "Endurance," Etc.

Have the Vitality of a Champion

Have the punch—the power—the speed—the everlasting energy of a champion. You can have it easily, because I've learned the hidden secret of building giant strength into a man almost overnight. I've taken hundreds of men from the ranks and made them into leaders—champions in every walk of life. I did it in 90 days. And I can do it to you!

Here's How to Get It

People call me the Muscle-Builder. I take weak, run-down, under-developed bodies, and transform them into great, broad-shouldered, handsome ones in a few short weeks. I tune up the heart, the lungs, the liver, the kidneys, and build a wall of healthful muscular protection around them that laughs at disease and ill-health. It seems uncanny the way you grow before your own eyes. How your chest comes out, and your stomach draws in—how your arms begin to bulge with the superhuman strength I build there, and little lumps of firm muscles will begin to appear all over your body.

15 Minutes Is All I Need

And to make you grow like this, I ask only 15 minutes of your spare time each day. 15 minutes of simple, easy, energy-building movements, which you can do in the privacy of your own room. To you it seems like a pleasant, little workout. But every single movement is the result of over 20 years of careful scientific study, and they bring surprising results. There is no wasted effort; no extra work—and how your body speeds toward the goal of physical and mental perfection. The goal every man must reach to be a champion.

My 30 Day Guarantee

I don't just promise these things. I know what I can do. In 30 days I guarantee to add one full inch of real, live muscle to each of your arms, and two full inches of the same champion-building strength across your chest. And it all comes so easily—so quickly—that you'll hardly believe your eyes when you see the improvement in your mirror.

Your Success Builds an Army of Friends

And as you grow, you'll change—somehow you'll find yourself more alert mentally. You'll grasp things easier, your work will seem like play, and you'll still have plenty of pep at the end of the day to go out right after night and enjoy the good times life holds for you.

Your boss will notice the difference, too. He'll begin to take an interest in you, and before you know it, you'll find yourself doing things he wouldn't trust other men to do. Your wife or sweetheart will notice the change, and you'll revel in the joy of her ever increasing love.

But let me tell you all about it in my new 64 page book. It is absolutely free. Just clip and mail the coupon and it's yours. Do it now and see how easy it is to be the man you've always dreamed of being.

This will not obligate you at all, but, for the sake of your future health and happiness, do not put it off. Send today—right now, before you turn this page.

Extra Money—

"Hello, Kink!" a damsel in the front row gurgles. The King ignores her. He wafts kisses to the right and left on two fingers. Oh, I'd like to grin! Hello, Kink, indeed. I could break a whalebone laughing at that. Oh, my leg! My leg is going.

"Cut!" yells the director. That's over.

"What time is it?"

"Ten-thirty."

It isn't ten-thirty. It can't be that. We've been working a week. A month, maybe. My mail is stacked up at home. The telephone bill is unpaid. The cat is starving. We take the same scene over. We repeat it. We do it a fourth time. The left leg stops shaking. It's dead. I have a petrified leg. A little petrified leg.

"Lucky" climbs on a box. "Lunch time, folks! Please don't leave the studio. You are wearing expensive costumes and we don't want them spoiled. A hot lunch will be served right on the set here. And be careful not to get soup on your clothes!"

Food! What I want is an osteopath. Or maybe a chiropractor.

"Better eat. It's good. Gee, they treat us like kings and queens over here. Hot food and a place to sit down and eat it. At some of the studios . . ."

Who wants to eat? Who wants to be an actress, anyway?

Hazel Keener is being sketched by M. Leloir. She is the loveliest girl on the set, a typical French type. Jean Laverty, a luscious blonde with gentian-blue eyes, is having her back powdered. Andre Lourneur is doubling for Queen Belle Bennett, suffering the cinema birth pangs in the long shots. A cluster of ladies-in-waiting sit, smoking, heavy skirts hoisted knee-high. They discuss cinema success.

"What are the requirements?" ask I.

"This," answers one of the ladies who has waited, drooping her petal-like lids so that blue eyes peep langorously from under a fringe of lash. "And this," lips parted sensuously, adenoidously. She leaned forward. "They call it s. a. Since Garbo came over, we've all had to have it. Do you know what a casting director said to me the other day? 'You need a few affairs,' he said, 'to give you s. a.' Can you imagine! And my husband and baby at home."

Lunch is over. The heir has been born. It's a waxen baby doll. Well, they say kings and presidents are only figureheads, anyway. The King!—the King—the King—Long Live the King! but don't put him near that Kleig light. He'll melt. Wouldn't it be funny to see a King melt? Us damsels of the court crowd the doors in this scene, and the Poppa King stalks out with Baby King on a pink satin pillow.

"Hurrah, King!" we chortle, walking backwards and bowing at the same time. Whoever thought of that little trick?

We bow. Someone steps on my train. I step on my own train. We take the scene once, twice, thrice. Maybe four time; maybe four million times. Who knows? Who cares? We take other scenes. We bow. We scrape. We chatter. "And-so-and-so-and-so-and-so." We walk. We prance. Hours pass. Days pass. Weeks, months, years. My left leg is paralyzed. My left leg is petrified. I'm going to put my petrified leg in a museum.

Here's Gino Corrado. Gino, I've got a petrified leg. Gino is Aramis in this opus. And Doug is D'Artagnan. And it's all about The Three Musketeers.

"Take you home?" says Gino, steering me toward his car. Good Gino. Beautiful Gino. Handsome, lovable, trustworthy, honorable Gino. Magnificent Gino. Wonderful Gino.

Who would want to be an actress, anyway, Gino?

So This Is Hollywood

No Superstition

FEARLESSNESS exhibited by Pathe studio. They started their first all-talking mystery play (no program is complete without one) on the thirteenth of November with thirteen members in the cast.

To date there has been not even a cold in the head to stop The Missing Man's oral progress.

Squeaks and Shrieks

NOTHING slow about Jack Mulhall. He is the first of Hollywood's smart set to install machinery for the presentation of sound pictures in the little theatre of his home.

The other day his Japanese houseboy came running. "Something terrible happening in theatre, Missy Mulhall," he panted to Jack's wife.

Shrieks were coming from the showroom as Mrs. Mulhall ran toward it. But her haste was all for nothing. She discovered it was merely Jack unreeling one of the current talking mystery plays.

Man Catchers

NOTHING like keeping in the spirit of things. Some of the lovely, lithesome ladies who atmosphered in D. W. Griffith's "Masquerade," a picture of France in the 'seventies, wore, under voluminous skirts of tulle and messaline, woven sandals of the period 1928 and named after a famous French watering place, Deauville.

"Convenient to catch a man, but costly," said one beauty, naughtily, as a gallant stooped to free his spurs from the skirt of the lady's bouffant tulle frock. "No wonder the French charmers were so popular. One promenade in a skirt like this caught enough men to start a salon."

Perishable

CULLEN LANDIS' quaint little mother and his titian-haired girl-wife, Loca, are great chums.

Loca paraded before mamma, as she fondly calls the senior Mrs. Landis, in a new dress.

"Isn't it pretty, mamma? But so perishable."

"Well, I'll admit," replied mamma, "that you couldn't churn in it."

The Place for Him

CAMILLA HORN has taken a house way down by the beach in the country. We wondered why. Then we learned that her in-the-background husband is to arrive soon from Germany.

Well, the country is a good place for Hollywood stars to keep their husbands.

"THE LIFE STORY OF A DEVIL" is what Lupe Velez calls her own life story, which begins in the March issue of SCREEN SECRETS.

too. One Sunday, Shorty strolled over to see his pal at the place in New Rochelle. As he trotted up the walk, suddenly an enormous animal bolted around the corner, lunged at him and bowled him over flat. Shorty yelled.

Dick's head popped out of an upstairs window. "Hey, something's happened to Shorty!" he cried, and then, seeing what it was, "It's only 'Fury,' old man!"

"Take 'im away before 'e eats me!" roared Shorty. And that has always been a favorite joke of Dick's.

Dick left Griffith after Way Down East to go with Inspiration Pictures, and presently Shorty was also with the latter firm. Dick saw that he got a job. Together, they went into the wilds of the Blue Ridge Mountains to make Tol'able David, living in a primitive hotel and partaking of ham and eggs, potatoes and prunes three times a day for six weeks.

"When we was down in Nassau, they used to feed us peeled oranges on forks and mutton stew for breakfast," remembered Shorty. "We groused about that, but gosh we'd have greeted that with cheers if we coulda got it in Crab Bottom, Virginia."

There was excitement in this picture. Once when Dick was driving the mail stage, supposed to be badly wounded, he drove around a curve and the pole broke. The horses braced themselves and stopped, thus saving Dick's life. The scene was a long shot, so Dick rigged the thing up himself and continued on his way without mishap. "But I thought sure the day of judgment was upon me!" he recalls.

There were feuds in these hills, and when one morning the hotel keeper was missing, it was casually reported that he had been shot. One of the carpenters hired for a set refused to go to a certain location, the reason being that he happened to have killed somebody down there.

"Grand place to settle down!" declared Dick.

Shorty was injured in a big spectacle with another studio so now he plays extra on the screen. He does a hula-hula dance in Dick's latest film, Scarlet Seas, and no doubt he'll be seen in future pictures with the star.

Richard Barthelmess' new contract is for six pictures to be made in eighteen months, all talkers. He is to receive the highest salary ever paid a male star not also a producer; he is to have choice of story, cast and director.

Dick is not the only friend the little Englishman possesses at the Barthelmess home. Only last Sunday, as he trudged along the road leading to the Beverly Hills house, a car passed him and a child's voice cried: "Oh-ee, it's Shorty!" The car stopped and out jumped Baby Mary Hay.

Under her escort, he advanced to meet her new brother, Douglas Sargent, who is just Mary's age, and thus reinforced the party inspected the new rabbits, the new bicycles on which the two five-year-olds displayed their riding skill, and then Shorty sang and danced.

Richard and the new Mrs. Barthelmess plan to take a trip around the world when his contract is completed. The children will be old enough to be put into schools, but Shorty insists that they will have to take him along.

"I want to show 'im all the places I knows," he argues. "I been in every nook and dive in most countries on earth, and I'd like to take 'im around. Besides, I'm a weddin' present to a lady and I oughta take care of 'em bofe."

The House That Laughs Built

stucco, and the dressing rooms and showers inside are of green tile. There are eight dressing rooms for men and eight for women.

A rock-walled road winds around the hill to the beautifully landscaped valley below where golf greens more priceless than Oriental rugs are laid out. Mildred Davis Lloyd will never be a golf widow, for Harold would need to journey far to find a better golf course than his own.

Tumbling over the face of the cliff on which the mansion stands is an artificial hundred-foot waterfall, which by its carefully landscaped rocks, shrubs and positions looks more natural than Nature's own handiwork, with its spray curling into mist as it leaps down upon the fern-bedded rocks. It feeds an artificial stream on which wild ducks disport themselves. A number of canoes are anchored at the landing before the old stone mill. Hanging from the venerable old trees are jugs of purest water. On the slight elevation at the extreme end of the estate is a rock well and leading down to the right extremity is a flower garden and fountain. From this point, looking down the golf course, the vista is matchless. There is first the elaborate barbecue pit, with an antique bronze bell hanging outside, with which the cook calls the guests. The bell was imported from Old Mexico. Its tones are clarion clear, a symphony in sound.

There are several bridges over the stream which winds the length of the estate. The stream itself is a masterpiece of the landscaping art with its banks lined with cat tails, reeds and lush grass. Nothing has been omitted to make of the place a Paradise. There is even a desert at the far end of the estate. Here is every known cacti and desert plant. There are lizards and nonpoisonous reptiles basking in the warm sand. There are myriads of love birds and small parrakeets, still in their cages. There is everything that can make for beauty and enjoyment.

And this is the property of a slightly bashful, freckle-faced young man who has learned the secret of how to make the tired old world laugh.

moment. Expert photographers and engineers had been woring for months on the experiment. Although crude, it was successful. The talking picture had become a reality. All turned to Mr. Pathe for his reaction.

"Gentlemen," he said, "this is successful beyond my fondest hopes. Now we'll put it all back on the shelf and forget about it."

His answer astonished his listeners, but revealed the soundness of his judgment as a showman. He knew that the public was not yet ready for pictures that talked. It took the radio to make them "sound conscious."

The Vaudeville-Talkie Feature

THE vogue of the short feature talkie is upon us, corresponding to the one-act playlet, and supplemented by stage presentations and short-reel comedies. A notable example is Napoleon's Barber, directed by John Ford and considered such a wow that it was given headliner place at the Roxy Theatre in New York City, although only three reels in length. Shades of the old, old days.

And a Revue, No Less

THE production of Gus Edwards' International Revue marks another spirited invasion of stage entertainment by sound pictures. An elaborate all-color musical revue, it has almost everything to be found in the stage revue except the prices. One scene, laid in a night club, requires a stage with several hundred players, an orchestra of twenty-five pieces, ballets and special choruses. Who'd ever have thought we'd have a bald-headed row in the movie houses?

Edmund Breese First

EDMUND BREESE, veteran stage and screen actor, claims to be the first talkie actor, having done his stuff when the talkies were only a whisper. In 1915 he appeared in a speaking part in The Master Mind, a picture produced by Edison.

Sales Talkies

THE talkies are now in business, extolling the merits of this and that product better than most salesmen, except that it can't pass out cigars and tell Pullman berth stories. Graham-Paige, automobile manufacturers, are the first to have applied the talkies for commercial purposes, and it won't be long now until S. A. will mean Sales Appeal.

Getting a Hearing

THE three Graham brothers, heads of the Graham-Paige Motor Corporation, have had speeches of theirs recorded by talkie features which are sent out to dealer conventions and the like. The speeches have a prologue of spec-

One Big, Happy Family

WHILE there are those who say the talkies will suffer death at the hands of the radio, Edward J. Montague, scenario editor-in-chief for Universal, hoots the idea.

He goes on to remind us of similar predictions when radio first appeared, when the opinion was frequently voiced that people would prefer to sit at home and hear the wonderful radio programs instead of battling weather and traffic to get to movie houses. Finally, he says that radio and the talkies are two separate forms of entertainment and not at all in conflict. He insists that each will aid the development of the other. Apparently feeling that one good tune deserves another.

What a Reader Thinks

DEAR Editor: So many people are kicking about the talking pictures. Now I wonder why? Of course I would not like to have all pictures talking pictures, but I think most fans like to hear their favorites' voices. Conrad Nagel has always been my prime favorite, so you can imagine the pleasure Vitaphone afforded me in enabling me to hear his voice. We small town people do not get to hear and see the big stars, but now through Vitaphone this is made possible.

MAE SCHEPECK,

Honesty, the Best Talkie Policy

IT APPEARS that building motion picture sets is destined to become a considerable problem from now on due to sound pictures. For example, a "stone" step made out of wood and covered with plaster no longer will suffice as a double for rock. A. B. Heath, director of Universal's Melody of Love filmed a scene where a soldier on crutches went over such a step. The result was a hollow sound. Slabs of real stone had to be obtained and the scene re-shot. This same difficulty is found with "prop" rocks and synthetic cobblestone pavement.

LUPE VELEZ TELLS HER LIFE STORY

beginning in the March issue of SCREEN SECRETS. It is a story rich in exciting episodes that began for this fiery star when she was little more than a baby, surrounded by army life in Mexico—a Mexico seething with revolution and violence. No less exciting was her following stage career as a Mexican revue sensation, and her rise to the peaks in Hollywood.

A Wicked Lady

"And then?"

"Travel."

"Where?"

TAKE a look at the map of the world; that's where. Walter and I are going to travel until we get callouses on the bottoms of our feet. I want to see India after I have seen everything in Europe."

"I'd like to see Indo-China," I suggested.

"Why?"

"I'd like to see that deserted city of Ankor Wat."

"Yes; that's right," she said. "I'll remember that; we must see Ankor Wat. That would be great."

"Meanwhile the pictures . . . " I suggested.

"Meanwhile the pictures," she repeated. "I never have had such a good time making them . . ."

"Is that because you are on the home stretch?"

"No," she laughed. "I imagine it is because I am a bad lady in all the later ones. Isn't it awful that I should enjoy being a bad lady?"

"Why?"

"I don't know. Perhaps they are more interesting. Men through the ages seemed to find them so. At any rate, I began with Lady Hamilton, and nearly every one says that is my best one. Then Outcast, where I was nothing but."

She doesn't realize the reason; but I know the reason—even though I did not tell her.

Until now, her parts on the screen have been much her own self. And, in the action of the play, she has been forced to do things that she would not do in her own right. It is not in or of her nature to "take on" and be dramatic in high moments. In her social caste you bear the blows of fate with proud defiance. Like the Japanese Samurai, you never exhibit in public emotions that would be unpleasant to those around you.

When, on the other hand, they give her the part of a bad lady to play, she at once steps outside herself and relies solely upon her imagination.

In the parts where she plays her own kind, she always has the uncomfortable feeling that she is letting the public in on a secret it has no right to know. Playing bad ladies, she is only painting a picture.

And so it will be easier for her when she comes to say good-bye to the screen. She has already left; only her friend, the bad lady, remains. They can part without regrets.

all the characters. In the end, he insulted himself and stabbed himself to death in a dreadful duel. He died with great gusto on the studio floor; then leaped up and cried eagerly: "How was that?"

It was undeniably funny and I snickered. Ramon told me only the other day that he remembered my duplicity in snickering and he remembered that Lillion Gish nudged me in the ribs to make me stop it.

Griffith didn't laugh. He smiled a little, but added: "Well, you are all right, boy; that was good." However, there was no place for him in the Griffith picture.

Ramon went to New York and got a job as a bus boy in the automat. He had been a waiter before. He says he remembers being a bus boy at my table in the Athletic Club in Los Angeles.

"Diving for pearls," as the saying is in cafes, hurt neither his great pride nor diminished his hopes. He says that during that whole time of hard sledding he could always see his name in electric light in front of the different New York theatres—just as plainly as he can see it there now. Never for one moment did he falter in his confidence as to the end. He says he knew he would get there; he was perfectly willing to leave the details of the program to Providence.

I said at the top end of this story that Ramon always got everything he wanted; but, as I think over his career, he was always being turned down. Any boy with a dimmer faith would have quit a dozen places along the route.

For instance, he paid a visit to a big phonograph company in New York. He said he wanted to make some records for them. They asked him if he could sing. "Not yet," he said, "but I could learn if you would furnish the money."

The proposition made them blink with astonishment; but so great was the little Mexican's confidence that he came within an ace of a loan of $10,000 for his musical education.

He finally got into the films through Rex Ingram. Everybody knows all about his screen career. He never has considered it to be a career. That has been his trade; his ready money source.

His rainbow in the sky has always been music. All the time he was hanging around the studios trying to get jobs (he once got one as a Keystone Kop) he has kept up his music.

No corporation efficiency expert could divide his time up with a greater regard for accomplishment. Part of each day—even on location—has always been devoted to his music. Once he served a long time on a location tour where a tyrannical director didn't like to hear him practicing vocal exercises; so Ramon padded the piano with felt; closed all the doors and windows in a stifling tropic climate and sang his exercises under his breath.

Ramon's mother is a beautiful and stately woman. In her youth she was an opera singer. She has supervised his career. He stands in awe of her talent. I remember one day he had been singing for us in his room at home and afterward he went down into the room where his family had gathered. I suggested that he sing the songs again that he had sung upstairs. He flushed scarlet. "Not with my mother listening," he said. "I would be ashamed to sing that before her; I have not practiced it sufficiently."

He does not live in the film colonies of Hollywood or Beverly Hills. He bought an old-fashioned house in an older part of Los Angeles and made it over to fit his occasions. Into it he built a tiny theatre. At first it had thirty-nine seats; then he rebuilt it to accommodate about sixty seats. Here he gives little musical shows of his own management. The actresses are lovely senoritas and his boyhood friends of the large Mexican colony in Los Angeles.

In this little theatre, Ramon learned stagecraft; learned how to "put over" the songs he had been studying. Next to Raquel Meller, I think that no one has ever been able to sing so charmingly the quaint folk songs of Mexico and Spain, although he sings grand opera, too.

This year, his long movie contract expired. He has only lately signed a new one. By the terms of this, he will be a movie actor only half of each year.

When his first period comes in the contract, he is going back to New York to sing for the phonograph company which nearly loaned him $10,000 so long ago; so that dream will have come true. Then he is going on to Berlin. Part of the time he will study music. Part of the time he will probably appear in concert.

In a few years—if his plans go straight—he will be Senor Novarro the opera singer—no longer Ramon Novarro, the film actor. One of the reasons why he took this name was the definite purpose of having a name that would be equally good on the screen and in grand opera.

Every screen actor faces a tragedy from his first moment on the screen; he faces the time when he will be too old . . . when the blush is off the peach. Ramon has escaped this tragedy. In his case, it will be the simple act of switching over to a new dynamo.

When he gets past the first charm age of screen acting, he will be still young—almost too young—for grand opera.

From which it would seem that one of the great points in having your dreams come true is to start out with the right kind of dreams.

Alice White's Diary

Dec. 4. Had my horoscope cast. Future looks very interesting. Who knows? Said I would have many romances but that I would not marry for a long time. I hope it's true. I am not particularly fond of the idea of being married. Maybe I'm selfish. I don't think so, though. Hate to think of myself submerged by a husband. Can you imagine me ordering steak for dinner? But I'm sure I have a lot of maternal instinct. It doesn't always exhibit itself in wanting babies. I always yearn over poor helpless kids, and pathetic boys.

Dec. 5. Left for location. Arrived at a very funny hotel at Laguna Beach.

Dec. 6. On location. Haven't worked yet. Miss my darling little funny Ching. Sure is a quiet place. Not much to do at night. Have been going to bed very early at night. Everybody is going to parties, but somehow I'm not much interested. Really no nice men on this location.

Dec. 9. Still on location. Much rain stuff. Many wind machines and water pipes which scared me to death. If it hadn't been for Mary Astor yanking me into the middle of a scene I would have quit and gone home right then.

Dec 10. Worked at night again. More rain. Got awfully wet. Have been very good on this trip. All I do is sleep and work. Oh, well!

Dec. 11. Didn't work today. Rather lonesome at night. Gang all went to a party and woke me when they came in.

Dec. 12. Didn't work today. Gilbert came down to see me. It seemed good to see him. And he wasn't a bit moody. He's rather a lamb.

Dec. 13. Just day shots and then worked at night. Got awfully seasick on a darned boat. Much service from the troupe this evening. All felt sorry for me.

Dec. 15. We left for home. Arrived at the studio in the afternoon. Saw Dick Barthelmess again. He said "hello" to me in a matter-of-fact way. I'm still hoping to get the part. It does mean so much to me.

Dec. 16. Out to the studio and saw Mr. Al Rockett. He talked to me of a part. Things are beginning to look a little more encouraging.

Dec. 17. Went to the fights tonight. They sure do wear me out. They are much too brutal. Sat in the ringside and was worried that the blood would splash on my nice new white coat.

Dec. 18. Dinner-dance at the Biltmore. Saw lots of movie stars. Wonder if I'll ever get to be one? Strange things happen sometimes.

Dec. 19. Stayed in bed all day. Decided I needed a rest.

Dec. 20. Hearing rumors that Sue O'Neil may play in The Patent Leather Kid. Was very upset. I wonder if she really is my competition? To dinner with V. He kissed me when we parted. A nice little-boy kiss. No thrills. Better than M.'s kisses. They're like kissing the wet nose of a puppy. And not an adorable puppy like Ching. M. is in the discard from now on.

Dec. 21. Dropped into Pinky's dressing room. Found her crying. She's madly in love with a prop boy but won't go out in public with him. Afraid it will hurt her prestige. If the man I loved was a plumber, and I loved him that much, I'd go every place with him. What is love if it doesn't make two people equal?

Dec. 23. More working in water. Haven't heard much about The Patent Leather Kid but things are beginning to look suspicious. Sort of have a hunch that all is not well.

Dec. 24. Much fun at the studio today. Presents being exchanged and everybody excited. We quit work early. Lunch at Montmartre with Ann Rork. Met Jack Hearst at the Grove at night. Rather cute boy.

Dec. 25. Many presents and much visiting. Saw lots of people and did a lot of things. My special beau gave me flocks of perfume and an adorable leather coat and lots of cute little knick-knacks. Spent a lot of money on family presents. Decided to play Santa Claus this year, because I was earning so much money. Ching-a-ling got a new green collar.

Dec. 26. Went to the Plantation with a lot of drugstore cowboys. Flirted with a grand man who had met me a long time before but I had changed so he didn't know me. Afraid I'm going to have an awful crush on him. He sent a note over to me and we made arrangements to meet. I think he's gr-r-and! But he's married and I don't dare take him too seriously, because he belongs to someone else. Just my luck. Every time I really like someone he has to be married.

Dec. 27. Still on the picture. Awfully disappointed about The Patent Leather Kid. Cried for a week. Could hardly work. Everyone tried to cheer me up. I'm so discouraged I feel as though I want to give it all up. They make you believe that a thing is yours and then don't even give you a break. But I have too much determination to let that stop me. I'm going to succeed regardless of The Patent Leather Kid!

Dec. 28. M-G-M have sent for me to make a test. Don't know what it's for but certainly would like to be borrowed by another studio. Sort of makes your studio feel that you are more important if another wants you. I haven't heard from T. Perhaps it is better.

Dec. 29. Worked part of the day and then rushed out to M-G-M to make a test. Everyone was very kind to me there. Out with T. at night. We took a ride. Afraid I'm growing much too fond of him.

Dec. 30. Out at M-G-M again for another test for Sam Wood. Had lots of laughs. Out with T. again. He says he thinks I'm adorable.

Dec. 31. Went out to M-G-M to see my tests. Laughed myself sick. Sure was funny. Out at night to a big dinner party at the Plantation. Rather bored so ditched the party and went over to a gorgeous party Hal Roach was giving at his studio. Many important movie stars there. Had a grand time. Suddenly started thinking about T. and decided I must see him at all cost. 'Phoned him and saw him. I wept like a little fool for no good reason. He is awfully sweet. What shall I do? What is going to happen?

the couple to each other, and who also announced their engagement several weeks ago.

Made Up

OLIVE BORDEN and George O'Brien have made up any past differences which kept them estranged from each other the past few months and are again seen frequently together. The film colony has kept its eye on this romance for some time.

Let Down

MAURICE CHEVALIER, handsome young French actor who arrived in Hollywood recently, upset the hopes of many of the girls in the film capital by bringing with him a very attractive wife who was formerly a French musical comedy artist.

Full Speed Ahead

SOMEONE TO LOVE, the recent screen romance featuring Buddy Rogers and Mary Brian, apparently suggested each other to this well-liked young couple, and the charming affair started some time ago seems to continue with increased fervor on the part of both.

The only man who could talk to the Superintendent

"SOON after I began studying," a student wrote to us the other day, "we had a change in management at our plant. I certainly was glad then that I had decided to study in my spare time. For, thanks to my I. C. S. course, I was the only man in the organization who could talk to the Superintendent in his own language. As a result, I was promoted over men who had been here from ten to twenty years. My salary has been increased 90 per cent in the last ten months."

That's a true story of what just one I. C. S. student has done. There are thousands of others. Every mail brings letters from men and women telling of promotions and increases in salary due directly to spare-time study.

One hour a day, spent with the I. C. S. in the quiet of your own home, will prepare you for success in the work you like best. Yes, it will! Put it up to us to prove it.

I GUARANTEE NEW HAIR in These Three Places—

OR DON'T PAY ME A CENT!

ARE you sincerely anxious to be done with dandruff, itchy scalp, falling hair and baldness? Do you really want to grow new hair?

Perhaps you've already tried hard to overcome these afflictions. Perhaps you've put faith in barbershop "tips," and used all kinds of salves, massages, tonics, all with the same results . . . lots of trouble and expense but no relief!

Now, consider what I offer you. And figure out for yourself what a handsome proposition it is. I GUARANTEE to grow new hair on your head—on the top, front or temples—IN 30 DAYS . . or not one red penny of cost to you.

Isn't that a different story from those you've heard before? I don't say, "try my wonderful remedy—it grows hair!" I say, and I put it in writing, "I GUARANTEE to grow hair . . . or no cost!"

My Method is Unique!

Naturally, you say to yourself, "How can anyone make such a guarantee? It's hard to grow hair. I know, for I've tried a lot of things and failed."

Ah, that's exactly the reason thousands who formerly suffered from scalp troubles bless the day they heard of me. For my treatment is based on science, on years and years of research. I studied scalps, not how to sell treatments. And I found, as did leading dermatologists, that ordinary surface treatments of the scalp are futile. Baldness begins at the ROOTS. If roots are dead, nothing can grow new hair. But in most cases, roots are only sleeping, waiting for the right treatment to bring them back to healthy, normal life.

I Reach the Roots

Now, I leave it to you. How can ordinary treatments penetrate to the roots of your hair? How can ordinary tonics or salves remove the real cause of baldness?

My treatment goes below the scalp, right down to the hair roots, awakening them to new action. My treatment works surely and quickly, all the while stimulating the tiny blood vessels around the roots to new life and action. And with just the mere investment of a few minutes a day, thousands get these results from my treatment . . . or they never pay a cent!

DANGER: One, two, three—BALD! And perhaps total baldness, say leading dermatologists, if you neglect any one of the three places shown above. But so gradually does hair depart, so insidiously does baldness creep up on the average man, that thousands fail to heed the warnings. But there is hope for everyone, no matter how thin the hair. Read my message to men growing bald. Study my guarantee. Then ACT!

I Welcome Investigation

Do you want absolute proof of the true cause and proper treatment of baldness? Consult your family physician. Or look up medical reference books.

Do you want positive proof that I can and do apply these accepted scientific principles? I offer you the best proof of all . . . my personal guarantee, backed up by the Merke Institute, Fifth Avenue, New York.

A Square Deal Guaranteed!

Others may make rosy but flimsy promises. I could do that too! But I don't. I couldn't afford to, for every statement I make is guaranteed by the Merke Institute. This scalp research bureau, established 13 years, is known to thousands from Coast to Coast. It has a reputation to keep up. It wouldn't dare to back me if I didn't tell the truth. So when I guarantee to grow hair or not a penny of cost, you're absolutely sure of a square deal.

Why Suffer Years or Regret?

Before you turn this page take a look in the mirror at those thin spots on your head! Think how you'll look when all your hair is gone. Consider how much prestige and attractiveness you'll lose. Then decide to act at once! Right now, tear out the coupon shown below and mail it in for the FREE booklet giving my complete story. In it you'll find, not mere theories, but scientific FACTS, and the details of my "hair grown or no pay" offer. My treatment can be used in any home where there is electricity. Send the coupon NOW! And by return mail the booklet is yours without the slightest obligation. Allied Merke Institutes, Inc., Dept. 482, 512 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

THE TEMPESTUOUS LIFE OF LUPE VELEZ

Battling Nelson, the Durable Dane
as he looked the day after he knocked out Joe Gans for the lightweight championship. Bat made 40 miles on a gallon with a roadster and 33⅓ miles a gallon with a touring car. Bat writes: "Most of the public know me well enough to know that I never bunked them in my life. And when I say your vaporizer is all you say it is, I mean it."

Okeyed by "Cannon Ball" Baker
The Stransky Vaporizer has passed the rigid tests made on "Cannon Ball" Baker's Proving Grounds outside Indianapolis. "Worthy the investigations of every motorist," writes Baker. "A single trial will prove the worth of your vaporizer. I heartily recommend it to all motorists."

Drives 1300 Miles Without Buying Gasoline
A remarkable test was recently made on the Stransky Vaporizer by J. R. Wood of St. Louis. On his Oldsmobile, after installing the Stransky, he drove 3,000 miles and averaged 30 miles a gallon. Thus he got in effect 1,300 miles of free gasoline.

H. H. Cummings has saved 1,905 gallons of gasoline on 50,000 miles. "I have used one on my 1922 Ford which I have driven over 50,000 miles," he says. "I am getting 30 miles a gallon."

Virgil Barnes,
N. Y. Giant Pitcher, says: "Words cannot express my delight with the Stransky Vaporizer. I left New York City after the close of the baseball season with a vaporizer on my Chrysler 60. When I arrived in Holton, Kansas, I found I had averaged within a fraction of 40 miles per gallon of gas."

Finds a Gasoline Well in His Own Back Yard!
Geo. South of Kansas City, Mo., owns a Ford coupe. "I am simply amazed," he writes, "at the wonderful results with your vaporizer. It sure saves the gas. It's just like finding a gasoline well in my own back yard."

Who Else Wants to Save Gasoline?

A SOUTH DAKOTA man has discovered an amazing gas-saving invention now installed on over three million cars of every make. Already over ten thousand car owners say it increases gas mileage . . . and saves an astonishing amount of money in gasoline and repair expense. There is a model for every car, truck, tractor or gasoline engine. Anybody can install it in a few minutes.

This invention is based on newly-discovered facts about potential gasoline power . . . startling facts, that few car owners know about. For example, it is now found that the average man wastes at least 20 per cent to 30 per cent of his gasoline through improper combustion. And many more interesting discoveries, too detailed to mention here.

Read on the right what other car owners say about it. Then accept the inventor's special introductory offer. He will send you samples to test without obligation to buy. If you find it doesn't do for you what it has done for other car owners, he will pay a cash forfeit for the few minutes you've spent in testing it.

Don't send a penny now. Simply send your name in coupon below and get full description of this queer little device that is saving money for other car owners. No obligation, of course. But if you really want to cut down the high cost of running your car, this is your opportunity. Tear out the coupon below and mail it to J. A. Stransky Mfg. Co., C-360 Stransky Block, Pukwana, S. D.

FORD

"I have used one on my Ford for over five years and have traveled over 35,000 miles. Never had any spark plug trouble. Have averaged 28 to 30 miles on one gallon of gas." J. H. Alruth, Iowa.

CHEVROLET

"You people claim a saving of 25 per cent and more. I found I was obtaining 43.8 miles to a gallon on a Chevrolet. The actual test surpasses your claim." M. E. Miller, Kansas City.

BUICK

G. M. Rathburn, Charleston, W. Va., has a Buick Six. Having an old engine, it was getting only 8 or 9 miles a gallon. On a 287-mile trip he got 19 miles to the gallon. He says it has saved him $40.00 on one trip.

NASH

"I had a large Nash Six, which I drove from Los Angeles to San Francisco on 20 gallons of gas. Vaporizer paid for itself the first trip." H. T. McCallon, California.

MARMON

Beacon Holmes, garage owner, New York City, put a Stransky Vaporizer on a Marmon and says: "I increased Marmon's speed from 72 to 84 miles per hour—and a gain of 5 miles to the gallon of gas."

PIERCE-ARROW

Mr. Joseph Berger, New York City, writes: "I have one on my Pierce-Arrow and have greatly increased my mileage. I have never scraped carbon since I put on your vaporizer ten months ago."

The Most Daring Book Ever Written!

Elinor Glyn, famous author of "Three Weeks" has written an amazing book that should be read by every man and woman —married or single. "The Philosophy of Love" is not a novel —it is a penetrating searchlight fearlessly turned on the most intimate relations of men and women. Read below how you can get this thrilling book at our risk—without advancing a penny.

WILL you marry the man you love, or will you take the one you can get?

If a husband stops loving his wife, or becomes infatuated with another woman, who is to blame —the husband, the wife, or the "other woman?"

Will you win the girl you want, or will Fate select your Mate?

Should a bride tell her husband what happened at seventeen?

Will you be able to hold the love of the one you cherish—or will your marriage end in divorce?

Do you know how to make people like you?

ELINOR GLYN
"The Oracle of Love"

IF you can answer the above questions—if you know all there is to know about winning a woman's heart or holding a man's affections—you don't need "The Philosophy of Love." But if you are in doubt—if you don't know just how to handle your husband, or satisfy your wife, or win the devotion of the one you care for—then you must get this wonderful book. You can't afford to take chances with your happiness.

What Do YOU Know About Love?

DO you know how to win the one you love? Do you know why husbands, with devoted, virtuous wives, often become secret slaves to creatures of another "world"—and how to prevent it? Why do some men antagonize women, finding themselves beating against a stone wall in affairs of love? When is it dangerous to disregard convention? Do you know how to curb a headstrong man, or are you the victim of men's whims? Do you know how to retain a man's affection always? How to attract men? How to make love keep you youthful and fresh? Do you know the things that most irritate a man? Or disgust a woman? Can you tell when a man really loves you—or must you take his word for it? Do you know what you MUST NOT DO unless you want to be a "wall flower" or an "old maid"? Do you know the little things that make women like you? Why do "wonderful lovers" often become thoughtless husbands soon after marriage—and how can the wife prevent it? Do you know how to make marriage a perpetual honeymoon?

In "The Philosophy of Love,"—Elinor Glyn answers these precious questions—and countless others. She places a magnifying glass unflinchingly on the most intimate relations of men and women. No detail, no matter how delicate or avoided by others, is spared. She warns you gravely, she suggests wisely, she explains fully.

We admit that the book is decidedly daring. It had to be. A book of this type, to be of great value, could not mince words. But while Madame Glyn calls a spade a spade —while she deals with strong emotions and passions in her frank, fearless manner—she nevertheless handles her subject so tenderly and sacredly that the book can safely be read by any grown-up man or woman. In fact, anyone over eighteen should be compelled to read "The Philosophy of Love"; for, while ignorance may sometimes be bliss, it is folly of the rankest sort to be ignorant of the problems of love and marriage. As one mother wrote us: "I wish I had read this book when I was a young girl—it would have saved me a lot of misery and suffering."

Certain self-appointed censors may condemn "The Philosophy of Love." Anything of such an unusual character generally is. But Madame Glyn is content to rest her world wide reputation on this book—the greatest masterpiece of love ever attempted!

What Every Man and Woman Should Know

- —how to win the man you love.
- —how to win the girl you want.
- —how to hold your husband's love.
- —how to make people admire you.
- —why men "step out" and leave their wives alone.
- —why many marriages end in despair.
- —how to hold a woman's affection.
- —how to keep a husband home nights.
- —why most women don't know how to make love.
- —things that turn men against you.
- —how to make marriage a perpetual honeymoon.
- —the "danger year" of married life.
- —how to ignite love—how to keep it flaming
- —how to rekindle it if burnt out.
- —how to cope with the "hunting instinct" in men.
- —how to attract people you like.
- —why some men and women are always lovable, regardless of age.
- —how to make love keep you young.
- —must all men be either "dubs" or devils?
- —how to increase your desirability in a man's eye.
- —how to tell if someone really loves you.
- —things that make a woman "cheap" or "common."
- —how to make people do the things you want them to.

For the First Time in America

EDGAR WALLACE

England's Favorite Mystery Writer

Author of THE TERROR!

You will remember this scene from the breath taking photoplay—THE TERROR, produced by Warner Brothers, starring May McAvoy. The stage play by the same name has been the talk of London for over two years.

NOW you can have four of the most thrilling books ever written sent to you on approval. You can learn in your own home, without risking a penny, just why this man has taken Great Britain by storm.

One out of every four books sold in the British Empire is a book by EDGAR WALLACE. His articles fill the daily papers and the magazines of London. His dramas, mysteries and musical comedies crowd the theatres to capacity night after night. All England is Wallace mad!

No other writer ever leaped to first rank in public favor as rapidly as Edgar Wallace has. Almost unknown three years ago; today he is a sensation. He has four instantaneous successes on the London stage, one of which has been running over two years. Every book he has published in America has immediately joined the best sellers. WHY? Because only Wallace has the eerie power to make your flesh creep—your blood chill—your hair stand on end—at the gruesome and terrific situations his magic pen portrays. For mystery—horror—action—romance; for a thrill a minute, a shock on every page, you must read Edgar Wallace.

Every other writer of mystery and horror yarns pales into insignificance beside this man who can not witness his own moving pictures because they are so gruesome. Midnight shrieks echoing down cobwebbed corridors. The clank of chains in mysterious secret passages. Sudden shots coming from nowhere, the silent assassin's knife getting in its gruesome work under the noses of Scotland Yard's keenest detectives. That is Edgar Wallace.

And now for the first time in America you can get the greatest of these masterpieces of mystery and horror in a uniform binding, on fine book paper. Experts of crime and mystery fiction have picked out these four titles as typical, representative Wallace works. Four full length novels, four big volumes, over 1,200 pages of thrills, crime, mystery and hair-raising adventure. Beautifully bound in red and back cloth, clearly printed on fine white paper. Here is your opportunity to know Edgar Wallace at his best, at absolutely no risk of loss to yourself.

I Sell Records a Queer Way

So people tell me, because I will gladly send to any person who sends me his name and address, a selection of ten records absolutely ON TRIAL, entirely at my risk. Choose any records you want.

Furthermore, I positively insist that you return the records to me at once, if they are in any way inferior to records that sell for three or four times as much. Don't be "sorry" for me, but shoot the records back, and let me stand the postage expense both ways, unless the records are better, clearer and richer in tone than any records you have ever before had, at any price.

I have built a million-dollar business in records on just these "queer" methods, trusting absolutely in the honesty of my customers, and making them the sole judge of whether or not the records will cost them even one cent.

I've built these records to give you pleasure, enjoyment and some real honest good times for months and years to come. I've tried to study the wishes and tastes of the great music-loving public and I've collected in this list below, the very CREAM of my entire catalog. All the records are electrically recorded—and nearly all of them have been done within the last few months, and are in the very latest and best style of the present day. They are all in the standard ten-inch size with music on both sides and play on any phonograph, just like 75-cent records. They include the most recent hits, as well as famous old favorites, and I'm willing to stake my last dollar that they are GOOD.

Choose any ten records you want and simply write their catalog number on coupon below. Send no money. See terms on coupon and see how fully I protect you in every way.

Would You Pay $2.98 to Perfect Your English?

Do You Make These Mistakes?

Between you and I.
He don't do it like I do.
This is different than the other.
I done it myself.
This is more heavier than that.
The heighth of stupidity.
She is the tallest of the two.
These kind of people.
I don't hardly think so.
I must of slipped.
It effected my health.

There are a dozen common errors in English in the above examples. These and countless others may be corrected by using the 50-volume Good English Course—full and final price only $2.98 postpaid.

YES! It is certainly worth $2.98 to anyone to perfect his English—to speak correctly, to write well, to express himself with the greatest degree of effectiveness and accuracy. Faulty speech and writing are no longer tolerated, because with knowledge so easily obtainable today, mistakes and errors are no longer excusable. If you doubt that knowledge is within your reach consider this special 50-volume Good English Course prepared to meet your every need at the extraordinarily low price of $2.98 for all 50 volumes, including a leather cover.

Mistakes in English Are Costly—Learn to Be Correct!

SLIPS of the tongue have already cost you—in lost prestige, unfavorable first impressions, weakness in speaking or writing—far more than $2.98. You know that yourself. You realize, when you stop to think about it, that mistakes in English are very costly. You have heard, time and again, how people are criticized and belittled for the bad taste they show in their speech, or the errors they make in writing their letters. Compared with the costliness of English faults, $2.98 is an insignificant price to pay to improve yourself in English. For $2.98 you get 50 books telling you all you may want to know about your mother tongue. This is not a first payment, with others to follow—$2.98 is the full payment for all 50 books and a leather cover.

The LOWEST Price! The HIGHEST Excellence!

NO doubt you think $2.98 is an almost unbelievably low price for these 50 books. It is the lowest price at which such a course as this—of such scope and high excellence—has ever been offered. Yet the books are not cheaply produced—they have been written by authorities in their fields; they are accurate in every sense of the word; they have been used by hundreds of thousands of people and by teachers and instructors all over the world. They are printed in easily readable type—neatly bound to fit the pocket, so you can carry a couple of them with you to improve spare moments. The price is no indication of the excellence of these volumes—in usual library editions these books would cost from $25 to $30 per set. We are able to offer them to you at a tenth of this price because of quantity production—and you get the benefit of it!

Improve Your Speech, Spelling, Grammar, Pronunciation—Enliven Your Conversation—Learn How to Become Well Read

GRAMMAR and syntax are not all that these books will teach you. Besides the fundamentals of spelling, pronunciation, and the like, you get several volumes dealing with Business English; an interesting series on the fascinating Study of Words; several handy reference Dictionaries, pocket manuals of surprising utility and exceptionally convenient for carrying about with you; guides to Good Reading; and, not by any means least of all, a comprehensive course in the various aspects of Writing for Profit. All of these 50 titles, each book 3½x5 inches in size, running to 64 pages per volume, substantially bound, printed in easily readable type—all 50 books and a leather cover cost just $2.98. This is positively all you pay!

A word about that leather cover. It is a genuine black levant leather slip cover or holder. It is made to hold one book at a time, protecting it while in use and giving the reader the luxurious "feel" of real leather. A book may be slipped in or out of this cover in a few seconds. There is no extra charge for this cover. It is included as a part of every set.

This set is made up of original, copyright works, prepared especially for this series, and obtainable in no other form. These Good English books must not be ordered separately. The sets are all packed, ready for immediate delivery. We pay the postage to any address in the world at the fixed price of $2.98, payment in full for each set of 50 books and a leather slip cover.

You get 750,000 words of text—average 15,000 words per book. Remember that these books are written by authorities, by writers who thoroughly understand their subjects, and know how to present the facts in a readable, understandable manner. If English has heretofore seemed "dry" and uninteresting to you, these 50 books will be a constant delight as well as help to you.

Note this list of authors. These are but a few of the writers who made this set possible:

Clement Wood is also the author of "The Outline of Knowledge," recently published. He wrote, too, "Poets of America," much poetry, several short stories, etc. . . . Lloyd E. Smith, former college English assistant, has written much of a popular nature about words and their use. . . . James Oppenheim is a writer of stories, helpful articles, etc. . . . Murray Sheehan is a story-writer and novelist. . . . Charles J. Finger has written several books, stories, articles, etc. . . . Among the other writers repersented are: Leo Markun, Fiswoode Tarleton, Nelson E. The Editor's Opinion

Sudden Death

THE entire movie world has been shocked by the sudden death of Fred Thomson, popular western star in the prime of his life.

Thomson was the son of a minister and studied for the ministry himself. But he went into pictures instead.

On the screen, however, he was able to reach a much larger public with his doctrines of clean living than he would have been able to reach from the pulpit.

Thomson's will was typical. To his wife, Frances Marion, the scenario writer, he bequeathed his "love and affection," knowing that she was able to take care of herself financially. His estate, amounting to about $25,000 he left to his mother and his son.

Wonder Horse

SILVER KING, the horse which Thomson made famous, will never be ridden again. Miss Marion plans to send the horse to her father's stock farm in Northern California to spend the rest of his days in peace.

Thomson found Silver King in a New York riding school. He was a big Irish hunter who was in disgrace. He was regarded as a hopeless outlaw. When Thomson first rode him he tried to scrape him off against the branches of trees. But Thomson conquered him.

The horse learned to act as well as any human. He would never do his stuff until he heard the clicking of the camera. And would stop as soon as he was out of range.

The Great Panic

HOLLYWOOD has never been in such a terrific state of panic. Everyone is having a hard time fighting the wolf from the door, especially the free lancers, people who were in great demand a few months ago. Now they are hanging around the much scorned "quickies," hoping that someone will take them in out of the storm.

This is largely due to the sudden enthusiasm on the part of the producers for stage stars to appear in the talkies.

As a matter of fact, most of these stage stars so far have been dismal flops on the screen. The movie public doesn't know who they are and has no consuming urge to find out.

Oddly enough, excellent stage voices leave much to be desired in the talkies. And faces which look well enough in the subdued glow of the footlights fail to come up to the movie public's demand for youth and beauty when projected into the bald glare of the Cooper-Hewitts.

Bye Bye for Babies

ONE CHANGE is being brought about by the advent of stage stars. The new crop will be much older and more mature than the baby-faced stars who have been bringing the money in at the box office in silent pictures. Foreign directors have favored this condition for a long time. They say that our screen stories have been impossible because nothing could possibly have happened to them except the measles.

It is a dangerous departure, Mabel Normand once gave me the best recipe for screen success that I have ever heard. She said:

"They don't want to think of screen actresses as play actors. They want to think of them as real. Every mature woman in the audience wants to look at Mary Pickford and say, 'Gee, I wish I had a daughter like her!'"

No such attitude is possible with the actress who comes from the stage. She is a professional workman and nobody wishes she were anything.

Rolling in Riches

THERE are not very many of them, however, that will starve to death. Corinne Griffith has made a lot of money. The Beery's are both rolling in it. Betty Compson has grown wealthy. Al Jolson told me that he has more than $1,000,000 and really doesen't know why it is that he is working.

Incidentally Al will be remembered as the man who overthrew the silent picture. It was his picture, The Jazz Singer, that started the talkies on their merry way. The fact is more singular in that Al tried the silent pictures once in the old Griffith studio and was such a dreary flop that he walked out in the middle of it and refused to go on murdering his own reputation.

Producers had been tinkering with talkies for a long time. But if Jolson had not come along with a crashing box office success at a time when the producers were in the depths of despair there might not have been any talkies for a long, long time.

Norma a Good Sport

NORMA SHEARER has one of the best reproducing voices in Hollywood. And she has had a singularly hard row to hoe ever since she married Irving Thalberg, one of the triumvirate of producers at M-G-M. She has been the most plentifully knocked young lady in Hollywood. Every time a part has come her way in pictures there has been a cry of "teacher's pet."

It is my personal opinion that Norma Shearer is one of the finest actresses now on the screen and a good sport besides. As someone else has said, she is able to act the part of a lady without unduly straining her imagination.

News of all the fan clubs appears each month in this department. Any fan wishing to receive information about the clubs or their secretaries, or wishing to send in news, is invited to write Grace Simpson, conductor of this department, Box 1757, SCREEN SECRETS, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Betty Bronson's Club

HAN JUNGELING, founder of the Betty Bronson Friendly Club, writes that owing to the great success of this club, he has divided it into several sections. Miss Gertrude Soeurt of Indianapolis, Indiana, is now running the American section; Miss Chaddy Montgomery of Dublin, Ireland, is running the Great Britain section; Miss Fedora Basklova is running the Russian section and Mr. Jungeling himself is running the rest of the world. Han, by the by, only has his club as a sort of hobby. He is an independent picture producer of Holland, and he has starred, himself, in many foreign productions, mostly made in Russia, Germany and France. He says his company isn't very large—in fact, they have no contract players but pick them up from the streets and make them act just as they want them to. All their productions are shown in the "Film-Liga" theatres, scattered throughout Europe.

Nancy Drexel Club

A NANCY DREXEL Fan Club has just been formed here and Miss Drexel has promised to send her latest autographed picture out free to all who join. Nancy is just about due to have a big rise in popularity—wait until Four Devils, Fox's big special production is generally released and see if we aren't right! Dues to Nancy's club are twenty-five cents at present. And the first member who joins will receive a large, special 11x14 autographed photo of the little blonde starlet.

Two New Clubs

TWO more brand-new clubs are knocking at the door to be announced. They are the Ruth Elder Fan Club and the June Collyer Friendly Club. Both have their headquarters here in Los Angeles and both have the same yearly dues—twenty-five cents. Ruth needs no introduction to you—you all know her as the courageous girl who nearly crossed the Atlantic via air and then lived to tell about it! You probably know, too, that now she is in pictures, recently playing for Paramount as Richard Dix's leading lady in his latest film. We had a long talk with Ruth up at the Montmartre the other day and she promised us faithfully that she would send out her autographed photo to everyone who recently joined her new fan club.

June Collyer, you know, is the pretty Fox player who is coming right ahead by leaps and bounds. She, too, promised us that all members of her club would receive nice photos from her in the near future.

Ruth Roland's club of eight thousand enthusiastic admirers is one of the most loyal, and she devotes a great deal of time to her enormous volume of fan mail.

Bigger Club For Gloria

MISS ANNABELLE URBAN, President of the Gloria Swanson Guild of Detroit, Michigan, wishes to announce that her Guild has now reached the 1,500 mark, and is diligently striving to make it 2,000. Anyone wishing to join or to know more about this popular club at this time, kindly make it known to Miss Urban. Dues are fifty cents a year.

Club For Anita Page

A FAN Club for that young blonde charmer, Anita Page, has been started, and as Miss Page is getting so very popular with all the fans, we have a little hunch that more than a few will wish to join. Membership card and lists will be sent to all who belong to the club. Miss Vivian Stephens is in charge of the Anita Page Club and membership is fifty cents per year. Several clubs for Miss Page have been started but at her request all these are asked to unite and co-operate with Miss Stephens. Anita decided that one large club was better than several smaller ones. Later there may be various chapters of her club in different parts of the country.

Overseas Chapters

THE Bebe Daniels Fan Club, of which Miss Celia Rosen is President, now has two large chapters overseas. One is the Scottish Chapter, with Miss N. Gilmour at the head, and the other is the English Chapter, with Mr. J. G. Webb ruling. Both of these chapters are increasing in membership rapidly and both welcome all Bebe's admirers to join them.

The Postal Pouch Editor will answer your questions on this page. For personal answer enclose two-cent stamp.

NORA S.: You'll have to hire a postman and set up an office for your personal correspondence if you are going to write all those letters! Reginald Denny and Laura La Plante are at the Universal Studios, Universal City; Norma Shearer, Gwen Lee, Ramon Novarro, Gilda Gray, Sally O'Neil, John Gilbert, and James Murray are at M-G-M, Culver City. Corinne Griffith, Lois Wilson, Molly O'Day, Colleen Moore, Milton Sills, Doris Kenyon, and Dorothy Mackaill are over on the First National lot in Burbank. Although Olive Borden is no longer at Fox, letters addressed to her there will be forwarded. Ronald Colman is under contract to Samuel Goldwyn, whose headquarters are henceforth to be at the United Artists studio in Hollywood. Marie Prevost is at the Metropolitan Studios, Hollywood; Dolores Costello at Warner's and Adolphe Menjou and Richard Dix at Paramount.

DOROTHY S.: Herbert Rawlinson played with Jackie Coogan in The Bugle Call. No, I don't believe he has retired yet—why should he, when he has nice little fans like you stirring up a breeze about him? No, Gilbert Roland isn't married—and neither is Ramon Novarro. Happy, Dots? But Ramon isn't at De Mille's. He's one of M-G-M's biggest prizes. I agree with you about Don Alvarado—he does look rather like Rod La Rocque—and besides, he's awfully nice to know!

SIR GALAHAD: Oh, no, Bebe Daniels and James Hall are not engaged. They just play in pictures together. I don't know Lillian Gilmore's age; but Ted Wells is twenty-six, Tom Mix forty-seven, and Bebe is twenty-seven. Anna Q. Nilsson's birthday is March 30—but the year is one of those deep, dark secrets. You ask her—I don't dare.

JUST A HIGH SCHOOL GIRL: Page Lane Chandler! How does he look off screen? Mighty good to me. six feet two inches tall, two hundred twenty-five pounds, red hair, bright blue eyes, and single. Twenty-four years old. You can write to both Lane and James Hall at Paramount. James is not married. William Boyd is Mr. Elinor Fair. William Haines is heart-free and whole—but that's not his fault!

POSTAL POUCH QUIZ

1. What actress first saw the light of day as Margaret Philpott?
2. What clever character comedian was born in Oskaloosa, Iowa?
3. Who is the owner of Tony, the wonder horse?
4. What actor was a newspaper cartoonist before he went into pictures?
5. What actor is famous as an amateur magician?

Madge Bellamy is slick at playing on the mandolin—and on the hearts of her Postal Pouch fans.

Boyd is at De Mille, and Haines at M-G-M. Colleen Moore was born August 19, 1902. Write to her at First National. When sending for stars' photographs, enclose twenty-five cents. I don't believe SCREEN SECRETS has run a gallery photograph of James Hall; but just watch out, and some day we'll surprise you.

JENNIE: You're right—Janet Gaynor wasn't slighted by the Wampas because she has already been a Baby Star —1926, if my memory isn't playing tricks. Dolores Del Rio's maiden name was Asunsolo. Esther Ralston was born in Salem, Mass.; Mary Pickford in Toronto, Canada; Janet Gaynor in Philadelphia; Sue Carol in Chicago; Ruth Taylor in Grand Rapids; Lois Moran in Pittsburgh; Colleen Moore in Port Huron, Mich.; Marion Davies in New York City; Sally O'Neil in Bayonne, N. J., and Gloria Swanson in Chicago. Molly O'Day weighs 108 pounds, and Louise Brooks 109. Big Boy is four years old—but growing. All right, I'll watch out for you—we like old friends in the Postal Pouch.

VIRGINIA: Sorry, but it was impossible to publish your answers in the January issue—which was already on the stands! Remember, it takes four months to make up a magazine! Some magazines take six, but we're speedy. Ken Maynard was born in 1895, and is married! Tom Tyler is twenty-four, and Bob Steele is twenty-one both single. George O'Brien is twenty-seven; Jackie Coogan fourteen; Lane Chandler twenty-four; Charles Farrell twenty-five. All single. Harry Carey was born in 1880; Hoot Gibson in 1892; Lloyd Hughes in 1897; Pat O'Malley in 1892; John Barrymore is forty-seven; Laura La Plante twenty-three; Edna Murphy about twenty-six; Billie Dove twenty-four. All married. P. S. And Frankie Darrow is eleven, Gilbert Roland about twenty-three, and Gary Cooper twenty-seven—all single. Now, how old are you, Virginia?

VIRGINIA M.: Art Acord doesn't seem to be working in pictures just now, but maybe a letter addressed to him in Hollywood would reach him. Our Post Office boys are pretty smart at finding

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

"What? Learn Music by Mail?" they laughed

"Yes," I cried, "and I'll bet money I can do it!"

IT ALL started one day after lunch. The office crowd was in the recreation-room, smoking and talking, while I thumbed through a magazine.

"Why so quiet, Joe," some one called to me.

"Just reading an ad," I replied, "all about a new way to learn music by mail. Says here any one can learn to play in a new months at home, without a teacher. Sounds easy, the way they tell about it."

"Ha, ha," laughed Fred Lawrence, "do you suppose they would say it was hard?"

"Perhaps not," I came back, a bit peeved, "but it sounds so reasonable I thought I'd write them for their booklet."

Well, maybe I didn't get a razzing then!

Finally Fred Lawrence sneered: "Why, it's absurd. The poor fellow really believes he can learn music by mail."

To this day I don't know what made me come back at him. Perhaps it was because I really was ambitious to learn to play the piano. Anyhow, before I knew it I'd cried, "Yes, and I'll bet money I can do it." But the crowd only laughed harder than ever.

Suppose I Was Wrong—

As I walked upstairs to my desk I began to regret my haste. Suppose that music course wasn't what the ad said. Suppose it was too difficult for me. And how did I know I had even the least bit of talent to help me out. If I fell down, the boys in the office would have the laugh on me for life. But just as I was beginning to weaken, my lifelong ambition to play and my real love of music came to the rescue. And I decided to go through with the whole thing.

During the few months that followed, Fred Lawrence never missed a chance to give me a sly dig about my bet. And the boys always got a good laugh, too. But I never said a word. I was waiting patiently for a chance to get the last laugh myself.

My Chance Arrives

Things began coming my way during the office outing at Pine Grove. After lunch it rained, and we all sat around inside looking at each other. Suddenly some one spied a piano in the corner. "Who can play?" every one began asking. Naturally, Fred Lawrence saw a fine chance to have some fun at my expense, and he got right up.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "our friend Joe, the music-master, has consented to give us a recital."

That gave the boys a good laugh. And some of them got on either side of me and with mock dignity started to escort me to the piano. I could hear a girl say, "Oh, let the poor fellow alone; can't you see he's mortified to death."

The Last Laugh

I smiled to myself. This was certainly a wonderful setting for my little surprise party. Assuming a scared look, I stumbled over to the piano while the crowd tittered.

"Play 'The Varsity Drag'," shouted Fred, thinking to embarrass me further.

I began fingering the keys, and then.....with a wonderful feeling of cool confidence.....I broke right into the very selection Fred asked for. There was a sudden hush in the room as I made that old piano talk. But in a few minutes I heard a fellow jump to his feet and shout, "Believe me, the boy is there! Let's dance!"

Tables and chairs were pushed aside, and soon the whole crowd was shuffling around having a whale of a time. Nobody would hear of me stopping, least of all the four fellows who were singing in harmony right at my elbow. So I played one peppy selection after another until I finished with "Crazy Rhythm" and the crowd stopped dancing and singing to applaud me. As I turned around to thank them, there was Fred holding a tenspot right under my nose.

"Folks," he said, addressing the crowd again, "I want to apologize publicly to Joe. I bet him he couldn't learn to play by mail, and believe me, he sure deserves to win the money!"

"Learn to play by mail!" exclaimed a dozen people." That sounds impossible! Tell us how you did it!"

I was only too glad to tell them how I'd always wanted to play but couldn't afford a teacher and couldn't think of spending years in practice. I described how I had read the U. S. School of Music ad, and how Fred bet me I couldn't learn to play by mail.

"Folks," I continued, "it was the biggest surprise of my life when I got the first lesson. It was fun right from the start, everything as simple as A-B-C. There were no scales or tiresome exercises. And all it required was part of my spare time. In a short time I was playing jazz, classical pieces, and in fact, anything I wanted. Believe me, that certainly was a profitable bet I made with Fred.

New Portraits

NORMA SHEARER whose voice registers as well in the talkies as her beauty does on the screen, has won one of the most coveted roles of the season in the part of Mary in The Trial of Mary Dugan, which is now being made into a picture by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

JOAN CRAWFORD seems to find her greatest popularity as the prophet of the much-maligned younger generation. Following her great success in Dancing Daughters, she is soon to appear in a sequel to that picture which is to be titled Modern Maidens.

—Ruth Harriet Louise.

LOIS MORAN, after a long career playing leading roles in pleasant pictures, seems about to blossom out as one of the most important players at the Fox Studios. She will be seen shortly in Blindfold. There are rumors that she is being groomed for stardom.

—Edwin Bower Hesser.

VILMA BANKY has forsaken her picturesque roles for the time being. The billowing gowns of medieval fashion, and decorative peasant costumes will be left on the shelf in her next picture for Samuel Goldwyn, entitled, Childs, Fifth Avenue, in which she will appear as a waitress.

EDMUND LOWE, who made his first great hit on the screen as the hard-boiled army sergeant, in What Price Glory, appears in a similar role in his first all-talkie venture, In Old Arizona, which establishes him firmly as one of the foremost actors in the new field.

—Lansing Brown.

DOROTHY JANIS, youthful Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player, can truthfully lay claim to being 100 per cent American. Her wild, dusky beauty is due to the fact that she is of Indian descent. She will be seen soon in The Pagan, with Ramon Navarro.

—Ruth Harriet Louise.

LUPE VELEZ' striking Mexican beauty and vivid personality brought her to instant fame in The Gaucho, with Douglas Fairbanks, and has since carried her to new heights in a brilliant flight of cinema success climaxed by her selection for the leading role in The Wolf Song.

Photograph by Eugene Robert Richee.

Senorita CYCLONE

Lupe Velez' tempestuous life has been a whirlwind of high adventure and throbbing emotion. Begin it now as told in her own words to Ruth Biery by

Lupe Velez

Editor's Note: It is with keen pleasure that we are able to present to SCREEN SECRETS readers the true life story of Lupe Velez, whose intense personality is felt in this vivid account given in her own words. Because of her unique and refreshingly direct method of expressing herself, and because her life itself has been a whirlwind of exciting and dangerous adventure, we feel that it is one of the most vital, interesting records of love and achievement ever penned. From her thrilling childhood in seething, war-torn Mexico to her dazzling success won in Hollywood, her career has been crowded with the unusual and the unexpected. "The story of a devil," she calls it, and perhaps her hectic life does much to explain her fiery temperament.

—THE EDITOR.

LUPE VELEZ sat in her dressing room putting on makeup for The Heart Song. An amber handled mascara brush passed slowly up and down the long, curling eyelashes. The eyes beneath them smouldered like a fire pausing to draw its breath before bursting into new flames. For perhaps five minutes she played with the mascara. Then, like a dormant volcano suddenly thrust into action, burst into volatile, staccato, yet amazingly dramatic English.

My life story? It is the story of a devil. And who wants to print the story of a devil? I do not know why that I have always been a devil. I am wild, I cannot help it. People love Lupe but they do not understand her. Perhaps it is because I am born in the Revolution. When your American kids go to kindergarten, I am riding with my father in the Mexican Army. I see the horse of my brother shot from beneath him. I see many mens try to kill my father. I see my father kill other peoples.

One day four mens stand up before an old wall with holes made by many guns in it. Four other mens stand fifty—a hundred feet—away from them with big guns. They shoot them down like so many ducks when you go hunting. I watch and then I climb upon my pony and go along behind my father and my brother. I am five, maybe six years old. It is my first school, these revolution. I do not cry, I do not have goose pimples on my flesh. I do not have fears of the bullets.

My father wants a boy. I am a girl but he make a boy out of me. He take me where I will learn to be afraid of nothings. Perhaps that is where I first learn to be a devil; perhaps it is where I first learn to be a flirt. No! I am a flirt ever since I can remember. I wrinkles my eyes at the mens when I am a baby. Maybe this is why peoples do not always understand Lupe. My father teach me to be hard like a boy. My love of mens makes me soft like a womans.

Lupe demonstrating that she can be as stately as the next one, and giving her parrot something to shout about.

I START to dance when I am yet a baby. I do not remember when I first dance but my mother, my father, my two brothers and four sisters say I have dance always. I do not always go to fight with my father. I am at home sometimes and sometimes I am with the army. When I am home I go outdoors and the old mens and the old womens and the young mens and the young womens they crowd around me and cry, "Dance for us, Lupe!" I dance in the streets and they clap and yell, "Hurrah for Lupe!"

The first I learn to hate is school. I hate it like the devil. I do not see no sense to it. Why should I sit still and listen to an old woman talk about something I cannot understand when there are frogs and snakes and mouses for Lupe to pick up and take home to scare her grandmother? I say to my sisters and my brothers, "Why go to school? Come with Lupe and she show you how to be happy." Always, since I am a little baby, I think the most important thing in life is to be happy. If I have one car and I want two, why should I think about money? If two cars make Lupe more happy than money, that is all that matters. If picking up big flat stones and watching the snakes fall out of them make me more happy than school—why not do it? Sometimes we take home fifty frogs and let them hop from one room to another.

At that time we have my grandmother to keep house for us. Sometimes we have much money, sometimes we have only a little. We are like a middle-class American family. But when I am young we always have servants. My grandmother and the servants, how they hate Lupe! My grandmother, she is like a newspaper. She tells all the town of Cervearia Cuauhtemos what I do to her. That makes everyone know I am a devil.

Some morning I think what's the use to pretend I go to school. I only start out from the house and then run away and play what you call hooky. So when they call me I climb out of my window and up on the roof. I stand on the edge and yell, "If you make me go to school, I jump off." If they say, "Stop that Lupe. Come down here this minute!" I slip to the edge as if I fall and they get skeered and they let me play hooky. They can never do nothing with Lupe.

I DO NOT know when I see my first movie. Five, maybe six. I come home and they say, "Lupe, how do you like it?" I do not tell them. I can say nothing. It hurts here. She pressed both hands over her heart so forcibly that the imprint of her fingers remained on her chest, exposed by the low gown she was wearing. But from the time I see my first picture I am an actress.

I never like to play with dolls. I like better to play actress with my pillow. I go to my room and grab first one pillow in my arms and then the other and pretend that they are real live people. They are the mens in the plays! I make love to them and say, "Some day I will make love like this to a mans in the theatre." Sometimes they are bad mens and I grab up a big knife and kills them. The feathers, they come out. They are white, but to Lupe they are red like the blood of the mens killed by a stiletto. The white blood all over the floor makes my grandmother hate me some more. When I gets tired of the pillows I looks in the looking glass and kisses myself and watches myself make eyes like I make eyes in the theatre. My bed, it has four big sticks; what you call it? Posters! To me these are peoples, and I talks to them and kisses them like I see peoples act in the movie. From the time I am able to walk I want to dance and from the time I see my first movie I want to act for peoples.

My poor family. They never knows what to do with me. When I am older and have to go to school once in a while I will not wear the socks which my mother gives me. I steal the silk stockings of my mother. One day she finds them all gone and she says to Lupe she does not know what to think of it. I say, "Mother, I think the servants must take them," and mother fire some of the servants because of which I say about the silk stockings.

MY THREE sisters—to me, they are different like hell. They are so good. They like to go to school. They like to wear socks. They like to be ladies. They make me nervous, being always so good like a lady. They have no fun. They do not flirt with all the mens like Lupe.

I have my first sweetheart when I am seven. His name is Victor and he lives in the next house to me. Our dogs start it. My dog fight his dog. We each stands up for our own dog and stick our tongues out at each other. Then when our dogs make up we make up and love each other. The other day he comes to Los Angeles! He telephones me. I think there is no friends like the old friends. Then I see him. Bah! He has pimples all over his face. "My Lord!" I think. How can I ever like him? Even when I am seven. How can I have for a sweetheart a boy who has pimples? I guess that's how we get different when we grow up. Even if we don't know it—we changes.

I fights like a hellion always. When I am a very little kid the milk boy pick a fight with my little brother. He is two years younger than Lupe. The milk boy is beating my brother when I see him. I run like the devil. I am maybe seven. I throw myself on him and I scratch and I kick and then I picks up a big stone and crack his nose with it. Then I laugh! A little girl has beat up a sixteen year old milk seller!

I fall very much in loves when I am thirteen and a half. I have flirt with everybody even my own father and my own brother but I have never been in love up to this minute. I am going to school with some girls; running down the road, swinging my hands; laughing, very happy. A mans on a horse comes very fast on us. He thinks it is funny to skeer us. He rushes his horse close and more close to us. I am not afraid of an army but I am afraid of this one horse rushing down on us. I hit a tree when I jump out of the way and hurt my arm. I scream and I yell bad names at him. He thinks he has hurt me and jumps off his horse to say he is sorry. I will not listen to what he says. I just keeps screaming at him.

"Isn't it terrible?

Lupe meets the only one that has ever been able to resist her—stubbornness when she calls indicates a jackass nature.

Here is Lupe with her mother, Senora Velez, whose sound advice did much to help Lupe up the ladder of fame.

Did I hurt such a little beautiful kid like you? I'm so sorry."

That make me look at him. He is twenty-one years old, he is tall and very handsome. I like him. We talk and talk there by the tree. The girls call, "Come on, Lupe!" I say, "I will follow."

"Where are you going?" I say to him.

"To see my sweetheart."

That hurt me on the inside to think he have a sweetheart. I flirts with him until he says he wishes I am a little older.

"I am old enough. I am fourteen and a half," I tell him. I add one year to my age to make me seem bigger.

I DO NOT go to school that day; I play hooky, go into the fields and think about him. I spy on him and sneak up every day and watch him talk to his sweetheart through her window. I take a stitch out of my dress to make it longer. I take my sister's shoes and put on me. They are too big but they have high heels and make me look taller. I go to the roof of my house to watch and watch and see if he come down the road. One day I

When it's chocolate time in Hollywood. Dorothy Sebastian, Dave Howard, assistant director, and Buster Keaton, are taking time out for refreshment between the scenes of Spite Marriage.

SO THIS IS

NANCY SMITH, one of Hollywood's most versatile press agents, made the rounds of her male clients recently and asked them all for their advice to young girls. This was the result of her investigation:

Director Alfred Santell: "Don't go on the street with the seam in your stocking crooked. It looks terrible." And Alice White was the last girl he directed. But she doesn't wear stockings!

Director Al Rogell: "Don't wear the skirts too short. The rear view of a woman's knee is horrible—keep it covered." Yet Al is most happily married.

James Gleason: "Don't wear a hat so small that the back of your neck shows. If it's long hair it's O. K. With a shaved neck, it's horrible." A good tip. Gleason is a writer which means he must be an observer.

Fred Niblo: "Don't apply make-up to your face in public. Nothing shows inferior breeding like powdering the nose conspicuously." Perhaps Mr. Niblo learned this by directing Greta Garbo. She never uses any make-up except for screen purposes.

Robert Armstrong: "Don't try to change the shape of the mouth with lip-stick. It has never been done successfully." Bob should know. It's his business to kiss leading ladies.

Ken Maynard: "Don't pretend to be something you are not. Act natural!" A possible explanation for Ken's preference for red-headed ladies.

William Howard: "Don't wear gaudy jewelry. It's not so bad at night but in the sunlight it's cheap-looking." Bill would probably hold as models Janet Gaynor and Sue Carol.

Strong Stuff

NILS ASTHER'S neighbors in Whitley Heights have just discovered what all the racket was about. Nils wanted an outdoor gymnasium in which to practice Swedish exercises. Carpenters were not versed in Swedish equipment so Nils supervised their work at night.

Playful Kitty

WILD jungle beasts, scientists have always maintained, will not cross water. But "Kitty," a full-grown tigress, had never been in a jungle and therefore had nothing of this scientific restraint. So it happened that Sidney Franklin had some hectic moments when Kitty was turned into a jungle set at M-G-M.

Instead of staying on her own side of the water as they wanted her to, Kitty turned duck and splashed her way to the camera side of the set, knocking everything topsy-turvy and sending the director and camera crews helter-skelter for safety. And when it was over, Kitty's trainer, a ninety-pound woman, took Kitty by the nape of the neck and hauled her off to her cage.

Star Cooking

A COOKING school in Hollywood. Now, we ask you! Mrs. Lucile Webster Gleason, wife of James Gleason, the playwright, had started the innovation. And the members are Phyllis Haver, Dorothy Dwan, Lina Basquette, Lois Wilson and Mrs. Robert Armstrong.

Two famous pairs of lovers and their impresario. From left to right, they are: Vilma Banky, Walter Byron, Samuel Goldwyn, producer, Lili Damita, and Ronald Colman.

By ANNE HOWE

We can understand Mrs. Armstrong's interest. She knows the way to a man's heart—and friend husband, Bob, is one of the most popular leading men in the city. And Lina Basquette with Pev Marley as a brand-new hubby! But Phyllis and Dorothy and Lois! Methinks, these girls are holding out on us.

Hats Off

WHEN Janet Gaynor entered the set of Christina in her wedding dress nine electricians bared their heads. A real tribute to this actress.

Speaking Up

MARY and Doug are accredited with starting a new Hollywood game called "orations." They were giving a dinner party when Doug rose and announced, "Now, each person will rise and give a three minutes talk on the subject assigned him. Charlie, you can start on 'Lampshades.'"

Chaplin answered at once. And the audience soon learned that Chaplin was as well versed on lampshades as any housewife in the country.

Now, the game has become the vogue at dinner parties.

Well, there's no better training for these much-talked about talkies!

May McAvoy and Monte Blue roughing it in the High Sierras while shooting scenes for No Defense.

Woof, Woof!

Chatter reported by Estelle Taylor.

"Momma, can I have a quarter to go to the movie show?"

"What is the picture, dear?"

"It's The Barker, mom."

"Tut, tut! You don't want to see any more dog pictures."

Service

PRETTY prank played by Don Terry on Madge Bellamy over at the Fox lot where they are blending emotions to achieve a perfect picture in Exiles. On a day that Don was not working he climbed into overalls and scampered up to the beams where electricians were manipulating sun arcs. Seizing one of the spotlights, Don played it full upon Madge.

"Is this all right, Miss Bellamy?" he inquired solicitously. And, in a moment, "Is it too strong, Miss Bellamy?" Unaccustomed to so much attention, Madge finally looked up to discover her leading man grinning at her.

Whereupon there were several laughs.

Declaring Himself

DISCONCERTING news to quick-touch artists discovered on the wall of a Warner Brothers' director's office. It's a notice which reads:

"I do not loan money because I have been a fool long enough. I have loaned thousands to so-called friends who never pay a penny back, so don't rush in, shake my hand, ask how I feel when you really don't give a damn and expect to make a quick touch, because I am no longer anybody's Santa Claus. It's no fault of mine if you owe the landlord, laundryman, grocer, tailor and finance company for your car"

The Water Cure

CHARLIE MORTON is being sued for divorce by his wife. The complaint states that he isn't home on time for his dinner. We recall when Mrs. Charlie Morton threw scalding water on friend husband for his first offense in this matter. But Charlie makes no defense. It is well known among friends that he has desired the separation for a year, or since the water incident.

Too Much of a Good Thing

GASTRONOMIC difficulties encountered during the filming of young Junior Coghlan's latest starring opus, labelled Square Shoulders. In one scene Junior, Philippe de Lacy, and a precious portion of femininity named Anita Louise, aged ten, were required to consume a chocolate sundae apiece, whereupon Philippe, Junior's youthful cinema rival for the lady's favors, orders a double chocolate sundae all around. All went well until the fourth shot. By that time the children had each eaten six sundaes and their dreams of Paradise did not include an unlimited supply of ice cream.

Indeed, it is further reported that young Master Coghlan waived luncheon that day, an amazing occurrence for a twelve-year old.

Kid Stuff

THE latest addition to your list of nicknames. Carmel Myers and Bessie Love contribute it. "Chuchi" it is, and is Bessie's pet name for Carmel, coined back in those dear old Fine Arts studio days when they were a couple of kidlets taking a fling at picture fame. You gargle it low in your throat and it comes out sounding like "hookie."

It was given public presentation recently when Carmel received a handsome leather make-up box on which "Chuchi" was spelled out in letters of gold.

Nils Was Scared

NILS ASTHER has made his first public appearance and he admits that the personal appearance gave him the qualms of a first night opening. He was formerly a star of the Royal Dramatic Theater in Sweden.

"I was scared to death," he said after he made his appearance, "I am so used to acting without an audience and applause now that I thought something was wrong when I heard all of the hand clapping."

He made his first appearance with Dream of Love when it showed at a Los Angeles theater, and this marked his first appearance before the American public.

Norma Shearer opens the season on Valentines with the receipt of this life-size token from an admirer in far-off Australia.

Nina May McKinney, who is now playing the lead in Hallelujah, Hollywood's first all-colored picture.

Badge of Love

HELPFUL hint to young ladies intrigued by the flicker shadow of Gary Cooper. The latest thing is not to admit having a "crush" or being "infatuated" with him, but to simply murmur "I have gone-Gary," eyes downcast. That's what Hollywood girls call it.

Judging from the abundance of his fan mail, a million misses in this bright country of our have gone-Gary.

Once Was Enough

CECELIA DE MILLE, daughter of C. B., did a small bit in The Godless Girl and then went back to her horses. She is now touring the horse shows of the country with "The Duchess of Bourbon." "Garden Lady," who won her so many first cups for the past several seasons, has been relegated to the pastures.

Miss Cecelia admits she prefers the silent horse sport to her father's talkies.

For Art's Sake

ESTELLE TAYLOR, Jack Dempsey's wife is stealing some of Lon Chaney's stuff in her forthcoming picture at M-G-M. She is assuming the role of an Oriental girl in Chaney's next picture and she really wanted to look the part and do the make-up well. So she rigged up a contraption all her own design to make her eyes look almond shaped. She had a bit of her hair shaved off on either side of her head and put cement on the spot with a little hook in it to which she attaches a string. This string is glued to the skin near each eye and the string pulled through the hook to bring about the necessary slant. Estelle says it is not so pleasant while the string is attached, but is willing to make the sacrifice for art's sake.

Mascot

ALICE WHITE may have severed her connections with Dick Grace, but Dick has not forgotten her. He was listening in on the game New Year's day. Alice White was announced as mascot for Georgia Tec.

"Oh, boy," said Dick, "I'd like to be half of that team!"

AND now when Hollywood has gone hysterical over the talkies we learn that Fox is perfecting a third-dimension device. But that's nothing compared to the upsetting word which comes from Italy. Some genius over there is reported to have perfected an invention which will project the odors.

What we wonder is: Will they call their first production Garlic and Onions? It should make a good try-out picture.

Lace But Not Least

CORINNE GRIFFITH has what is said to be not only the most unique tablecloth in this city but the most expensive. It is made of seven kinds of lace, all hand woven, and honors The Divine Lady, her recent picture. Romney pictures of Lady Hamilton are worked through it, interspersed with reproductions of Lord Nelson, Lord Hamilton, Charles Greville and others. It took twenty lace experts eight months to make it. There are twenty-four napkins to match, each with a different Divine Lady character in it.

Janet Gaynor as a Dutch treat. This is the costume she will wear in her newest picture, Christina.

Glenn Tryon, gets that intense look from memorizing the lines which he is to speak in Broadway, in which he plays the part of the hoofer.

Well, Corinne should be able to afford it. She's one of the highest paid stars in the business. Which means something around ten thousand dollars weekly.

The Good Provider

GRANT WITHERS has an especial pull with his star, Corinne Griffith. Grant is an indefatigable huntsman of wild ducks; Corinne and Walter Morosco are indefatigable consumers! Grant spends every week-end at the duck haunts of Palmdale on the desert. Corinne spends the rest of the week eating three squares—draw your own conclusions as to why this young man has been twice chosen.

Thoughtful

TOM MIX is a lonely figure in Hollywood these days. He strolls the boulevard alone, lunches alone at the Monmartre, lives in a lonely mansion. A friend asked, "Tom, why don't you shut up the big house and move to the club?"

"Well, I'd like to," said Tom, "but what would the servants do? They have to have a home, you know."

Willing to Learn

ANITA PAGE isn't proud, that is, not too proud. During her spare moments she is being tutored at M-G-M by "Half Pint" Couch, a tiny ten-year-old colored youth who is dancing his way through the movies in King Vidor's Hallelujah, an all-colored picture. He is teaching her the southern shuffle.

"Maybe some day I'll have to play a blackface part, and I'll at least be able to do their dances," she said. She is now appearing in M-G-M's all synchronized picture, Broadway Melody.

Helpful

ANITA lives near the M-G-M Studios in Culver City and calls daily for her mail. When she stepped up to the window to ask if there was anything for her, an old woman clutched her by the arm.

"Little girl, take the advice of somebody that has bucked the game and lost. There ain't anything in this extra racket. You forget about wanting to get into the movies and go home and marry some nice young fellow." Anita promised to go home and think it over and was rewarded with a matronly smile of approval.

Twinkling Fingers

A NEW fad has unintentionally been introduced to Hollywood by Dolores Costello. While working on some retakes for the dialogue sequences of Noah's Ark she dined at a restaurant near the studio without removing her make-up. Her finger nails were resplendent with gilt polish which was in accord with the custom prevailing during the time of Noah. Some Hollywood flappers noticed the bizarre nails and seized upon the idea. Now, you see girls with gilded nails on every street corner.

AN EXTRA GIRL Gives the Lowdown

The life of the extra is quite as full of exciting adventure and heroic struggle as that of any star—and sometimes more so.

By HARMONY HAYNES

"I've extraed bad and I've extraed good,
I've extraed all over Hollywood."

YES, that's poetry but it's more truth. I landed in this cinematic city as gaga as they make 'em. I believed all the creations of high salaried press agents about the miraculous finds and spectacular makings of stars. I'd read all of Norma Talmadge's requirements of a perfect screen face—I had them all! The fluffy hair, high forehead, proper width between the eyes, perfect tilted nose, pearly teeth and pointed chin. I wonder now why she didn't mention any requirements below the chin.

I thought all I had to do was to let one director look at me. After four years I still believe I was not far wrong but how to make them look is a question I can't answer.

My first work in Hollywood was in Tumble Weeds. It was a night set and a big one. All the 'boes from Pershing Square were there and they hadn't neglected the bootlegger before coming. Barbara Bedford was playing opposite Bill Hart; King Baggot was directing. I was so darn green, I thought the big sun arcs were lights shining from Heaven. Baggot was hard-boiled—he had reason to be. He had ordered cowboys—too many weren't qualified. Finally, after numerous retakes, he got up on a parallel and shouted, "All you cowboys up front—you nances get back in the rear."

The cowboys were, of course, mounted. They were threatening to lynch Bill Hart. They raced madly down through the street filled with people. The people ran and screamed. Baggot became more excited. "Don't run—grab the horses, try to pull Hart off." I wanted to make good. I made a leap for Hart, missed and fell beneath his pinto. I was hurt but not badly. A cowboy swooped down to pick me up. He rode out of the scene with me. Baggot called me a little nuisance and told me to get out of his sight before he lost his temper. Barbara Bedford, bless her, took pity on me. She realized that I did not belong in that reeking, maudlin crowd of cheap atmosphere. "Little girl, you don't want to hang around those people. Come and sit with me." I guess she spoke to Baggot. Anyway he gave me a bit in the picture. I saw it later. It was good. But when he started his next picture and I went to see him he said, "For Heaven's sake, haven't you gone home yet?" I didn't work for him.

Harmony Haynes, the author of this article, who knows her stuff because she has done it so often.

A FEW YEARS afterward when the greenness had worn off, I visited his set. He watched me all afternoon and finally sent his script girl to inquire who I was. So much for ego—I thought I'd caused him enough trouble so that he never would forget me.

I lived close to Poverty Row. J. H. Brown was making a picture there with Virginia Browne Faire. Between shots she was practicing the Charleston. That was before Joan Crawford had it corralled. I wanted to show her how it was done but she was a star and I not even an extra. I hung around the set all day. A prize fighter named Herrick took me to dinner. When I returned Al Rogel, then assistant, said, "I've been looking for you, doll face. We need a nurse. Get into this," and he threw me a uniform. Virginia put on my makeup and told me what to do. I'll always love her for that even though she doesn't know me now.

A little agent thought I was a good bet. He sent me to work for Charles Hutchinson. Now Hutch is a good-hearted fellow but he has the world cheated for strong language orators. I was in a bar room playing a tough. How miscast I was with my childish innocence! There were just two of us, the other was a handsome Mrs. Brown. Hutch handed us each a cigarette and said, "Light up." Mrs. Brown said, "I'm sorry but I don't smoke." Hutch didn't appreciate her virtue. He merely said, "Then what tha hell you trying to do in pictures? Get off the set!" I did not protest, I smoked. There was a fight scene and gun play, blanks, of course, but I got too close to one of the guns and my leg was badly burned. Again, I was just a nuisance.

Well, the greenness finally wore off. I learned the ropes, knew where the work was and how to get it and I guess I got my share. Sometimes it was heartbreaking, sometimes it was funny, but always it was human.

AT FIRST I was so fired with ambition, so eager to make good that I used to watch the professional extras in amazement. They are a sophisticated lot and have no illusions about pictures or their own possibilities. All they want is their check and a call-back tomorrow. If they are asked to do a bit, even though that bit might bring them to the attention of the director, they are not thrilled at the opportunity. They merely shrug their proud shoulders and ask, "For seven-fifty? Not on your life." If the check is raised they do the bit—if not, then some ambitious newcomer gets it. I used to think, "I'll never be like that. No wonder they are extras—" But I am like that and I'm an extra, and I suppose, will remain one.

But we have different types of extras. The professionals are in the majority. It's their work and their livelihood and they often grow old in the profession. They make a good living and are content with it. They are the ones to whom we owe the eight-hour day, the over-time checks, the transportation and the set rate of salary. They take in old and young alike and there is no color line. Most of them live at home—just townspeople.

Then there are the little beauty winners who have found themselves less attractive here than at home. Pride keeps them from going back failures and they lose themselves in the extra ranks.

Only a week ago I met little Miss Philadelphia doing extra work on the De Mille lot. She was pretty in an unsophisticated way. Long blonde curls of an ashen hue —nothing to compete with the peroxide beauties of Hollywood; blue eyes far too light to photograph well. She and her mother had come out here with a little money, hired a press agent and when the money was all gone, she became an extra.

Then there are those who have been up at the top and whom time or misfortune has dropped. To these our sympathy should go. They are usually pitiful creatures, cynical, with no interest in life. Among these is Jane Tallent, once heralded as the most beautiful leading lady in pictures. I like Jane—everyone does. She laughs all day but it's a hollow laugh without real mirth. Jane is still beautiful, still able to play leads but the line of demarcation is stamped upon her—she's a has-been.

Then there's Jean Daimond. Jean and Dorothy Mackaill started together in New York as extras. They were chums, they are still friends. They both rose rapidly. Jean was beautiful; Dorothy, only good-looking.

There was an opportunity to come west. Dorothy took it but Jean remained in the East and lost out. She was at that time engaged to Joe Stern, a film cutter, now Joseph Von Sternberg, the great director. But the romance did not last and she became engaged to Oliver Marsh. Then she came to Hollywood. But finally she broke up with Marsh, too. Marsh and Von Sternberg have since climbed to the top of the profession, but Jean—Jean's still an extra.

Ilean Hume came out from New York a leading lady. Now she, too, is an extra, with two beautiful babies to support. It's the same old story of a deserted wife. A few friends stand by her, but, as she says, "too darned few."

Ted Oliver, once leading man and universally known as Oliver Kendal, is another come-down. His case was sad. He went to war and got all shot up with shrapnel. A plastic surgeon worked over the war-scarred face, built him a new forehead and removed the scars but all this didn't put him back in his rightful place opposite any Gloria Swansons. Oliver dropped the Kendall, prefixed the Ted and became a popular, medium-salaried heavy. He met Ilean one day and they decided that even has-beens could be happy together and they are.

PERRY VEKOFF, once a big director, is now one of us. He never mingles with the crowd. He just sits and writes except when called to work. He feels that perhaps some day he may find his lost niche in the writing world. There's Mollie Malone, Barbara Tennant—oh, so many more!

Last come those who wish to win fame. These may be rich or poor. Their ambition is the same and they are not the usual laughing, happy extras we meet daily on the set and often they decorate our pages with startling headlines. Sometimes it is Hollywood Girl Gets a Break but more often it is Hollywood Girl Attempts Suicide.

I lived at the McCadden Hotel. A little French girl, Andre Renaurd, lived there, too. Little work and no breaks were her lot. She was so blue and moody and all my wise-cracks failed to cheer her up. She would say, "I tell it to you, this can't last. Something is going to happen." It did happen—she got her headlines and her picture on the front page but she lived to read them. Well, after that she took up Christian Science, a new name and got a new perspective on life—a lot of good publicity wasted.

There was little Mary Lygo. She had been a glorified chorus girl and came out here—but the kliegs didn't enhance her beauty as the footlights had. The camera found lots of flaws. She had funny things done to that pretty little face of hers, she even had her eyes made larger and a cupid's-bow effect added to her mouth but none of her self-inflicted tortures made the desired impression upon the casting directors. She hocked all her pretty clothes and her jewels in a vain effort to keep up with the Joneses but the jinx followed her once too often. She always said she'd do it. I used to laugh at her—I didn't think she meant it. She tried it several times and for a while it seemed that she couldn't even make a success of death. She said to me one time, "I guess even

In the big scenes hundreds of extras are used to supply a background as essential as the setting itself, and each must play a part as definite as any in the picture as in this scene from The Man Who Laughs.

St. Peter feels that I'm not the type." However, he finally made a place for her. She died at the hospital—without funds, without friends, and without glory.

Of course, some of the extras get breaks. Katherine Hill did. She extraed around with us and finally Menjou saw her. She became Katherine Carver, his leading lady; and, later on, his wife.

James Murray and I roomed at the same place. I paid five a week and he paid four. I managed to get along better than he did. Being a girl has its advantages. Even those who wouldn't give me work would buy me a meal now and then. Jimmy, unlike myself, was always being noticed. Numerous tests were taken. Finally one turned out well and King Vidor signed him up.

James Ford came out here with a bang and then went down to the level of an extra. Corinne Griffith gave him a chance and he made good.

Edna Adams extraed all over Hollywood. If there was a set, Edna was on it. If there was a party, Edna was on that, too. She was a good kid, and pretty. One day she flashed the pearls at Johnny Hines and landed a contract. Her publicity reads Edna May. I always had an idea that success would turn her head but she's just as smiley when she meets you as she ever was.

It must be nice to go to bed an extra and wake up a star but every time my alarm rings I know it's just another location call. Grease paint at six a. m. isn't pleasant but it's no harder on me than on Mary Pickford. There is struggle and hardship in any line of endeavor and so there is in pictures. We all work. Hollywood is not endowed with the idle rich. Millions of dollars, imported cars, liveried chauffeurs and mansions do not seem to ruin ambition here. The extra boy in his rattly old Hoopie doesn't work any harder than does Douglas Fairbanks.

Of course, stars, as a rule, aren't subjected to the dangers we are. Not that they are cowards but they are too valuable to risk. Every precaution is taken for our safety too, but occasionally there is a slip-up and a casualty.

In The King of Kings there were countless bruises. During the earthquake scene little Vi Palmer was to faint on a break-away bridge. Bob Ober was to pick her up and carry her off before the crash. It was all timed and rehearsed and the director called for a take. Some woman wrote in a little scene for herself. She stooped directly in Ober's path and shook Vi. Ober pushed her aside, picked Vi up—but too late. They went down with the bridge. They had to stay down, too. The camera was grinding. Rocks, sticks and debris of all kinds piled in

No Doubt About This One

Charles Rogers is my favorite movie star.

I chose him—not because he is a boy and I am a girl (although it would seem unnatural to pass him by)—

But because:

He is Clean-cut Handsome
A very good Actor
A Real boy
So Lovable
And a fine Example for young men to follow
Because of his Sterling qualities

He commands Respect
And— Oh, I must not forget—
He is very Good to his mother
Economical, too
And Refined
And never Stuck-up

Charles Rogers is my favorite because he is my ideal.

For Janet Gaynor

Janet Gaynor is my favorite because of her sincere characterizations, wistful charm and childlike appeal which makes us ready to smile at her even through our tears.

She stands midway between the accustomed types of the younger players. She is not an overdone flapper nor yet "the girl next door." She is that rare combination, a plausible character yet one tinged with the fairytale radiance we most of us like to find on the screen.

Very Much Alive

While letters have been pouring into SCREEN SECRETS asking whether or not Clara Bow is really dead, the young lady herself paused in the making of her new picture, A Wild Party, to assure a correspondent that she really felt such rumors were unfounded.

Clara Bow, Al Jolson and Davy Lee can rise to remark with Mark Twain that reports of their death have been greatly exaggerated.

Al Jolson, too, has been reported dead. He has just returned from a happy honeymoon in Honolulu and is preparing to start work on his new Warner Bros. picture, Mammy.

Reports that Davy Lee, who died on the screen as Sonny Boy, in The Singing Fool, had really died, arose from the death of a Hollywood banjo player who also used the name Sonny Boy. Davy will soon be seen again on the screen.

The Future of the Talkies

What will the talkies do to the stage? To vaudeville? To silent films? J. J. McCarthy, new chief of Fox Movietone Studios, and for years an authority on motion picture entertainment, states his views on the talkies and their future to

HENRY MACMAHON

THE road show king, J. J. McCarthy, is now in Hollywood and busied with talking pictures. The statement offers food for reflection. McCarthy has always been right in judging the trend of entertainment, and the chances are that he's right now.

McCarthy lives in a two-storied white Colonial in a Hollywood suburb, porticoed by arborescent Acacias and pepper trees, and it was there I went on a recent Saturday afternoon to renew friendship with the man whose former shuttle was from a Central Park apartment to the New York theatrical bourse and back again. Back of the house was a large orangery through which we strolled. It was like a modern Academe. He told me he had just returned from a quick transcontinental trip engaging Edward Royce to produce and six professional broadcasters to record talking features. On January 1, he took charge of the new movietone studio in Fox Hills, adjacent to Hollywood, a $10,000,000 plant in which nine stages and the wide handy outdoors will take care of the production of one hundred and fifty features (long and short) yearly.

"Why did you make the switch-over from the road shows?" I asked.

"Because of the trend of the times," he replied. "Talking pictures are here to stay. In future the great majority of pictures will be dialogue, whether wholly dialogue or with some parts done silently. I do not forget the fact that in the new regime silence will acquire a tremendous dramatic importance it has never enjoyed before—in the cinema, I mean. Such silence will be very dramatic. In the great situation—whether 'legitimate' or in the talkers—silence is as essential as sound.

"The whole thing is stepping forward," he continued. "What the public are seeing today is no criterion of what they will see within the next three or four months. Please allow for the fact that the vigorous pursuit of the new art dates only from last April or May, and the work thus far exhibited has been made under the greatest handicaps and disadvantages.

"No, the best of talking pictures are still to come. The new art is not standing still: it will not go backward and must go forward. Say for me that the real talking pictures start about the first of the year. The public will get them around February or March. In the past they have been made under the worst possible conditions, but science is rapidly improving the way to give drama its opportunity—"

"Yes," intervened a young sound engineer who was with us, "the invention of the silent camera is going to eliminate the cumbersome camera booths that restrain the flexibility of the action . . . then again, instead of working on stuffy, over-hot stages, players will enjoy normal working conditions by means of great air-conditioning plants. False partitions—"

"Enough," said McCarthy, "of technique. The theatre is an allusion, and any kind of acted entertainment is sold as an illusion. Why fatigue and disillusion your public with laborious explication of sound cameras, air-plants, microphones, stage partitions et al., when they are solely interested in what they can see and hear at the front of the screen? Talking pictures must be pretty sturdy," he added whimsically, "to survive the flood of diagrammatic articles and statistics that is constantly being let loose about them."

"But the product—" I insisted. "Will the best of it measure up to the best of the other modes?"

"Let me mention as an illustration a two-reeler called Friendship, written and directed by Eugene Walter. I found it as powerful and enthralling a dramatic sketch as any I ever saw and heard on the legitimate stage. I assure you that Walter's thirty years' experience in the theatre has not been wasted. A long feature, The Ghost Talks, was a rip-roaring comedy, and In Old Arizona, a fine drama, the rendition of which I could compare only to some such event as Belasco's first night of The Girl of the Golden West in New York City. What I am trying to convey is that such works, synchronized in sight and sound, satisfied my showman's sense trained in the ways of the legitimate theatre."

"What'll be the ultimate result?"

"I am inclined to think the dialogue short pictures will strike the absolute final note in the annihilation of vaudeville as it exists today, but I do not think the dramatic stage which deals in full-length plays will be completely annihilated."

"As a matter of fact, hasn't drama pretty well survived the onslaught of the movies?"

"The best answer to that is as follows: In 1915, when the artistic motion pictures really started, there were 2,000 theatres in this country in which the dramatic manager could book his offerings; in 1928, following fourteen years of first-class picture production, there remained but 300 such legitimate theatres still available for the products of dramatic managers."

J. J. McCarthy, road show king and movie expert extraordinary, who gives his talkie views in this article.

I ruefully acknowledge that such scant circuiting signified heavy decline in drama—that and the increase in the country's motion picture theatres to between 15,000 and 20,000; but I argued that "stock," "little theatres" and metropolitan productions showed continuing life.

"Of course!" he agreed,

Dorothy Burgess and Warner Baxter in a scene from In Old Arizona, the first talkie to be made out-of-doors.

"and by no means all the decline is to be laid to the door of picture competition. Part of it is the fault of the producers. Everyone knows legitimate road touring is dead, yet the Theatre Guild sends out companies on the road, properly produced and properly cast, and these companies do business. But who is there among the commercial managers developing new talent as A. M. Palmer or Lester Wallack used to develop it, or as the men out here are developing it in pictures? The Theatre Guild wins because it is operating on the same plan as the marvelous producing managers of twenty-five years ago.

"The addition of speech and sound to pictures means not the death of the drama but curtain on the present regime of production. It may interest you to know that there were somewhere between twenty and twenty-five first class theatres dark when I left New York.

"All the motion picture houses that are going to have sound equipment," he continued, "will install the same within the next three or four years. Just as the penny movie peep-boxes were not driven out by the screen—you can still see penny arcades in most cities—so the silent motion picture will not be driven out by the talker in those neighborhoods where the public, or a part of it, puts up with pantomime. But I do not think that the unspoken picture will be the popular thing, with the coming of the dialogue pictures. As to flesh-and-blood entertainment, girl shows there will always be; grand operas and philharmonics where fashion can gather; unique personalities of art which a certain element will pay to see and hear direct. In fact, mechanical recording has been proved to increase personal acceptance, as in the striking instance of John McCormack whose hall audiences steadily grew larger as his voice was recorded on the disks."

ANOTHER crop of promising screen youngsters has been given a flying start on the road to fame—a start that is at once a guarantee for the future and a tribute to their work thus far.

The thirteen girls shown above have been chosen from the ranks of Hollywood's younger actresses by the Wampas (Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers) to be the Wampas Baby Stars of 1929.

All of which means a great deal: Means that these Men Who Know have set the hall-mark of their approval on the lucky thirteen. It means that these screen children have already demonstrated sufficient achievement to justify a forecast of brilliant futures for them—that careers of stardom stretch out before them. And to the fans it means most of all, for here are the actresses whose talents will bring them before motion picture audiences to take their places among the

How William Haines

William Haines' reputation as a wise-shield a highly sensitive nature—

By RUTH

William Haines giving the whisker salute, and showing the strain under which he labors when his face is hidden.

HE WAS just an average, fourteen-year-old, small town, good-family youngster. You know what that means. A maid or two to help direct the children. Good schooling; plenty of sensible, well-wearing clothes with a best suit for Sunday; an ice cream soda at the drug store corner as a special treat on Saturday. Baseball in the streets or on the vacant back lots. A loving mother and a doting father.

Yet this boy wasn't contented. He'd stand in front of his solid two-story home and look up and down the quiet, shaded street of Staunton, Virginia, and wonder just where this sort of thing was going to lead him. Where had these familiar old lanes led the other fellows who had been born on them? One was a clerk in the bank, another was assistant cashier in the same institution. One was putting up prescriptions. Another spent his days in the little bookkeeping cubby-hole of the reliable, old-line grocery. Of course, there were his mother and father—

Aw, shucks, it was up to a fellow to grab a hatchet and hew out his own future. And if he wanted to make good in a big way and make a lot of money he'd have to clear out of this town before he dug his feet deep into the dust and the mud and the damp, dewy grass—before the town got too big a hold on him. Now was the time—

IT'S A long step from Staunton, Virginia, to Hollywood, California. It's a big jump from a sensitive, world-yearning boy of fourteen to the wise-crackingest star of the movies. Yet Billy Haines made it. He's supposed to be the funniest man in this city. But under his armor of wise-cracks is Billy Haines always funny? Is his humor, his nonchalant, sometimes off-shade humor, natural, or is it something which has been developed with training? Is he a real clown or a Pagliacci? For the first time he has consented to tell the story of how he became a wise-cracker.

"When I decided I just had to get out of town someway—I began to look around for opportunities. The du Pont Powder Company had started a new plant on a boggy old peanut field not far from our city. It was during the war and we heard they were paying high prices for labor. Another boy and myself decided to have a try at it. I could only think of one way to get the money. I took a diamond pin of my mother's. It was one of these fissue affairs with the diamond up in a corner—a wonderful old pin, an heirloom in our family. My grandmother, who lived at the Appomattox Court House, had it on during the Civil War when a runner dashed up and told them to vacate—both armies were coming. They hitched up the oxen and started away in such a hurry that grandmother forgot the youngest of her nine children, the new-born baby. She hurried back, and in the excitement this pin caught in the neck of the baby.

"It was that pin I pawned for twelve dollars. The other boy scared up sixteen dollars on a bunch of old coins which they had in their family.

WE RECEIVED one hundred and eighty dollars a month for handling nitro-glycerine. A fortune for fourteen-year-old runaway youngsters. Then mother sent a policeman down for me. By this time I knew from my Bill Haines and Jack Pickford, as they appeared in Brown of Harvard; as a collegian, Bill's talents had full sway.

Became a Wisecracker

powder plant companions that even policemen were human. I took him to a party and when he looked around for us, well—we were missing.

"My mother came next. But my mother is a sensible woman. 'If I take you home now, against your will, you'll only run away again.'

"A few months later Orson Sweat Marden, editor of Success Magazine, moved to Staunton. Mrs. Marden and mother became great friends. Through her influence I received the chance to go to New York with the Canyon Rubber Company.

"New York! The Eldorado of my ambitions. Now, I knew success was mine for the grasping. It was all so serious to me. I don't know that you'll understand when I tell you that as a child and a young boy I seemed to be always hearing music. Not definite tunes, exactly—just music. Something calling me, intriguing me to listen. Oh, it sounds silly—but you have asked for the truth and I'm telling just exactly what I remember.

"I heard them in New York. I quit the job. The rubber business didn't seem to go with them. I didn't know anything about the stage and I'd never even thought about pictures, but, somehow, even when I was a child, I seemed to feel myself taking bows.

Bill Haines registers dislike for the treat offered him by Tenen Holtz in the picture The Duke Steps Out.

BUT the bows didn't come. I started living in hall bedrooms. You know the old story. I went home for a year. My family moved to Richmond. I clerked in a dry-goods store. Sixteen dollars a week. You'd imagine now, from my present wise-cracking reputation, that I was the village cut-up. Well, I wasn't. I was big, dumb, gawky, clumsy and so sensitive that nothing seemed to be funny. I'd never told a joke in my life, never did until I hit Hollywood, for that matter.

Bill's feet never allowed grass to grow under them, and that isn't because he keeps them propped up on a desk, either.

"Back to New York at seventeen. Selling beans, green beans, in a public market. Then, well—I fell in with a fast set. Wine and women. Nothing serious, just the first steps of a boy yearning to learn about life as it is lived in big cities. Personalities meant nothing; just people in general and the way they were living. The music was getting more and more distant. I was fired from my job selling beans because I couldn't stay up all night and work all day into the bargain.

"Office boy for J. W. Strauss was my next position. Twenty dollars a week for a year and a half and then fired from that position.

DURING this time I met a marvelous woman. She was twenty years my senior but she took an interest in a young boy clawing his way toward a knowledge of life's values. What little savoir faire I had when I arrived in Hollywood, I owe to this woman. She had musicals, concerts, parties at the opera. She invited me to them. Her home was filled with paintings, wonderful old china, beautiful silver. I had had them at home and paid them no attention. She showed me their value, their inspirational value. I began to realize how mad I had been to pawn the pin of my grandmother. Whatever sense of beauty had been born in me, she reawakened. And she was interested in the stage. She tried to awaken my interest. She did, only I was so pityingly timid, so very sensitive that I had no guts about going out and seeking a stage opening. She introduced me to a man who said that Sam Goldwyn was looking for new faces. Just how I won that contest will always be a mystery. Eleanor Boardman won the other half of it.

"When I arrived in Hollywood I had one suit and three dollars in my pocket. It was an English suit with big trousers, tight coat—something like the one I am now wearing. It was all right in New York, but in Hollywood—

"I had been heralded as a new face; I thought myself to be a new Corliss Palmer just arriving. Only, crossing the desert I caught cold. There was a boil on my nose; my skin started peeling.

"Imagine the consternation when I arrived at the Goldwyn offices. Everybody in New York said I looked like Charlie Ray. I had dreams of doing the same things he was doing. Of becoming a Charles Ray the second.

THE potentates had a meeting. They called me in and said I was terrible; my clothes a disgrace; I had no sex appeal. I was hurt, terribly hurt. I had hard work to keep from crying. Remember, I had always been abnormally sensitive. To cover my hurt feelings, to build up a self-defense, to keep from blubbering over, I answered, 'Well, sirs, I've been helped by the best men and women in New York City so I must appeal to both sexes.'

"It was my first wise-crack. It surprised nobody as it surprised me. I was startled. But I was even more startled when they took it seriously and gave me a heart-to-heart talk that I'll never forget. But that crack traveled all over the lot. That one sentence turned me from a nonentity who was to be returned to New York to a newcomer with an identity. They even sent me to Hollywood's best tailor and ordered fifteen hundred dollars worth of clothes for me.

"Then I sat down to figure. If that one wise-crack had gone all over the lot—perhaps I could make another which would go further. I jogged every brain cell in my head to think up things which were startling and funny. One had saved me from a return ticket to New York, perhaps several would get me a place in pictures. They sent me to the South Seas to make Lost and Found in the South Sea Islands.

"That was the turning point—that wise-crack and the trip which followed it—not only in my career but in my nature. I was alone down there. I didn't mix with the rest of the company. I was alone with the solitude, the beauty, the silent glory. I became acquainted with God and the perfections of His handiwork. I came to realize that all life is the same. Yellow, black or white; tree, animal or human. So if all life were the same—if it is the same force which makes a tree grow or an eyelid twinkle, well, I had the same spark within me as had other people. If they could do things, so could I do them. They might break my heart from now on, but they'd never know it. The more they hurt me—the more I'd hand it back to them. I took up the study of how to be a wise-cracker—how to make myself someone in pictures.

Bill Haines and Anita Page get their heads together for a good old-fashioned conference.

IT TOOK me years. One director said, 'You're lousy' when I was working in his picture. I answered, 'Someday you'll ask me to make a picture and I'll have the choice as to whether I shall do it.' Last year, I made that picture! No matter who told me how bad I was it didn't make any difference. No matter how much it hurt, I just answered with some crazy remark which they didn't know whether to take as a joke or take seriously. When Brown of Harvard came along

A Patriarch Passes

A keen student of motion picture art to the last, this photograph shows Theodore Roberts observing work on the Pathe set shortly before his death.

Theodore Roberts has passed on—but not before knowing victory on the stage, the silent screen, and finally in sound pictures.

By JANICE DAILEY

I ATTENDED the funeral of Theodore Roberts, a few months ago.

I had heard his voice Wednesday morning.

Theodore Roberts' last motion picture was his first talkie.

It was weird, yes—but beautiful, too. Beautiful to listen to one of the finest voices that the Hollywood microphones have yet discovered and to know that this grand old man of the movies had an opportunity at sixty-seven, to know he still stood at the top of his profession despite the many changes brought about by this innovation.

And he did know. Six weeks before his demise, he walked with the aid of his cane—his proverbial black cigar twitching and twirling in its proverbial fashion—into the projection room at the Pathe Studio and heard and saw himself in Noisy Neighbors. Saw himself father of his fiftieth stage daughter. Heard his voice ring with a note as vibrant as the voice of that seventeen-year-old boy who, fifty years before, had run away from his home in San Francisco to become a stage actor.

He was like a child about it! Those who sat in that projection room with him as he witnessed himself in the last motion picture he attended, knew his glee at the prospects for a career in the future.

"Bless my soul! I never knew I'd hear myself and see myself at the same time. Would you, could you, run it again for me?"

Of course, they ran it again. And again, for that matter. When he finally came out, he had made a decision, "Now, I'll have that operation and when it's over I'll be a new man. I'll be able to give all my time to help in developing these new pictures."

He had the operation five weeks later. Six weeks from that day when he saw his last picture, his body was carried from the palatial old home to the undertakers.

I have talked with many people about Theodore Roberts in the interest of this story. I knew him. Who in Hollywood didn't know him? Only a few days after he saw Noisy Neighbors, he gave a party for the younger generation on a yacht. The youth of the cinema world adored him, for he understood them. The older folk—what greater pleasure than to sit on that glassed balcony of the home where he spent so many months recuperating from his five-year-prolonged illness and talk over old times together? Even the animals—his kindness to them was famous. No tramp cur was turned away without a bone of encouragement; no bird lit in his aviary without bits of grain to reward him. His pet pelican, his pair of sea gulls, his flock of wire-haired terriers, his bear cub—stories could be written about them.

I visited his home on the Sunday after his burial to talk to the nephew who inherited the fortune.

There was something similar between the uncle in the great oil panel beside the mantel and the nephew sitting be-

John Gilbert

While Greta's Gone

ALTHOUGH Hollywood believes that Greta Garbo may wed Jack Gilbert sometime in the spring when she returns from her visit to Sweden, during her absence Jack is being invited to social functions with Dorothy Parker and often seen with the well-known New Yorker who has lately come to Hollywood to write for the films. John was often seen with Dorothy Parker when he made a business trip to New York a few months ago, and the film colony thought they scented a new romance.

The Tom Mix-up

MRS. TOM MIX writes to her friends among the stars that she is not even planning when she will return, and that she is having a splendid time in Nice. Tom, in the meantime, has engaged his wife's brother, Eugene Ford, to direct his pictures and it is said that his in-law thinks Tom a great scout and that he is one of his best pals and closest cronies. If Mrs. Mix decides she wants a divorce, she will just have to come home, for Tom has turned thumbs down on any of the foreign variety of separations.

All Scheduled

LITA GREY CHAPLIN at last has admitted her engagement to Roy D'Arcy, and the wedding of this pair will be an event of the late spring or summer. While the long delay in this announcement caused many to wonder if it would ever happen, intimate friends of both were certain of the outcome.

Lita Grey Chaplin

Important Wedding

ROSABELLE LAEMMLE, daughter of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, became the bride of Stanley Bergerman, department store executive, at a sumptuous wedding at the Laemmle estate, in Beverly Hills. The wedding ceremony was witnessed by but a few intimate friends and members of the family.

Constant George

GEORGE O'BRIEN is still paying much attention to Olive Borden. Calls her by telephone every evening when he doesn't appear in person, and altogether conducts himself as a devoted suitor should.

A Shift?

PAUL BERN, the director, is very attentive to Mary Duncan, Fox star, although it has been rumored in Hollywood that Miss Duncan was engaged to wed a Londoner.

Playful Partings

THERE is often a state of camaraderie between divorcing couples in Hollywood. This is the condition in the household of Doris Dean, now suing Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle for divorce. At a birthday luncheon Doris gave the other day for intimate girl friends, she received an endearing telegram from Roscoe with a two-dollar bill enclosed.

"I ought to have $10," commented Doris. "I am still worth $10."

Her Way Out

JEAN ARTHUR had to choose between a husband and a career, so she has taken the latter and is trying to lose her hubby via the annulment route. Very quietly, Miss Arthur and Julian Ancker went to Ventura last July and were wed. But Miss Arthur's contract with Paramount contains a non-marriage clause. So Jean has had to choose between or give up her contract, and she has decided to stay in the films.

Jean was among those honored with the title of a Baby Wampas Star for 1929.

Jean Arthur

Romantic Snag?

JUNE MARLOWE has been sent by Universal to make several pictures in Germany. On the face of it, the news is not unusually significant. But what about Mary Philbin? Mary, who has announced her engagement to Paul Kohner, was supposed to follow her fiance to Germany a number of weeks ago and there to be married and make several pictures under his supervision. And now Miss Marlowe is being sent to make the required pictures under Kohner's supervision. Perhaps the insistence of Mary's father that his daughter will never wed Paul may at least be making itself heard in official quarters.

The Keith Circuit

IAN KEITH, who married Ethel Clayton, the former Lasky star, a year or so ago, and toured with her in vaudeville, is back in Hollywood alone and will play in the next Laura La Plante picture.

Society in Cinemaland

The Thalians, members of Hollywood's younger set, gather for an outing at the Uplifters' Club. Among those in the group are (1) Mervyn Le Roy, (2) Alice Lake, (3) Arthur Lake, (4) Ann Christy, (5) Lincoln Steadman, (6) Sammy Cohen, (7) Buddy Rogers, (8) James Hall, (9) Polly Ann Young, (10) Loretta Young, (11) Mary Brian, (12) Myrna Kennedy, (13) Claire Windsor, (14) Violet La Plante, (15) Edna Murphy.

SMARTEST of affairs in Cinemaland was a dinner given at the Beverly-Wilshire by Mrs. Grace Glaser of New York for Mrs. Elizabeth Lloyd Smith, mother of Harold Lloyd. The table which formed a large E occupied the entire north end of the Crystal room and was covered with rose linen. A profusion of blue delphinium and pale yellow roses alternated with tall yellow and blue taper candles as decorations.

Covers were laid for seventy-five, among them Mr. and Mrs. Harold Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Illitch (Kathleen Clifford), Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Nye (Helen Lynch), Mrs. Ona Brown, Harvey Barnes, Roy Brooks and Sharon Lynn.

UP UNTIL the very morning of their wedding day, Dolores Costello and John Barrymore declared they didn't know when they were to be married. Yet the ceremony took place at the bride's home at 2:30 in the afternoon and was attended by many screen celebrities.

Among the more notable guests were Mr. and Mrs. Jack Warner, Joseph Schenck, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Warner, Michael Curtiz, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks (Mary Pickford), Mrs. Alan Crosland, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Mr. and Mrs. Hal Wallis (Louise Fazenda), Raymond Griffith, Mr. and Mrs. Ernst Lubitsch, George K. Arthur and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wolheim.

THE Mayfair dinner-dance at the Biltmore recently was, as always, a brilliant affair. Decorations were in keeping with the football season—colors of Notre Dame and U. S. C.—while the favors (little China elephants) smacked of the winning political party. Maurice Chevalier, France's Al Jolson, contributed to the pleasure of everyone with a trio of his most popular songs, and two small pickanninies from King Vidor's all-negro picture were showered with silver coins for their clogs, taps and spirituals.

Noted at B. P. Schulberg's table were Maurice Chevalier and his charming spouse, Bebe Daniels, Nancy Carroll, Jack Kirkland, Messrs. and Mesdames Adolph Zukor, Ernest Vadja, Richard Arlen (Jobyna Ralston) and John Monk Saunders (Fay Wray).

In Hal Roach's party, Harold and Mildred Lloyd . . . In Walter Morosco's, his wife Corinne Griffith, the Robert Leonards (Gertrude Olmstead) and Grant Withers, handsome young leading man, escorting blonde Claire Windsor . . . beautiful Billie Dove with her husband, Irvin Willat, sat at Ned Marin's table with the Jack Mulhalls, William Seiters (Laura La Plante), Winfield Sheehan, Mary Duncan, Dorothy Mackaill and Anita Stewart . . . in smaller groups were Lois Wilson, Mildred Harris, Edmund Burns, the Clive Brooks and Priscilla Dean.

FIRST NATIONAL'S presentation of their first talking picture, The Barker, was a gala occasion. The Carthay Circle Theatre is noted for its sparkling premieres, and The Barker was no exception. A novel effect was attained on the boulevard leading to the theatre by throwing rainbow lights on steam—the air seemed full of delicate-colored plumes, nodding and blowing in a summer breeze. Circus wagons and tents completed the carnival atmosphere.

George Fitzmaurice, director of the picture, was host at dinner to a number of celebrities, including Marion Davies, Colleen Moore, Betty Compson, Bebe Daniels, William Randolph Hearst, Charlie Chaplin, James Cruze, John McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barthelmess, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn, Harry d'Arrast and Harry Crocker. After the opening, the Fitzmaurices also entertained with a buffet supper, their original guests in attendance besides Milton Sills with his proud wife, Doris Kenyon (Mr. Sills was showered with congratulation for his marvelous performance), Dorothy Mackaill squired by Ben Lyon, Buster Collier, the Conrad Nagels and George Landys (Kathryn McGuire), Vilma Banky and Rod La Rocque.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., who gave such an excellent account of himself in the production, came with his mother, Mrs. Beth Fairbanks, Joan Crawford and Newell Van Derhoef. During the intermission, Doug was surrounded by a bevy of admiring fans begging for his autograph, so he mischievously asked one of them if she wouldn't care for Dr. Zopplekopf's signature since he flew over in the Zeppelin. Upon being assured that she'd "adore" it, he introduced her to Newell Van Derhoef, who declared afterwards that he was "all of a doo-dah" trying to decide how to spell the name and whether to add "Zeppelin 1 or 2."

OUR GANG entertained with a birthday party for small St. Louis IV Estes, year-old son of Dr. St. Louis Estes, nationally known as a raw food expert. Dixie Lou and Suzanne, St. Louis II and III, the doctor's other offspring, were also invited.

Our Gang proved competent hosts and appeared to enjoy the raw food banquet almost as much as their young guests. Although little Mary Ann Jackson asked wistfully for the "ice cream part of the party" and Farina was heard to remark that he liked icing on his cake.

NO ONE counted the candles on the cake when Mrs. Doris Dean Arbuckle gave a buffet supper-dance for Mabel Normand in honor of her birthday. It was a gay affair, happily attended by many cinemalites—Mrs. Winifred Hart, Phyllis Haver, Dorothy Dwan, Bert Lytell, Roland Drew, Walter Pidgeon (new nose and all), the Monte Blues, Fred Windemeres (Belle Bennett) and Kathlyn Williams.

AMONG the many charming parties for Dolores Del Rio on her return from Europe was a beautifully appointed tea sponsored by Mrs. Gunther Lessing. Billie Dove and Rita Carewe begged prettily for tales of Miss Del Rio's trip and the exotic star admitted that everything was "lofly" but was plainly more excited about her voice tests for Evangeline.

"Today I have hear Mary Pickford's test and it was grand!" she cried.

When I Am Forty

Few stars look so far ahead as Estelle Taylor who plans in her youth what she will do when the march of time brings her to the age of retirement.

By Estelle Taylor

LET those who will grow old gracefully. Let them smother themselves in lavenders and old laces. Let them live in memories and press pansies to remind them of bygone ardors. Not for me.

Ever since I have been old enough to appreciate that rouge on the lip is worth ten lipsticks in the vanity case, I have been laying plans to outwit those demoralizing forties. Not avoid them, mind you. One cannot live a full life and do that. But to outwit them. Catch them in a well-laid snare and convert them into useful, happy days.

Why should the age of forty mark the beginning of the toboggan slide for women? Or men? But it is of women, being a woman, that I give most thought. In the forties we should be able to enjoy to the fullest all that we have learned, by joy and sorrow, heartache and happiness, during the tremulous twenties and the thrilling thirties. We should be able to perfectly control our emotions. We should not be swept by storms of jealousy, fear, passion.

I am one who believes that a woman is as old as her cosmetics. I believe in the divine right of a woman to look her best at all times. I believe in going to a plastic surgeon for a face-lifting, if it is necessary, as I would go to a dentist to have him crown a tooth. A tooth gives away as we grow older, and so does a face. Why is it any worse to go to a plastic surgeon and have him take a tuck here and a pinch there in a sagging face than it is to have your dentist do his work on a tooth that nature has forgotten or we have neglected?

It is not vanity, particularly, that prompts me to embrace face-lifting. There is the undoubted fact, though, that it is stimulating to be admired. In the feeling that you look your best and are entitled to the pleasant reaction of those whom you contact. It's as heady as nectar, that inward knowledge that "Gosh, I'm looking my finest. I am worthy of the attention given me." It charges the ego, routs gloom, and is as good a tonic as that which comes in dark brown bottles and has a bad taste.

I'm in favor of rouges that are blended to your type, powders that are sifted to harmonize with your coloring, eyebrow plucking that is done only after an expert has studied the contour of your face, eyebrow pencils, lipsticks not too vivid nor too gay, astringents, pomades, toilette waters, perfumes that linger faintly, long after the atomizer has given them forth. Oh, I believe in all that is feminine. Even after the terrifically emotional days are over I believe in never forgetting that first, last and always you are a woman.

Estelle Taylor's flashing dark beauty is accompanied by a forceful, dynamic personality that will defy time.

THERE is only one thing I disfavor in external rejuvenation. That is hair-dying. When my hair begins to show signs of grey I shall applaud each new silver thread. There is nothing so distinguished, so fine-looking, in my estimation, as grey hair, well coiffured. It gives what the French call distinguee. A chic that cannot be achieved in any other way. In New York I noticed many stunning grey haired women in restaurants and theatres and in the smarter supper clubs.

We can talk of exterior things to outwit the flabby forties that are woman's bugaboo. We can talk of cosmetics and reducing, masseuses and exercises, but still there is that other thing that is equally important in fighting off the drabness of middle age. That inward thing.

Browning can say, and I adore it, "Grow old along with me; the best is yet to be; the last of life, for which the first is made." But there is something more than growing old.

There is that spiritual urge to learn and keep on learn-

Jack Dempsey and Estelle, his famous wife, come to grips in an effort to decide who will start the ball rolling.

ing; to work and keep on working; to be useful; to create.

I recall so distinctly my awakening to the fact that there were days in the future that needed my present attention. It was just after I made my first motion picture. Before that time I must have been, as I see it now, a rather superficial person, living entirely for today with a snap of the fingers for tomorrow and yesterday. It was my privilege to be directed by Mr. Charles Brabin, a man of wide knowledge, a philosopher, a student. A man who really knew things.

TO MY way of thinking, a woman gets more value from friendship with a man, than she does from the same association with a woman. It has been so in my life. It may be the age-old superiority complex that man is infinitely wiser than woman to which we bow. Whatever it is, it has proven itself to me. From friendships that have resulted from working together, as with Charles Brabin and Paul Bern, I have had my cultural vision expanded. From Jack Dempsey I have witnessed again the value of tenacity.

"What do you read?" Charles Brabin would say to me between scenes at the Fox Long Island studio, and at luncheons. "What plays do you see? How are they going to affect your thinking? Will they influence your life later on?"

It was his words that sent me to Carnegie Hall for lectures that I otherwise would have ignored. I selected the plays I was to attend with care, and several evenings

Together Again

On his little jaunt of some 25,000 miles through Europe, Nick Stuart heard everything from cockney accents to the rumble of Mt. Vesuvius, saw relics and royalty—but nothing so good as Sue Carol.

By GRACE SIMPSON

HE DINED with the Prince of Wales! He shook hands with President Cosgrave of Ireland! He had his picture taken with Marshal Foch! He visited Mussolini at his private villa! He had an audience with the Pope! He met King Alfonso and was given a medal of honor! He chatted with Premier de Riviera, Dictator of Spain! He became friends with the son of the Sultan of Morocco!

And who is this lucky young man, this gay Lothario of the movies, who is privileged to do all these things? Why, our old friend, Nick Stuart, of course, and none other!

It all came about when Nick was assigned the lead in the special Fox picture, Chasing Through Europe. He had already made The News Parade, you know—a picture glorifying the news-reel cameraman—and Chasing Through Europe was to be a sort of sequel to it. With Nick went David Butler (the director), a couple of cameramen and the press-agents. Sue Carol, Nick's young lady friend, wanted to go awfully bad, but owing to the fact that she was in the middle of a picture, it couldn't be done—not yet.

So Nick sailed on the Mauretania. The captain turned the boat over to the film folks and they took reels of everything in sight.

"I got acquainted with a crowd of Dartmouth College boys," said Nick, "and one night we talked about the Hollywood stars. The boys said that Dartmouth had chosen Billie Dove as their ideal first, then Joan Crawford came into favor, but when Sue Carol appeared on the screen, one and all voted for her. 'What can you tell us about Sue?' asked one. 'And is she as pretty as she looks?' asked another.

"Well, I answered their questions," continued Nick, "then pulled out a triple silver locket containing a picture of my mother in the center and one of Sue on each side of her. 'Boys,' I said, showing it to them, 'that is what I know and think of your favorite, Sue Carol!' And you should have heard them overwhelm me with questions after they had recovered from the shock!

Nick Stuart and Sue Carol stage a joyful reunion on the steps of the train that brought Nick back.

WE ARRIVED in London," he went on, "and as we had nothing to do that day, I decided to fly over to Paris. It was my first airplane ride and I admit I enjoyed it—took only three and a half hours to make the flight. Spent the day sightseeing in Paris, then flew back and rejoined the others. We stayed in London three weeks—visited Victoria Tower; were received at Parliament; took pictures of Westminster Abbey, and also some fine shots of the King's Palace. Every morning at ten o'clock, we'd be out there to see the change of Guards. It's a very impressing sight. I would be in front of the Guards, shooting as they advanced toward me, while the other cameramen would be shooting me. The Guards paraded through the Park, and I took a few shots, then ran ahead and took some more—they were always approaching me and walking right into the camera.

"Finally, I got lonesome for Sue, so sent a cablegram asking her to come over. She cabled back that she hadn't completed The Air Circus for Fox, or It Can't Be Done for Universal, but if I really wanted her, to have Dave Butler send word to Fox officials that he could use her at once and to send her over and then they'd probably let her go and she'd try to fix it up somehow with Universal. Dave, like the good scout that he is, fell in with our plans and sent for Sue."

Immediately, Fox rushed The Air Circus by working night and day. Universal also speeded up and soon Sue had almost finished her work. One day Universal called her and said, "If you promise to return and complete your scenes when we cable you, you can go to Europe."

"That was just after four," said Sue, "I rushed home, threw my things together, jumped into the car and made the five o'clock train. Reached New York and made a wild dash for the boat—got there just ten minutes before it sailed. In fact, they had to lower the gang-plank again for me!" A close connection, to be sure, but Sue was happy, because at last she was on her way to join Nick.

FRANCE was the next country visited," went on Nick, "and there I had the pleasure of dining with the Prince of Wales. He was in France with the British Legion, to put a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Wales is a regular fellow—very witty and clever, but inclined to be a bit shy. He treats everyone with utmost courtesy. I had a chance to talk with him and he seemed particularly interested in the United States and in motion pictures. He said he wanted to make another visit to America in the near future, as he will never forget his last reception here. By the way, this dinner was given in Lille, just outside Paris.

"Back in Paris, we took shots of Notre Dame, then worked on the Eiffel Tower. Every three years this tower has to be painted and fortunately, the work was being done just when we arrived. With my camera on my back, I started climbing to the top, shooting the men at work all the way up. I guess I gave them quite a thrill, as it was a new performance for them to witness—a news-reel man doing his stuff! I think they were afraid I might somehow slip off the foot-holds while cranking my camera, but happily for me, I didn't.

IN PARIS I met President Cosgrave of Ireland, who shook hands most cordially and gave me his autograph. I took some dandy shots of him and his entire staff. They were in Paris for the signing of the Kellogg Peace Treaty.

"A couple of days before we left there, Dave Butler called me aside and said: 'Say, Nick, we can't go away from this burg without a single shot of those Follies Bergere girls! They say it can't be done but we've got to show 'em.' Well, in this case, the impossible turned out to be quite possible," said Nick. "Not only did we shoot the girls, but even got the stage manager and director in, too! And they let us up on the roof of the building and my camera recorded the show in all its glory.

"I must tell you, too, of an amusing incident that happened in Paris" said Nick, suddenly. "We went to a fire station and they took out a fire truck for us to shoot scenes of. It had a large ladder—about the largest I've ever seen. The driver hopped on and we started full-speed through the center of Paris. I was perched on the extreme end of the ladder, working my camera, while the other cameramen (the real ones) were behind in another truck. The firemen staged a fire for us and everything went fine 'till we were in the middle of a scene where the ladder was being lifted into mid-air, when a real alarm sounded! The men jumped into action and started for the real fire, leaving me suspended way up in the air. I remained there for about twenty minutes, when they finally remembered me and took me down. The next day we

REALIZING that sound pictures are the most important development in the history of the films, and in keeping with SCREEN SECRETS' policy of giving its readers inside information on all phases of the industry, this department has been inaugurated to bring each month news of the latest achievement in the talkie field.

To many persons the method of recording and reproducing sound with motion pictures is a closed mystery, so that a few words of general explanation may be helpful.

Recording the Sound

THE talking film simply transforms sound to light and back to sound again. Vitaphone's disc method is from sound to mechanism to sound. It's as easy as that.

The process of making Vitaphone records is similar to that of making phonograph discs. A wax plate is made, from which a copper master plate is struck. Records are made from that. An emerald point needle is used. Phonograph companies use the same.

There are two basic methods of sound reproduction. One by phonograph disc; the other by means of shading on film. In the latter some companies use perpendicular wavering lines; others horizontal wavering lines; still others straight horizontal lines. On the density of the lines depends the tonal gradations. They range from light gray to black. The more light that is filtered through the speaking portion of the film, the louder the sound. A black line makes complete silence.

Still Other Methods

THE R. C. A. Photophone recording used by Pathe and F. B. O. is called the "hill and dale" method. As in the other talking films the sound is on the margin of the visual film. This is on the left margin. A series of emulsion points, like the skyline of a pine forest, face inward. The farther in the points project, the louder the tone.

Photophone uses two cameras. One records the action; the other, lenseless, records the sound. The visual and the sound films are then united on one film. In order to insure perfect synchronization of action and sound, the prop boy, at the end of a scene, slaps together two flat sticks, dubbed chopsticks, and a long point is recorded on the sound film by the sharp noise. The visual film records the figure of the boy. Thus they are cued. This is of value in cutting.

New Lights and Make-up

TALKIES demand the use of incandescent lights for two reasons. The first is that the old-fashioned sun arcs sputter and are noisy. The incandescents function without sound. The second is that the sun arcs create a haze and smoke which cannot be done away with on the tightly closed soundproof stages.

Incandescent lights and, therefore, talkies, demand a new make-up. It is called "panchromatic." With it is used panchromatic film. Brown lipstick is used instead of carmine. No greasepaint. Instead a light coating of tan powder. And for the eyes brown eye-lid lining is used.

Fanny Brice opens her heart and face to the microphone; to the right, the "mixer," and beyond him, cameramen encased in a booth.

Outwitting Noise

AT THE Pathe Studios a huge warning is painted on the roof of their sound stage. They are directly under the air route of the Maddux Air Line where passenger planes pass regularly. The sign reads "Sound Stage. Aviators Please Detour." Vibration of airplane motors, even at a height of thousands of feet, is enough to cause static and to make recording impossible. Their sound stage is also equipped with red lights at outside corners, and signs reading: "All vehicles stop when red light is on." The red light flashes when sound shots are being made.

In making exteriors at Fox Hills, difficulty was met in the thundering interurban cars that passed the studio lot. Perfect recording was achieved at night and in the early hours of the morning when the cars ran with less frequency.

The Fox Studio has a sign prohibiting automobiles parking outside their sound stages. Vibration in starting cars would ruin any scene. Vibration in talkies is equivalent to radio static.

Inside Troubles

IN EARLY talking films, extras and principals were required to wear rubber heels to eliminate the noise of walking. Sets are now equipped with one or two rugs to deaden extraneous sound. If necessary, more rugs are added. Once, in a Vitaphone picture, a horse grew fractious when his rider dismounted from the wrong side, and stamped about the set. So sensitive was the recording needle that it made a deep gouge on the record. The scene had to be remade.

Revising Webster

EXPERTS say that knowing how to use the voice is of greater value than an exquisite tone. Also the fatal "s" and "f" of the talkies ceases to be a bugaboo if the actor enunciates well. Nevertheless clever dialogue writers have been known to so skillfully write lines that tricky combinations of those consonants were avoided. For instance, in many cases, a heroine can as well be named "Mary" or "Ann" as "Phyllis" or "Cecelia." And words like "sassafras" and "vicissitudes" can be avoided without damage to the plot. Poetic license must be taken, on occasion, as recently when "ladyship" was spoken in a talkie. It was discovered that the word recorded with something of a sibilant hiss, and the actor was forced to snub Webster and pronounce it "ladys-hip," slurring the second syllable ever so slightly.

Through Special Glass

WARNER BROTHERS have twenty camera booths which will hold from one to three cameras and operators. Each booth has a glass window, about a yard square, made of the finest procurable Belgium lense glass, imported from Germany. It is the same as used in cameras, absolutely flawless, but it has not been focused. One of these sound-proof camera booths is narrow enough to be moved through doors, if occasion demands.

Calling Them Names

THE talking motion picture has numerous nicknames: speakie, squeakie, talkie, sound picture, synchronized film, squawkie, chin-ema, talker. Experts predict that within two years the talking film will be called "movie," as the silent film is today, because by that time there will be no soundless pictures made.

Speed

VITAPHONE has established a record of making seven short one-reel subjects a week. Feature talking pictures take as long to make as silent drama, with not so many shots of each scene because the actors rehearse until dialogue and action is perfect before the initial scene is shot. Pathe made a record when they shot The Missing Man in eighteen days.

New Laurels

VAUDEVILLE headliners are usually used in the short reels. It has been discovered that theirs must be an especially clever act to win much applause, because they are unknown to the average picture patron; whereas a screen favorite usually brings down the house in an audible reel feature. One vaudeville team owes its success to Vitaphone. It was getting but two hundred dollars a week, playing jerk-water towns. It made a knockout picture. And because of its success they went on Broadway at a thousand a week as headliners and got an Australian booking.

Synthetic Noises

TALKIE noises are not all they seem. A telephone ring does not register naturally. Therefore a buzzer is used. For the sound of a railroad train nothing is so effective as a steel saw cutting a pipe. Slapping flat sticks briskly together is enough to make a Chicago gangster weep for his trusty machine gun. For the crack of a bullet, first from half to two-thirds of the powder must be removed from the shell, or the report would sound like a cannon. Pathe experimented with dock sounds for Sal of Singapore and finally reproduced the noise of a tug boat by using a toy steam engine close to the microphone.

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer difficulty was found in recording the click of the tap dancers in Broadway Melody. Their united rhythm sounded like an artillery barrage. Finally adhesive tape was applied to some of the soles. Others remained untaped and carried the dance tempo. Difficulty was also discovered in finding the right kind of

HARRY CARR

Harry Carr

Harry Carr has a long record of intimate association with the very heart and core of the movies, dating back to the days when he was right-hand man to D. W. Griffith at the old Mamaroneck Studio in New York. Since then he has been personal production advisor to such outstanding men in the industry as Mack Sennett, the comedy king; Cecil B. De Mille, producer and director; Eric Von Stroheim, producer, director and actor; Joseph Schenck, head of United Artists; and Jesse Lasky, production head of Paramount. His column of comment appears exclusively in SCREEN SECRETS among the movie magazines.

Will Rogers

THERE is some prospect that Will Rogers will come back to Hollywood after the run of his musical play in New York and make a talkie for Paramount.

Will has tried the movies many times; and has always been a very faint squeak in the hall of fame. The trouble was that he could never get a story. In the nature of things he never could be a screen lover or a screen villain; he just didn't come in custom sizes—emotionally. That same fact ruined both Bill Hart and Sessue Hayakawa—two capital actors who just didn't fit in anywhere.

Snubbing A Genius

ROGERS is absolutely broken-hearted over the cruel snub he got from the Bohemian Club in San Francisco. At the last yearly jinx, they asked him to make a speech of five minutes; and he talked for over an hour. This made the club so sore that they black balled him for membership. This hurt as the Bohemian Club is a notable organization made of celebrities and distinguished men of affairs from all over the country. The club has a great redwood grove near San Francisco and playwrights considered themselves honored if allowed to write the annual play for nothing. I have thought for some time that Rogers was riding for a fall in the matter of spreading his fame around too thickly. On the occasion of a recent convention in Los Angeles, he was asked his price for a speech and he said "Five thousand dollars for five minutes." According to this, he gave away $65,000 of eloquence to the Bohemian Club and still they didn't like it.

Al's Bride

RUBY KEELER, the bride of Al Jolson, couldn't stand the temptations of Hollywood. She gave up her New York stage career to come to California with her husband; but she seems, at this writing, to be on the verge of signing with Fox. Al is recuperating in Palm Springs on the desert after having won fame in a spectacular fist fight in the Ambassador Hotel in which he knocked cold a smart cracker who made remarks about his race.

Another Ramona!

DOLORES DEL RIO, having denied that she had trouble with Edwin Carewe, her director and also denying that she was going to marry the said gentleman, is about to embark in Longfellow's Evangeline. She hopes to find in it another Ramona. That has been the greatest success of her career. Incidentally made some $50,000 for the author of the theme song that went with it.

Nicking the Wise Ones

THE age of miracles has not passed. I know this is so because Agnes Ayres and Claire Windsor have both complained to the district attorney of Los Angeles that they have been swindled by bunco men in recent real estate deals. I take my hat off to the slicker who could swindle Agnes who built up a fortune in Hollywood from an original investment of $500. Agnes, Louise Fazenda, Betty Compson, Phyllis Haver and Mary Pickford are considered to be among the shrewdest real estate investors in California.

Silent Movies Died

I FIND that the inside talent is very skeptical about the future of the talkies. I also am skeptical. To me they do not represent going on to a new thing; but a reversion to a very old thing. To me they signalize the fact that the silent drama died on the hands of the producers. They just were not equal to the task of telling stories without words, an art of subtlety and suggestion.

Too Much Adoration

THE producers are doing something absolutely fatal in trying to crowd the movie stars off the map in favor of stars imported from the stage. It would be much easier to build up new film stars than to try to popularize stage stars with the movie public. Box office appeal had little or nothing to do with stories. It was a matter of adoration. Girls like Mary Pickford were built up into near-goddesses. When you pour in stage stars all over the place, there are too many to adore.

COMMENTS

Willard Cleans Up

LAST or not, talkies mean a fortune to many people. Willard Mack author of "Tiger Rose" and about a million other wild melodramas is cleaning up with both feet and hands in the money bags of Hollywood—writing dialogue. Eugene Walters, author of "The Easiest Way" has also been rescued from oblivion. To tell the painful truth, some of his dialogue seems painfully tame. I am not sure but that the subtitle writers have taught us to expect something far cleverer than any modern playwright can write.

Lillian Comes Home

LILLIAN GISH is coming home from Germany to start in on what amounts to a new screen career. Her picture under the direction of Max Reinhardt, the great German stage director, will be the most critical of her career.

I have had several letters from her from the old Sicilian castle where she has been living this summer. She says she knows that this next picture will either be her greatest or her worst.

Her Future

THERE is no secret over the fact that United Artists Corporation is much concerned over her future. They feel that she is the greatest actress now on the screen—perhaps the best actress who has ever been on the screen; but her last four pictures have very much hurt her standing as a box office attraction.

The Stars Answered

SOME of the producers are so fussed about what the screen public wants to see that they have turned to star gazing and astrology to find the answer. They got the answer—if it means anything. They were informed that the world is about to enter into an astral sign that will tend toward mushy love stories and sloppy sentiment; so we know what we have to expect. It looks to me as though all we could do is to suffer and be strong.

Von Reforms

MY OLD friend Eric Von Stroheim seems at last to have seen the error of his ways. The way he has lashed into this Gloria Swanson picture would put a Wall Street efficiency expert to burning shame. He is reported as being almost up to schedule and agreeing with Gloria as though they were two cooing turtle doves. It is not at all improbable that this next picture of theirs will bring them both back to the map.

When Gloria Fell

IN THE whole history of Hollywood, there has never been a fall so dizzy and breathless as that of Gloria Swanson. I never have been able to quite figure it out; neither has Gloria. The only way I can account for it is that she pressed the producers too hard in the matter of finances; and they pulled the props out from under her.

Where Did It Go?

IF ALL the stars had to cash in suddenly, I imagine that Gloria would have very little money to show for the prodigal and enormous fortunes she earned when she DARING comments, discerning, frank, wise, on Hollywood's great, on heartaches, and hopes gone glimmering. They are all mingled in Alice White's great human document, her diary. One day she is in the heights of ecstacy, the next plunged to the depths of despair when her career seems smashed, her contract gone.

Dancing, laughing, partying. No wonder Hollywood calls her fondly, its Play Girl. But only her diary knows her sorrows—the griefs that she has grinned and borne.

Last month, she told about her first success in pictures, the thrill of getting her first contract, the excitement of meeting the movie stars she had admired in the flesh.

Now love comes to her for the first time. She goes through disappointments to new successes in her work. There are tears and laughter in every line. Go on now to her new experiences.

Jan. 2. Slept most of the day. Gee, I'm kind of tired lately. Guess I'll have to do more intensive sleeping and less jumping around. Went to see Dorothy Mackaye in The Son Daughter. I think she's a very clever actress. Why doesn't T. call me?

Jan. 3. Took a test at M-G-M in a blonde wig. Saw T. for awhile and was happy again. Met Mr. C. who is very attractive and interesting.

Jan. 4. Fooled around at the hairdresser's today. Had my hair dyed light blonde. Looks strange but as it photographs well I guess I'll have to like it. Went to bed early.

Jan. 5. Bought a new hat and dress and necklace today. Gee, they're cute. Went to the Grove at night with a gang of kids again. Saw Mr. C. and became very self-conscious, as every time I see him I have to blush. I don't know why, but I do.

Jan. 12. Went to a party at Eddie Goulding's. Everyone was there. Many stars from M-G-M. Had a marvelous time. Had my fortune told. If all she told me comes true, I certainly have an interesting future. Met Jack Gilbert and he danced with me. I was so thrilled I think I must have stumbled fifty times. Jack and I went on the porch to look at the gorgeous ocean. We discussed many plays and books and things and he told me he was amazed to find out I was quite intelligent. He is a terribly interesting person. I'd like to talk to him many times again.

Jan. 15. Went over to United Artists to watch Mickey Neilan direct Connie Talmadge. Norma, Connie, Mickey and I went over to lunch at Mickey's house. They are really very lovely girls and were very kind and encouraging to me about my career.

Jan. 16. Tea at the Goulding's. Had a very literary afternoon. Also discussed reincarnation and when I told them I had been told I was a boy in past generations, they all laughed at me. Who can tell?

Jan. 17. Saw part of my picture today. Liked it very much. Met Dorothy Mackaill.

Jan. 18. Payment on my car. Ye gods!

Jan. 22. Lunch at Montmartre with Ann Rork. Went to a country club dance with Nick Stuart. Won my first dancing cup. He dances nicely. We did a mean tango. And I was very thrilled because everyone applauded us. Guess I'm a pretty good dancer as this is the first time I have danced with him and to win a cup is pretty swell.

Jan. 23. Stayed home in bed with another cold. I sure catch cold out in this sunny California. Guess I'll have to start wearing red flannels or something. I'll have to use the loving cup I won last night for cough medicine.

Jan. 24. Collegian Night at Montmartre. My first date with Arthur Lake. He's a nice kid.

Jan. 27. Went to see The American Tragedy. Gee, I'm glad I went. Something sort of impelled me to go. Leslie Fenton was in it. He was marvelous. I sure want to meet him.

Jan. 28. Went to the opening of Old Ironsides. My first time at a big opening. They announced my name over the radio. Gosh, I was thrilled! Lights and crowds and everything.

Feb. 1. Went visiting at the Ambassador and while there someone stole my tire and wheel. But it's insured, so who cares?

Feb. 7. Went to United Artists studio again. Heard some nice things about little me. Saw Barrymore again and he spoke to me very sweetly. Started to tell him that he was my favorite star but became tongue-tied as usual. Went to preview of my first picture. Was very thrilled, but disappointed because they changed my characterization from a Spanish dancer to a New York chorus girl. And they put in a lot of smart, wisecrack titles which I had never said. Imagine my embarrassment! Cried all the way home.

Feb. 8. Saw another preview. Everyone liked it very much. Colleen Moore congratulated me. Later. Saw H. He was very attentive. He's a darling wild animal but at least he is honest with himself.

Feb. 11. Montmartre Wednesday night again. Saw Leslie Fenton and I think he's adorable. Flirted with him. Gee, I want to meet him.

Feb. 14. Went to the Wampas Ball. Was very bored. Too much of a crowd. Met Mack Sennett.

Feb. 16. Here's the collapse of the bubble. Found out First National were not going to renew my contract. It is very strange and I can't understand it. Just another movie puzzle. Oh, well! I still am ambitious. I've made up my mind to succeed, regardless.

Feb. 20. Haven't any contract now. Feel rather downhearted.

Feb. 21. Funny the slams life takes at you. Darned if it will knock me out, though. Something will turn up. Something has got to turn up.

Feb. 22. Took a test at United Artists for a part in The Dove. Feel rather encouraged.

Feb. 25. Found out I am to do part in The Dove with Norma and Gilbert. I am very happy.

March 6. Party at Jimmie Hall's. Rather bored. Met a lot of cute girls.

March 8. Met Helen Klumph. She is a very charming and interesting girl. Went to a preview at night. Heard of a very good part today but I guess it's just another of those movie bubbles. Let's hope not, though. I won't give up. I can't.

March 10. Met a friend of mine who told me of marvelous reviews in New York on my first picture. This cheered me up considerably.

March 12. Started to have clothes made for The Dove.

March 14. Started to work on The Dove. I'm playing a little dumb-bell. Lots of fun.

March 16. Heard they are very pleased with my work in the picture.

March 18. Went to the opening of White Gold.

Jack Mulhall inspects his armful (Alice White); at right, Alice in her famous role of Show Girl, setting a high mark for cuter cuties.

Alice White laying everything on the table, which is certainly fair enough. When she assumes that come-hither look, ships break their moorings.

Later to a very grand party of Jetta Goudal's at the Ambassador. She's a very stunning female.

March 20. Went for a ride with Doug, Jr.

March 21. T. called. Goodie!

March 23. Interview for a part with Mrs. Reid. Went over to her house that night. They all talked to me for a while and then finally told me I was to play ingenue lead in The Satin Woman. This made me very happy because I raised my salary and it made me feel that after all I was going on in pictures, even if I didn't have a contract. Understand it's a very grand part.

March 24. Went to preview of Camille. Gilbert Roland was perfectly marvelous, and I wept all over the place over Miss Talmadge.

March 25. Finished my part in The Dove. Got good

A Preview of HALLELUJAH

The big revival scene where sinners get salvation.

To the left, Nina May McKenny lures Daniel Haynes. Above, a pickaninny in the cotton.

MAMMY! Dixie's come to Hollywood and most of Harlem to boot. King Vidor, the director, always a pioneer, broke a racial barrier on the screen when he decided to make Hallelujah, the first picture with an all-colored cast.

Vidor went to New York, where he recruited Nina May McKenny, Daniel Haynes, and other colored stage stars for the leading roles.

Then he proceeded to Memphis, Tennessee, where he filmed most of the scenes against the background of the real south, using negroes of the district for the other roles. The principals and some of the extras he imported to Hollywood for additional scenes.

One of the features of the picture which has full sound effects is the singing of the old negro spirituals by a large chorus.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

A Preview of THE DESERT SONG

The Desert Chieftain comes home.

John Boles woos Louise Fazenda. To the right, Myrna Loy tries to vamp John Miljan.

ALL the lavish picturesqueness of the Arabian setting, all the romantic costuming to say nothing of the gorgeous melodies which made The Desert Song one of the most popular musical comedies in recent years, will be reproduced on the screen with complete musical score when it is released as a Vitaphone production.

The two leading feminine roles are played by Louise while John Miljan, recruited from the stage, and John Boles, who has played on both stage and screen, have the leading male roles.—Warner Bros.

A murderer goes On Trial

HAVEN'T you always cherished a little suppressed desire to sit in on one of those murder trials which make such juicy reading in the tabloids? Well, here's your chance with no advance in prices.

On Trial, a revival of the famous stage thriller of ten years ago, begins to show what talking pictures can do.

Bert Lytell, who, by the way, seems to be staging a comeback through the talkies, has gone and done murder. Then he goes to court and on the first day of the trial breaks right down and tells that he did it. So there isn't much mystery about that.

But there the story begins. Jason Robards, as the redoubtable defense attorney, sets out to prove that the murder was justified. Whereupon, in addition to the privilege of attending the murder trial you are also let in on the dramatic succession of events which lead to it.

There is an able supporting cast composed of Lois Wilson, Pauline Frederick, Johnny Arthur and Vondell Darr.—Warner Brothers.

William Haines makes love to Josephine Dunn.

CAMERA!

Bill Haines is A Man's Man, whose life ambition is to become an Elk.

IT WILL probably be a long time before you'll see so many stars working as extras again as you will in A Man's Man. They did it to furnish the real Hollywood atmosphere.

But let's get to the story. William Haines is just another boy trying to get along in Hollywood, a boy with ambitions, two of them in fact.

First of all he wants to get this personality he's heard so much about. That one is easy. He takes a correspondence course. The second one, and the one that really counts, is that he wants to be an Elk.

Then he meets the girl, who is Josephine Dunn. Someone told her she looked like Greta Garbo. She put another mortgage on the old homestead and came to Hollywood. These two people who have a good start by taking themselves seriously are soon taking each other seriously. And they end by getting married.

But don't go—it isn't over yet, folks. Enter the menace in the person of Sam Hardy who is an assistant director. He'll make the girl a star and her husband an Elk if—Then things really begin to happen in a big way. The Hollywood boy with the correspondence school personality takes things into his own hands and proves that he doesn't need the assistance of any assistant director to become an Elk.—M-G-M.

their cinema fare, together with newsy notes about the stars, By Agnes O'Malley.

Alberta Vaughn warns Eddie Quillan.

BOILING BLOOD

There's nothing so aggravating to a Southern gentleman, suh, as* Noisy Neighbors.

THE title of this picture suggests Sunday in the tenement district; but upon my word, it is about a feud between two old Southern families who have sworn to kill each other until not a drop of either's blood remains on earth.

Just about the time the Carstairs tribe are satisfied that the Vanrevel estate next door has buried its last owner, a noisy family of vaudeville performers moves in to the Colonial mansion. They are the Seven Monarchs, family of magicians, acrobats and what you want.

Now, just imagine, suh, old Colonel Carstairs' embarrassment when he finds out that they are an offshoot of the hated Vanrevel family. The Colonel tries to laugh it off, but his vicious nephew is all for a wholesale slaughter of the Seven Monarchs.

Then there is the devil to pay when it is discovered that young Miss Carstairs and young Eddie Vanrevel are looking at the moon together. There is plenty of comedy in the picture, provided by the antics of the Quillan family, Eddie and his folks.

In this picture the voice of Theodore Roberts, veteran character man, is heard ironically enough, after his death for the first time. He plays the part of Colonel Carstairs, the Southern gentleman. Alberta Vaughn gives a graceful performance as his daughter. There are some excellent dialogue sequences.—Pathe.

Richard Dix returns to his native tepee.

WHOOPS!

Richard Dix plays a* Redskin *in color.

RICHARD DIX is playing Indian again. Every so often he feels the urge to go native, and no one stands in his way.

This time when you see him as a Redskin, he'll be a Redskin. In other words, the whole film will be in color and you can actually see Richard blush when the other boys point fingers at him for being an Indian.

Richard grows up on the reservation but some well-meaning rich folks (names supplied on request) decide to send Richard to college. He turns out to be a great guy at going over hurdles and becomes an athletic idol, but doesn't seem to be able to go over the social hurdle on account of being a Redskin, instead of a 100 per cent American. He tries everything but bleaching without success.

Finally he goes back to the reservation where his college clothes make him as unpopular as his red skin did in the East. There are some natural color scenes taken in Arizona which are prettier than any travelogue picture you ever saw.—Paramount.

Neil Hamilton teaches Bebe Daniels to be a reporter

WUXTRY!

Reporters chase news—crooks chase reporters —Bebe chases crooks—and, oh,* What a Night!

THIS is probably your last chance to see Bebe Daniels cutting capers. Bebe's contract with Paramount is coming to a close. And from now on, so she says, she is going to be very, very serious.

After you see this one you'll be sorry. Bebe was never more entertaining.

Bebe plays the part of one of those ten million girls in the United States who think that a newspaper reporter's life must be awfully interesting. But Bebe gets a break. Her father is a rich advertiser. So she walks into the job.

The editor turns her over to Neil Hamilton, the star reporter to learn the business. Bebe goes gum shoeing around gumming all his scoops. And the reporter, with remarkable self-control, refrains from choking her.

At last the story gets to the point where Bebe can't think of any more fool things to do, as stories will sometimes, so she turns around, tracks a flock of crooks to their lair, and saves the day for the dear old paper.

Nancy Carroll (right) plots with the girl friend.

SLIGHTLY USED

There's something irresistible about even a* Shop Worn Angel.

IS NANCY CARROLL going to be a chorus girl all her life?

She used to be one in New York before she came west to do right by the movies. And she's spent most of her time since she hit Hollywood behind synthetic footlights. First there was Manhattan Cocktail. Now there's The Shop Worn Angel. And she's keeping everybody happy.

Gary Cooper does well by the role of the country boy who doesn't know what it's all about and hasn't much desire to learn—until he meets Nancy Carroll.

He gets a glimpse of her dancing in a New York chorus, as he passes through on his way to France.

He goes on into the mud and madness of war-torn France carrying with him as a vision the innocent baby face of which he has had such a brief glimpse while passing through the City of Sin.

Nor does he know until later that his angel has an angel of her own, that in fact, she is the favorite girl-friend of a wealthy New York producer. Imagine his disillusionment when he finds that his angel has slightly singed wings.

Paul Lucas introduces a new note into the story by his performance of the little angel's sugar daddy. He is suave and sophisticated and you can't help having a little sympathy for him even though he is the Menace.—Paramount.

Conrad Veidt touches the golden locks of Mary Philbin.

THE NOT-SO-MERRY HA, HA

The Man Who Laughs does not always have a heart full of mirth.

THIS is not the jolly, carefree bit of amusement that you might be lead to expect from its title. Conrad Veidt is The Man Who Laughs and the only reason he laughs is because he can't help it.

We'll let you in on the secret. It's because his face was frozen that way. But Mary Philbin loves him in spite of it all.

It is one of those very picturesque costume pictures with the setting laid in medieval Europe. It is made from a very famous play by that man Victor Hugo whom you used to read back in the days when you were in school.

Conrad, it seems, as a very little boy suffered a stroke which so twisted his face that it seemed as though he were always laughing. People refused to take him seriously, and as time went on, he got credit for having a great sense of humor and eventually became a very famous clown.

He didn't mind much as the salary was good, until love came to him. Love for Mary Philbin who looks very sweet and Philbinish in her long curls. (But she does make you curious to know how she'd look with it bobbed.)

Then he wishes he could look solemn once in a while. However, Mary loves him in spite of his face. Or perhaps because of it. You don't see one like it every day.

There are some scenes of pure horror that will send shivers down your spine and lots of heart-rending drama. —Universal.

Colleen Moore vamps Antonio Moreno.

HEY! HEY!

Colleen Moore finds thrills in Synthetic Sin.

COLLEEN MOORE is a flip flapper again, and that's a cause for cheers. In Synthetic Sin she stops wearing funny make-ups and returns to the popular roles of her earlier days.

Believe it or not there are still some girls left in this broad land who don't know what sin is really like. Colleen is one of them and she is quite satisfied with this condition, too, until the time comes when she heeds the call of the footlights and has a desire to play women of the world. But how can she play scarlet women, she wants to know, when she has never even had a pink experience?

So she sets out to see life in a big way, taking the trail to New York where women sin and suffer.

She lands where lights are brightest and seeks to become one of the moths who are singed at life's flame, but finds a lamentable lack of guide posts pointing to the Primrose Path.

Suddenly the sinful atmosphere with which Colleen has surrounded herself closes in on her and complications follow thick and fast.—First National.

A Russian Rhapsody

Baclanova's dramatic life in seething Russia reaches a fitting climax of romance and success in Hollywood.

By HELEN STARR HENIFIN

BLUE dynamos.

Baclanova's eyes.

They used to tell the blue-orbed girlies to go home—that they did not register on the screen. Certain directors without imagination could not compass azure of sky or sea that might spring into action under restless winds or turbulent storm.

They know better now. Many blue eyes have stayed. Baclanova's blue eyes will remain in your memory for a long time. They are cobalt lights of the soul peculiar to the blondes among Russians—starry, lighted by keen intellect, swayed by emotion.

"I am glad I came to Hollywood just when I did," confides Paramount's newest foreign star discovery. "For two reasons." She speaks with animated interest. Her coloring may be the pink and white of the Scandinavian miss but she has none of the lazy sluggishness of these north of Europe neighbors of hers. Nor does she use her turquoise-blue eyes to register bland innocence as so many English and American girls do. She is far too clever and sophisticated for that.

"Hollywood demands feeling on the screen these days. That is why I am glad I am playing here now. Characterization has dropped to second place and mere beauty is still less essential. The directors of the Moscow Art Theater where I was leading woman for so many years trained us along emotional lines—to interpret feeling. That is why I fit the demands of present day Hollywood better than I should have done if I had come here five years before."

Baclanova does not say so much about her other reason for being glad she is in Hollywood. Except under persuasion.

He is Nicholas Soussanin, a Russian, and a graduate of the government art school and formerly a well known player in the Petrograd Theater when Baclanova was playing in Moscow. Soussanin has been playing in the pictures in Hollywood for five years and these two met in America for the first time.

"Yes, we are engaged," smiles the beautiful Russian woman, "but in Europe no one asks about that. We consider our personal lives our own—I cannot understand the American way."

And then, because the subject is close to her heart, she is bound to be loquacious. "Nicholas comes to lunch with me every day when he is not far away on location. I rarely eat at the studio. And evenings, I like to be at home with Nicholas to talk or sing to him. And we like to ride through your beautiful California country together." Then, with a surge of happy candor, "Oh, I wish to be always with Nicholas when I am not at the studio. He is my great love."

Baclanova in one of the character roles for which she is so splendidly equipped by training.

AT HOME she has serious obligations. Her family must have great adoration and respect for their Olga—Baclanova's endearing first name dropped unceremoniously by the studios.

There are six of them—brothers and sisters and her mother, bereft when the war engulfed her father's formerly prosperous woolen mill and crowded her family into one room of the ten-room house they used to occupy.

At sixteen she had entered the Moscow Art Theater because she suited their odd artistic requirements. She could both act and sing and the directors of this unique organization wanted that type of performer rather than singers whom they might have to train to act.

When her father died over grief of his wartime losses, brave Olga borrowed her mother's diamonds to finance her invasion of the artistic world abroad and with small purse jangling with good luck pieces about which she is very superstitious, she went forth with the other Moscow Art Players to try her fortunes on Broadway, New York.

"Of my own wartime hardships, I cannot complain," says Baclanova. "The leaders of the Bolshevik regime were good to me. All Russians adore their artistic folk, and regardless of political changes in the government, they wished the Moscow Art Theater to continue its productions. And so I was always provided with a good place to live and had good food and clothes. During the summer vacation the Bolsheviks gave me a country house near the Black Sea near where other artists and professionals lived. We had an abundance of fruit and flowers there. It was like California. And the only requirements they asked in exchange for these summer vacations was that I give two concerts during the holiday season.

And so, many of her earnings in the American studios now go back to Russia to care for the mother and the brothers and sisters. "I am not a princess," she says simply. "I tell you no false tales of titles abroad. But we are a good family, a family of which I am proud."

There are things in the American artist and studio life which are difficult for her to understand. "They talk of diet," she says, "I have no use for diet. I eat as I wish as we do in Russia." And then she goes on to tell one that she played lots of tennis in Russia between rehearsals and performances and became quite mad over the game. Which exercise, without her being aware, perhaps, made up for excess on menus.

When George Bancroft, doing a rough and ready scene with the Russian star, tore her imported beaded gown in shreds, it did not bother her nearly as much as being told that they were going to put talkies into The Wolf of Wall Street. She fears her accent may hamper her career in this new world. And doing sound sequences all night long, interrupted by the occasional rattle of milk carts that penetrate the sound-proof walls, is not so good.

She cannot understand why studios wish her to pose for so many still pictures. "Do Americans paper their walls with the pictures of the stars?" she asked me with naive candor.

And, just then, a photographer asked her when she would be at leisure to take some informal shots.

"I am all out of poses," she answered simply. "I have no more." But, of course, she isn't, as the accompanying pictures prove.

And the Yankee way of grinding steadily for output irritates the European temperament.

"In Russia we understand the artist's feeling. If one is tired we know the soul is tired. We stop work until soul inspiration is revived. But here, if the idea of stopping rehearsal for a time is even suggested it falls on dead air. No one pays the slightest attention!" Exotic she is, Russia incarnate with its centuries of repressed feeling bound to break forth in her own emotional life. Hollywood believes she will go far beyond Pola Negri, her predecessor as the leading emotional actress of the screen.

HOLLYWOOD'S manner of engaging new players is still muddled. They are still "discovering" the sweet young thing from Whoopee, Idaho, and thrusting her into leads without so much as a make-up test. The same director who explores for fledglings will holler just as loudly for stage experience, technique and proven dramatic talent if his immediate audience respects all that. So, if the Hollywood policy is still topsy-turvy, it is a gratification to know that an actress like Baclanova is going to reap the rewards of her years of training.

Baclanova in a scene of high-pressure vamping from Wolf of Wall Street, demonstrating her pulling power.

Baclanova in a regally thoughtful pose reminiscent of her early life in Russia.

She has never been to Paris. Her train, bound for the west, only stopped in Berlin long enough to discharge smoke puffs. And yet, without ever having been a student in these cosmopolitan capitals, she became a proficient ballet and stage dancer at the Moscow Art Theater, was trained to sing roles in the musical dramas given there and became a versatile player of comedy, drama and tragedy.

Nimbleness of mind must have been a first qualification, for performances were changed every day and matinees given on Sundays. The company gave plays translated from the Greek, the best efforts of the Russian playwrights and the smartest comedies from the French stage. The dialogue was often spoken in a melodious singing manner which fitted directly into the orchestrations and choruses. A mastery of pantomime was demanded, too, for the introductory scenes were often played noiselessly.

In Baclanova's Carmen played with the Moscow Art Players when they visited New York, the dramatic critics

Greta's Last Tribute

Greta Garbo confides Stiller mission—Menjou plays truant—Del Rio faithful to the end—Bessie Love's new boy friend—a Manhattan Countess—Peaches' movie troubles—cameras blast Broadway careers—and other tidings from New York.

By ARTHUR W. EDDY
Screen Secrets New York Correspondent

THE newspapers have told you that Greta Garbo has returned to Sweden for a vacation and to visit her mother.

But that is only a surface reason. In the heart of the languid star was a desire to pay tribute to the man who guided her to the starry peaks of cinema success—the man who probably carried her love to his grave a few months ago when he died at Stockholm. He was Mauritz Stiller, director.

It was the imperial-appearing Stiller who discovered Greta when she was a long-legged, unsophisticated extra loitering hopefully around a studio in Sweden. They eventually became sweethearts and under his persuasion, she came to America to continue sky-rocketing to fame. Hollywood first watched her troupe in Torrent, later in The Temptress, and then with Jack Gilbert in such red-hot numbers as Flesh and the Devil and Love. Stiller came to America, too, and the Garbo-Stiller love song was resumed, although there was a discordant note struck by Gilbert.

When the glamorous Greta came east she managed to evade a score or more of newspapermen and photographers waiting for her in Chicago. Although there was a cordon of news hounds around the train she kept her head down and slipped through.

Arriving at New York Greta went up to Harmon to stay, incognito, with intimate friends, instead of checking in at some fashionable hostelry, as stars customarily do. Interviewers besieging the M-G-M office for her address were informed that even the company executives did not know her whereabouts.

To her Harmon friends Greta revealed her principal motive for sailing for Sweden. "I want to lay a wreath on the grave of Mauritz Stiller," she said sincerely. "He has meant a great deal in my life."

When Greta returns to Hollywood in March, her first picture under her new M-G-M contract will be Tiger Skin, based on an Elinor Glyn story.

Greta Garbo, occupying an exalted position in screen history as a great lover, who remembers her debt to Mauritz Stiller.

The Camera's Cold Eye

HARRY RICHMAN, Broadway stage and night club idol extraordinary, won't be able to extend his conquests to the cinema world. A battery of cameras at the old Cosmopolitan studio, making tests for Say It With Music in which he had expected to star, decided that he doesn't screen well and nobody can tell a camera that it's wrong.

United Artists, the company which was to release the picture, says that Harry was too busy with his work in George White's Scandals and at Club Richman to go in for movie-making. He's going to California late in the winter to play in the opus, as soon as his Broadway activities are finished for the season, so the producers claim. But, as the old lady said, wait and see.

The Russian Racket

SONYA KARLOV, the little blonde girl who spoofed Cecil B. De Mille into believing that she was a Russian countess, is back in Manhattan—looking for a good movie job. Before she went hopefully into the west and kidded the famous director into giving her a contract, her name was Jean Williams, of Ziegfeld's Follies.

When Jean migrated to Hollywood about two years ago her manager decided that the best way for her to crash into stardom was to develop a regular Russian accent and ancestry. The caviar atmosphere she created was a splendid job, as is attested to by the fact that the famous Cecil fell for it.

But someone spilled the proverbial beans and De Mille learned that his "Russian" discovery had never been nearer Russia than Coney Island. He kept her on his payroll, as per contract, but didn't give her an opportunity to face the camera. Finally the show ended when De Mille bought back Sonya's contract.

The other afternoon I came across Sonya working with George Jessel in Lucky Boy at the R. C. A. studio.

"I'm starting all over again," she confided. "The only thing I'm saving from my Hollywood experience is my name. I want to forget the rest of it."

Truant De Luxe

IT ISN'T every star who can pack up and railroad east when he doesn't like the story selected for him. That is, and still remain in the good graces of the company paying his salary.

Adolphe Menjou obviously can get away with it. It seems that the sleek Adolphe didn't care for the part he was slated to play in The Concert, Paramount picture. The role required him to grow old during the action of the story and he was afraid that his admirers wouldn't cheer for him thusly. So, with charming Kathryn Carver, his spouse, he bag and baggaged east, leaving the studio executives with a story but no star.

What would Paramount do with this star who was playing hooky from school, was the current query in the east. But Paramount, which thinks a lot of Menjou, didn't get excited, and a day or so after his arrival in New York, the star and Walter Wanger, the company's high mogul of production, sauntered, arm in arm, through the Astoria studio.

Still More Trouble

WHEN "Peaches" Browning stepped into the cast of The Squealer, underworld drama, its leading lady, Ruth Shepley, stepped out. "I don't like cheap and sensational publicity," declared Ruth, pointing a finger at the little lady who gave Daddy Browning a run for his checkbook.

Peaches is also playing another role—in a divorce court. In this show she is cast as "the other woman" by Mrs. Katherine Allen, who alleges that her husband, Edgar, theatrical booker for Peaches was very, very friendly with Heaven's latest gift to the Broadway stage.

Almost There, But—

JARNEGAN, unvarnished tale of early Hollywood life which created a sensation when printed serially in SCREEN SECRETS, has been adapted for movie production. Charles Beahan and Garrett Fort, the scenarists who gave this Jim Tully novel its stage treatment, did the work.

Although Jarnegan is attracting tremendous audiences in New York, the chances of its being filmed by a major company are nil. The Will Hays office has said thumbs down on the story. And, furthermore, Hollywood isn't apt to make faces at itself in the cinematic mirror.

Their Ideal Roles

SELDOM do stars play the kind of roles they would like to.

Charlie Chaplin would gladly discard his famous shoes and stick to do a Shakespearean drama, but he is a good enough business man to realize that the movie-going public wouldn't stand for it.

Jack Gilbert prefers the heman roles, something like he played in The Big Parade, but the box office demands that he should play the part of the hot and heavy lover.

Pola Negri has always dreamed of playing Cleopatra. And now her dreams are coming true. No less a person than the illustrious George Bernard Shaw has selected her to impersonate the flaming historical vamp in a screen version of his play, Caesar and Cleopatra. It will be filmed in England, beginning in July, and erudite George himself will lend a hand.

Bebe Still Free

YOU can chalk the name of Tommy Hitchcock, Jr., war flyer and internationally famous polo player, off the list of prospective hubbies for Bebe Daniels. His engagement to Mrs. Alexander McLaughlin, Jr., beautiful young widow and a member of one of the wealthiest families in the country, has been announced. When the peppy Paramount star was vacationing in the East several months ago, she dashed around considerably with Tommy, and a rumor started immediately that they intended to hit the matrimonial trail together.

Mary Brian and Maurice Chevalier deciding that interviewing and being interviewed is great stuff —when a girl like Mary does the asking and a genial personality like Maurice does the answering.

Meet M. CHEVALIER

Maurice Chevalier, the Al Jolson of France, tells his impressions of Hollywood to Mary Brian as our "extra special" correspondent.

By Mary Brian

FOR four years, I have been on the answer side of the interview. I've had to tell writers everything from the story of my life to what I think of leading men. So when SCREEN SECRETS asked me to interview Maurice Chevalier, the latest importation on the Paramount lot, I thought it would be fun.

My first shock came when I saw him. Tall and slim, in his dark blue suit and sombre tie, his blue eyes twinkling and his smooth hair no-color-at-all, he looked like an American business man. I felt sure he'd begin talking about overhead and options and the stock market.

He didn't kiss my fingers, as so many of the Hollywood foreign legion do, but shook hands heartily and smiled his nice boyish smile. After that, his accent was another shock.

"Tell me," I demanded, pointing my pencil at him as if it were a gun, "the story of your life."

"But that will take us from now to next week!" he protested. "It is so much and yet it is nothing. I am of the working people from suburb of Paris. We have school only until twelve years of age—the geo*graphy*, the numbers and to read." (You see, his accent is clearly understandable, a fascinating thing of misplaced emphasis and odd choice of words.)

"When I was half-past eleven, I was ready for work. I try everything, carpenter, printer, selling for a painting shop, nail factory—what not? All the time I sing for the—what you call it—fun of the thing? At first, I think I will be an acrobat but after I break my neck two-three times I see that I like music best. Not *o*pera, just music-hall songs—and I have been doing that ever since!"

Though he modestly dismisses them with a wave of the hand, M. Chevalier's music-hall songs have put him at the top of the ladder as the idol of the continental theatre. When I heard him at the Mayfair later, I saw why he's an idol. He comes on with that gorgeous smile, an air of "Now, aren't we having the best time?" makes you laugh with an impersonation almost uncanny and in a twinkling he's giving you a whimsical, delicate thing that touches your heart with Barrie tenderness, and—like that —he's gone into a song and dance.

Everybody asks me about diet so I asked M. Chevalier. I never do it because I lose weight when I'm working. I don't eat much breakfast and I worry so much I have no appetite for lunch. I do the worrying for the whole Paramount Studios, but I stay slim.

"It's no big matter about food," he replied—and he said "beeg" in a fascinating way—"I exercise. In France I used to box but that is not so good for risk. I might not be so beautiful if I do. I dance. Also I play Fairbanks' game of 'Doug' which is like tennis but faster and harder. Just men play and we can be rough."

He is a great admirer of Douglas and Mary Fairbanks, whom he met in Paris. "So human, so nice and so great," he calls them.

"Once before this I come to this country for a little visit—two-three days. I land in New York and there is a telegram for me from my friend Doug, asking me to come to Hollywood (he calls it Holywood) to stay at his house. I am so delight', I show this telegram to everybody I meet. 'See here now,' I say to them, 'what you think of that? A great man like Douglas Fairbanks sends me this. He asks me to his house.' Oh, I tell you, I feel very good! I know nothing then of the geo-graphy. I think, well, this is Thursday, so Friday I will see Ziegfeld's Follies, and Saturday I am invite to Long Island for tennis tournament, but Sunday morning I will get on a train for Holywood and spend the night with my friend Doug. And then I will catch the boat home on Monday." He thoroughly enjoyed the joke on himself.

WHEN I asked him about his ideal girl, he said he was a married man and his wife was with him, but I told him he had to answer, even if he said his wife was his ideal.

"No, I shall say that Mary Pickford is the ideal girl," he said, then. "She is perfect—a mixture of wife and baby. I do not mean I am in love with her, but I think she is one who should not be changed in one particle. I never saw a couple more happy than Doug and Mary, and my wife say so, too."

"You have to tell me what you think of love at first sight now," I instructed him. "They made me answer that. I said I'd never been in love so I didn't know whether it came at first sight or last. What do you think?"

He seemed to think I had said something very funny. He couldn't seem to stop laughing and his eyes danced like blue stars.

"The answer is fate. Nobody can help it, nobody can dodge it. There's no use fighting it if it is really love."

"But it doesn't seem so terribly lasting—at least in Hollywood," I objected.

"Holywood is no differ-ent than anywhere. Divorce is the same in New York or Paris. But here is more like big vill-age and everybody knows each other and talk more so it sounds more scandalous," he explained.

"Everybody is so open here—so black and white. Gary Cooper, now. I went on his set to see him work. I have met him at a party so I smile and wave. He looks at me, so black, so scowl that I think I have insulted him. Then he starts slowly toward me." He rose from the bench in the Art Gallery where we had been sitting and acted Gary Cooper loping across the room with menace in his eyes. "But when he reach me, he stick out his hand and say: 'You should be'—what you call it?—' a cinch in talking pictures!' They tell me he is ti-mid, and that is why he looks at me so black.

"But now," he came back to me and shook his finger at me, "you have left something out. You must say to me: 'What do you think of American girl?' "

I obediently did so.

"I do not answer," he replied,

Letters of a Movie Extra

Hollywood, Cal.

Dear Dolly:

Gee! Wotta day—I've laughed till I'm sick and tonight when I swapped my ducket for my Seven Five Oh I almost said, "Keep the change!" Harold Lloyd does that to you. He greets you with a grin and sends you home the same way.

The foreign element always did have a cinch for work and in this picture the atmosphere is almost entirely Chink. And do those little China Dolls flap? Dun't esk! Clara Bow had better watch her laurels—little slant-eyes has no regard for patents or copyrights. However, they do speak English. The assistant tried handling one of them by the sign language. He motioned for her to go up some steps. She just shook her head. Finally she said, "If you tell me what you wish I will be glad to do it for you." A lot of this royal cinematic propaganda could profit by that lesson.

Well, it was a change from working with Corinne Griffith anyway. Oh, don't misunderstand me, Dolly dear, "The Orchid" is the most fair of them all. She starts work at ten and quits at six regardless—no overtime but plenty of back-tomorrows. One night there was only one more shot with the crowd. The camera started and so did Corinne; pushing her way through the mob, her eye fell on her wrist watch. She just turned and said, "Good night, folks. See you all in the morning." Did she get a vote from the mob? I'm telling you!

I went over to work with Marion Davies the other day. Marion's set is like a display of motion picture stars. Everyone who is anyone visits the set and chats a while with somebody. In the cast are Polly Moran and George K. Arthur. They are both such mirth-provokers that they divide the time up into fifteen-minute periods so that neither one can get in on the other's bows.

Bill Haines dropped in on the set. He has a reputation for wise-cracking, so I sidled up to him and started a conversation. Guess I looked English, so he didn't waste any of his subtle jokes on me. He's really good-looking, Dolly, better off than on. He had on a black and white polka-dot suit, you know—like ma's old sunbonnet, only his was wool and ma's was cotton. He has a very nice Virginia accent—outside of that he's quite Hollywoodish, only he does wear a hat.

I saw Joan Crawford running around the lot with young Fairbanks. She's going back to natural, only the ends of her hair are red, now.

That reminds me—Harry Rapf was on the set the other day, too. You know, Dolly, he was the one that discovered Joan in New York and sent her out here. I got in the line of his vision as much as possible but I guess he wasn't in a discovering mood that day.

Love,
FRANCOIS FERN.

P. S.—Tell Ma I'm getting along swell. It isn't the truth, but I can't think up a good lie in a hurry.

The Pranks They Play

When the stately and dignified stars of Hollywood get going with their plain and fancy kidding, anything may happen, and usually does.

By HARRY CARR

HER HIGHNESS, the Marquise de la Falaise, de la Coudray, is the best—or the worst—kidder in Hollywood. A title didn't take the mischief out of Gloria Swanson.

Whenever she gives a party for a king or an emperor, he always has to be careful to look for pins when he sits down. She spares no one.

In fact, the roughest practical joke she ever played happened just after she had returned from France with a husband and a title a yard long. After all the society bootlickers had drunk up all her free entertainment and gone home, Gloria used to fly to the telephone for her evening's fun.

She would find some name like Skadinsky in the telephone book and call up the number—in the middle of the night. Usually Mrs. Skadinsky answered the phone; and her sleepy voice indicated that she didn't feel like a nize baby either.

"Hello," said the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray. "Will you call your husband to the phone? I want to speak to him . . . oh, just tell him it's Lucile . . . yes, tell him that Lucile forgot to tell him something . . ."

If Mr. Skadinsky wasn't at home at the moment, she left a loving message for him.

All of which was grand entertainment for Gloria; but wasn't so good for the neighbors who had to listen to the parliamentary debate between the Skadinsky's all the rest of the night; and for many nights thereafter.

It made so much excitement that the police had to get on the job and trace the calls. Finally, they made a formal call upon the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray and requested her in no uncertain terms to cut out the kidding.

One of Gloria's favorite wheezes is to get dressed up in old clothes from the studio prop room, and get a job for the evening as a waitress in some dinky cafe.

However, Gloria got paid back in her own coin—twice—and by the same person. Gloria had just pulled a rough joke on one of her scenario writers; I forget just what it was—introducing him as the co-respondent of a famous divorce suit or something of the kind. They decided it was about time she got hers.

One of the men on her staff was James Creelman, a charming, well-educated young newspaper man who had turned to literature. He gave a theater party for her. It was one of the big opening nights in New York and the party sat in a row in the middle of the house.

In the middle of the show—not between acts—Gloria felt a package slipped into her hands; and a whisper "Open it." She thought it was candy. It was limburger cheese of the most violent and passionate disposition. It came out of the box like a blast from a fertilizer factory. Everybody forgot the play and began to turn around and sniff. Beckoning fingers began summoning ushers. The woman just in front of Gloria clasped her handkerchief frantically to her nose and began gasping. That whole part of the house was a whirlpool of sniffing indignation and excitement.

Imagine her embarrassment!—when Marie Prevost heard a wag appeal to her mother to take Marie off his trail!

Gloria is a quick thinker. Just before the lights came on, she slid the box down under her seat; and at the first illumination, she marched haughtily out with her handkerchief delicately applied to her nose.

Another time, Creelman gave a box party for her. She Rush Hughes' invention was supposed to enable Hollywood celebrities to broadcast through their own telephones but Rush was the audience and the only one.

Gloria Swanson, the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray, but nevertheless Hollywood's high-powered kidder.

should have been suspicious when she found that she and her husband were the first ones there. A young gentleman so punctilious in his courtesy as Creelman is never late.

But she sat down in the front row—the target for all eyes in a crowded and fashionable house.

Presently—just before the curtain rose—in walked three stage Frenchmen. Little square beards—little chopped off swallow tail coats—and high opera hats. They marched in with a line as straight across as evening parade at West Point. With one sudden scissors movement, they all bowed to the floor at the same time. With one impulse they took one simultaneous step forward. With one movement each hat went under the left arm; with one movement, they doubled suddenly up to kiss her hands. Then like clock work, they perched themselves stiffly on the edge of three chairs.

Gloria got the giggles. There was no way to leave the house until the curtain went up; then she slid out as rapidly as possible. At her automobile door, three stage Frenchmen bowed low as though they worked by machinery, in farewell. And it was a long farewell. Gloria couldn't stop kidding people if she tried; but she put the King's X mark on her scenario staff after that.

There is some one else she never tries to kid—John Grey. He is a scenario writer, at present on Mary Pickford's staff. John is a hopeless case.

On one occasion, when I was in the old Sennett studio, Marie Prevost was entertaining some friends. They were the kind of friends that were discreetly skated around the edge of the bathing pool where the young ladies without too many clothes on might have been seen; they were shown all the dear little animals that are used in the movies, etc., etc.

John broke his way through the group and, with solemn and offended dignity, addressed Marie's mother. He said something like this:

"Mrs. Prevost, I want you to do something about your daughter. I simply can't stand having her follow me around this way. I am a family man and I have my own reputation to think of." Poor Marie, whose maddest dissipation was an Epworth League meeting, nearly passed out.

Christmas was a time of terror in that studio with Johnny Grey around. The last Christmas we were all at the studio, John went to great pains to provide Mabel Normand with a nice visit from Santa Claus. Near Los Angeles there is a farm where they raise lions for the market; and the daily menu consists of old, broken-down horses. John found one so poor that you could hang a hat on his hip bones. He had it brought to town in the dark of night and tied it on Mabel's front porch. During the night, the poor old nag heard his ancestors calling him home. So when Mabel emerged to early Mass on Christmas morning, she found a dead horse with a card tied to his forelock: "Merry Christmas and lots of love."

In the scenario department there was, at that time, a

Ten Years Ago

Richard Dix failed his first screen test—Blondes photographed dark—Hobart Bosworth sold 'em on California—Westerns gave the movies their start.

Cramped Quarters

BACK in the good old days stars and extras fought for dressing room space, and took what they could get—with thanks. Imagine, then, the sensation when the first star's special dressing room was built at Inceville in 1915 for that lovely little actress, Billie Burke! Today all the most important stars have a suite or even a perfectly equipped bungalow of several rooms, including an electric grill or kitchenette. Billie Burke was one of the first stars, also, to report to work daily in a car. And her chauffeur—he was an ambitious young cowboy who liked monkeying around machinery—Buddy Roosevelt!

Westerns Popular

TODAY few productions—save along "poverty row" where the "quickies" bloom like dandelions after a summer rain—are completed in less than six weeks. But back in 1911, when the American Company was sitting on top of the world, they made four pictures a week, and had Saturday and Sunday off! Our first really popular motion pictures were the good old Westerns, in which wicked Indian warriors scalped fair settlers' daughters. After their first burst of fame, Westerns had a decided slump. It was William S. Hart, the two-gun man, who revived them. In those gay old days at the American, Pauline Bush, now lost in the dim ages of antiquity, was leading woman; Louise Lester was the ace character actress, while "Jack" J. Warren Kerrigan, was the dastardly villain. Two actors, quite new to the screen, played juveniles, leads, villains, fathers, mobs, or whatever turned up in the day's work. They were Wallace Reid and Marshall Neilan.

The Light Touch

D. W. GRIFFITH claims to be responsible for the popularity of blondes. In 1908 he started introducing to the screen such fair beauties as Mary Pickford, Marion Leonard, Florence Lawrence, Blanche Sweet, Lillian Gish, and others equally popular in the good old days. Although the fashion of the times decreed that the old-time "frail" should be a bit hefty in the hips and impressive above the solar plexus, his heroines were possessed of boyish figures. As blond hair was not "picked up" by the camera in the old days, but registered dark, he busily set to work inventing a system of lighting known as the halo effect, which gave the light-headed misses full benefit of the doubt. If some of you have wondered why Blanche Sweet used to look brunette, just consider it's a question of electricity, not chemistry.

Lina Basquette at the age of ten, in the 1917 opus, Romany Rose—the picture where Universal decided to put all their eggs in one Basquette.

First Job

STRANGE things happen in the movie world, where all crossroads meet. Many years ago Luke Cosgrave, then a stage producer, gave James Cruze his first job as an actor. Today Cruze is directing The Duke Steps Out on the M-G-M lot, while Cosgrave, now a popular character actor, is playing a comedy professor.

Do You Remember:

Mrs. Vernon Castle in the serial, Patria, back about 1917 . . . She won a Hearst contest, which gave her a Pathe contract . . Milton Sills and Warner Oland also in Patria . . . Until recently, Shaftesbury's teachings have been available only to people who could pay $25 to $50 each for instruction books. But now, through the efforts of a group of his students, his wonderful teachings have been collected into a single volume, at a price within the reach of all! And furthermore Shaftesbury has consented to reveal hundreds of new discoveries never before put into print.

The life and loves of Charlie Chaplin have been put into a play now running on a Paris stage, and it is said that Beverly Hills closet skeletons are rattling.

George O'Brien, Fox star, is the son of Chief of Police O'Brien of San Francisco. Tom Gallery, actor, and husband of Zazu Pitts, is the son of the famous old Captain Gallery of the Chicago police force. Mrs. Conrad Nagel gave a party recently and invited many stars to come to meet her honored guest, her grandmother.

Paul Leni says that in Europe, before he came to California, he was told that he would have to ride a horse to the post office in Hollywood because there were no roads or motor cars! Sounds like propaganda.

Captain John Loder, handsome Paramount leading man, is the son of General Lowe of the British army.

Jack Gilbert wears dark glasses when he shops in Hollywood or plays the market at his brokerage office. His glasses prevent the attentions of the curious crowd, for few recognize the star in this disguise.

Harry Richman, who you have probably heard on dozens of your phonograph records, is to star in the United Artists picture "Song of Broadway," a singing and talking picture.

A New Kind of Make-Up

Developed by Hollywood's Make-up Genius

NOW READY FOR YOU!

JOAN CRAWFORD

RENEE ADOREE

Under a Strange Light in Hollywood, we Found Out How to Avoid "Off-Color" and "Spotty" Effects in Make-up.

BEAUTY is a business in the motion picture colony, so we have studied make-up for years. And now you may benefit from our experience and gain added beauty through this new knowledge.

Under the blazing "Kleig" lights, more trying than sunlight, "stars" are photographed. Make-up must be perfect or grotesque effects result. To meet this severe test, Max Factor developed a new kind of make-up, based on cosmetic color-harmony, which photographed perfectly. Today, Max Factor's Make-Up is used almost exclusively by the "stars".

Then from this discovery came powders, rouges and other essentials for day and evening use, based on the same principle of cosmetic color harmony. Their success in Hollywood was instantaneous. Now thousands use only Max Factor's Society Make-Up.

Perhaps you have worried about your make-up and have searched for ways to enhance your beauty—and still you're not satisfied. The reason is simply this—there is more to make-up than merely a bit of powder and a dab of rouge. What is this wonderful secret of make-up? Why have Hollywood's "stars" and society women given up the haphazard use of cosmetics and adopted Society Make-up. Now you may know. You may have the very make-up, learn the very method, used by these beautiful women.

Hollywood, Calif.—Max Factor showing Irene Rich how to correctly use the eyebrow pencil.

NEVER BE CONSCIOUS OF YOUR MAKE-UP

If your make-up is "off-color" or too glaring, it over-shadows your personality. It becomes a worry, destroying that self-assurance which is an attribute of every charming woman. Permit Max Factor to analyze your complexion, as he has done for hundreds of screen stars, and recommend a make-up which will be just a part of your own natural beauty. Just fill in and mail the coupon.

Imagine Make-Up so Faultless that even Under the Blazing Glare of the Motion Picture Lights it Photographs Perfectly. With Max Factor Society Make-Up You, too, Will Learn the Secret of the Stars.

FREE Complexion Analysis by Max Factor, Hollywood's Genius of Make-Up

The one way to secure the exact make-up to best harmonize with your complexion, accentuate your beauty, and enhance the charm of your personality is to have your complexion analyzed and your personal requirements determined. This Max Factor will do for you, without charge or obligation. He will also send you a copy of "The New Art of Make-Up" which fully explains cosmetic color harmony and describes the correct method of make-up. EARLE LIEDERMAN
The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance," etc.

If You Were DYING TO-NIGHT and I offered something that would give you ten years more to live, would you take it? You'd grab it. Well, fellows, I've got it, but don't wait till you're dying or it won't do you a bit of good. It will then be too late. Right now is the time. To-morrow or any day, some disease will get you and if you have not equipped yourself to fight it off, you're gone. I don't claim to cure disease. I am not a medical doctor, but I'll put you in such condition that the doctor will starve to death waiting for you to take sick. Can you imagine a mosquito trying to bite a brick wall? A fine chance.

A RE-BUILT MAN

I like to get the weak ones. I delight in getting hold of a man who has been turned down as hopeless by others. It's easy enough to finish a task that's more than half done. But give me the weak, sickly chap and watch him grow stronger. That's what I like. It's fun to me because I know I can do it and I like to give the other fellow the laugh. I don't just give you a veneer of muscle that looks good to others. I work on you both inside and out. I not only put big, massive arms and legs on you, but I build up those inner muscles that surround your vital organs. The kind that give you real pep and energy, the kind that fire you with ambition and the courage to tackle anything set before you.

ALL I ASK IS NINETY DAYS

Who says it takes years to get in shape? Show me the man who makes any such claims and I'll make him eat his words. I'll put one full inch on your arm in just 30 days. Yes, and two full inches on your chest in the same length of time. Meanwhile, I'm putting life and pep into your old back-bone. And from then on, just watch 'em grow. At the end of thirty days you won't know yourself. Your whole body will take on an entirely different appearance. But you've only started. Now comes the real work. I've only built my foundation. I want just 60 days more (90 in all) and you'll make those friends of yours who think they're strong look like something the cat dragged in.

A REAL MAN

When I'm through with you you're a real man. The kind that can prove it. You will be able to do things you had thought impossible. And the beauty of it is you keep on going. Your deep full chest breathes in rich, pure air, stimulating your blood and making you just bubble over with vim and vitality. Your huge square shoulders and your massive muscular arms have that craving for the exercise of a regular he man. You have the flash to your eye and the pep to your step that will make you admired and sought after in both the business and social world. Come then, for time flies and every day counts. Let this very day be the beginning of new life to you.

"MUSCULAR DEVELOPMENT"

It contains forty-eight full-page photographs of myself and some of the many prize-winning pupils I have trained. Some of these came to me as pitiful weaklings, imploring me to help them. Look them over now and you will marvel at their present physiques. This book will prove an impetus and a real inspiration to you. It will thrill you through and through. This will not obligate you at all, but for the sake of your future health and happiness do not put it off. Send to-day—right now before you turn this page.

YOU'LL NEVER KNOW LIFE

Until You've Read the Greatest of All Forbidden Books!

YOU'LL never know the tremendous force of human passion—you'll never understand life in the raw, stripped of artificial conventions and hypocrisies, until you've feasted on the most thrilling Tales from that greatest of all true-to-life books—the immortal Decameron.

Here in the frankest, most revealing tales of love and intrigue ever written are situations so startling, so true to life, that we feel they might be happening today instead of centuries ago. Written in an age of plain speaking, they show us how real flesh and blood men and women act—the deep secret motives that influence our actions today no less than they did centuries ago.

And now for a short time only you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing—the stories which you have always longed to read—in your own home for five days, without obligation! Read all about this amazing offer, then send for your copy at once.

For centuries the Decameron has thrilled millions—has inspired countless great authors—has been lauded by the most discriminating critics. Rich in fascinating plots, vibrant with all the passions of the race, it has furnished forth plots for the world's great masters of literature—Shakespeare, Chaucer, Keats, Tennyson, Dryden and Longfellow. A large volume would be required to list the writers who have copied or adapted some of the plots. Hardly a great novel, or a poor one, exists, in which the plot is not in part or in whole taken from the Decameron. No one can know literature, can call himself truly sophisticated, truly a master of life in all its infinite variety, until he has drunk from the bottomless loving cup of that genial old Italian, Giovanni Boccaccio.

These Great Writers Have Taken Plots From the Decameron

Shakespeare took parts of The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, All's Well That Ends Well and Romeo and Juliet from these stories. Lessing took the plot of Nathan der Weise, Chaucer the idea of his Canterbury Tales, Dryden, Keats, Longfellow and Tennyson wrote poems—all based on these great tales, which have outlived thousands of manuscripts written since their day.

Between the covers of these Tales from the Decameron you will find life itself—real, pulsating passionate life that refuses to be confined by paralyzing restrictions—life that refuses to follow the dictates of prudery. Far from being immoral, as many narrow minded people used to think, these Tales from the Decameron are in reality almost a text book for the earnest student of that greatest of all studies—human nature.

Boccaccio's stories have already lived five times as long as our United States—over twenty-four generations. They were the "best sellers" when gunpowder was scarcely known—and yet today they still delight us, still give us pleasure and instruction, with their immortal vitality, forever young, forever gay, forever thrilling. If you like to read a story of adventure, read one of these. If you want a charming love story, read another. If you look for tragedy, read a third. The fourth will make you weep.

The morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century are all laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, their methods of travel—all are told with a wit and pathos that never crept between the covers of any book penned by a historian. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, which after all is the first requirement of good fiction, but they give us the history of the manners and customs and morals of a long passed age. They constitute a landmark of literature, which must not be passed over, if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

Hoot, Mon!

A POSSIBLE Hollywood romance is hinted in the freedom to be obtained by Ruth Elder via the divorce court, and her new contract with Hoot Gibson, the western star. It is said that Mrs. Hoot Gibson, the former Helen Johnson, has departed for the New York stage, leaving friend hubby to lariat whom and where he pleases.

To Part

CONSTANCE BENNETT, formerly a great success in the films, and a daughter of Richard Bennett, is going to divorce Philip Plant, her millionaire husband of several years marital standing.

Helping The Picture

SUE CAROL and Nick Stuart are to be co-featured in a Fox special, Girls Gone Wild. The romantic interest between this pair is so strong that the film is heralded as a success in advance, and it is believed that they will wed before the year is over.

The Kid Sis

BUDDY ROGERS took a new girl up to Montmartre for luncheon the other day, and it set the gossips agog. However, the attractive girl proved to be none other than Buddy's sister, just arrived from Olanthe, Kansas.

Why The Delay?

DOROTHY SEBASTIAN'S engagement to Clarence Brown, the director, is another one of those long drawn out affairs. As Mr. Brown's final decree of divorce was granted some time past, Hollywood wonders if the pair will ever wed. Janet Gaynor seems in no hurry to consummate her affair with Lydel Peck, either.

Mother Objects

CAN you imagine anyone who had the name of Molly Malone not getting her own way? That's the name of Phyllis Haver's mama, and it is said the screen star's warm-blooded Irish mother strenuously objects to any possible romance between Phyllis and Bert Lytell, and that's that!

Two Big Names

CRANE WILBUR, who was formerly well-known on the screen, has married Beatrice Blinn, niece of the late Holbrook Blinn.

Off The List

BEN LYON'S mother, Mrs. Alvine Lyon, has finally come west with her three daughters and all Ben's New York furniture, and they will set up housekeeping in the environs of Hollywood. All of which seems to kill the story that Ben will soon wed Ruth Elder, Marion Nixon or anyone else.

Talkie Talk

flooring for the dancing act. Concrete was no good. Neither were various dancing mats. Finally a special floor of varnished plywood was used successfully.

A Sound Gallery

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER have established a "sound morgue," a library where various tests are kept. If a director needs the wail of a three-day old baby for his talking picture he can find it in the "sound morgue." Everything from the roar of ocean waves to canary birds singing is in the library. Crickets' chirps, the call of the nightingale, fire gongs, snores, booming of navy guns, horses' hoof beats, sirens, and the drone of airplane motors. The latter is extremely difficult to record. It has been found that the revolving wheel of a hand motor placed on a heavy board which, in turn, covers a bass drum that is flat on the floor, is a perfect imitation of an airplane motor. The tinkle of ice in a glass records perfectly.

The deepest note that has ever been recorded is the organ's. Overstuffed furniture throws back an echo. A special soft writing paper of almost rubberlike texture has been manufactured by a Los Angeles firm for talkie use. The crackling of ordinary letter paper is deafening to the microphone. Junior Coghlan, twelve-year old starlet, has one of the best recording voices at Pathe.

Trailing Sound Criminals

HIDING the microphone is one of the most difficult problems in intimate scenes. Sometimes a bottle or a book on a table is hollowed out to hold it. Microphones often masquerade as chandeliers. From six to twelve mikes are used on big sets. At Pathe they had to tear down a set to find the offending piece of furniture that caused an echo. Reports from Paramount say that an echometer has been devised. It pursues elusive sound rebounds to their source.

A bell signals quiet at Pathe before sound shooting commences and a white light on the camera booth flashes when the actors are to commence speaking their lines. In cueing symphony orchestras for Vitaphone each division of instruments is given a certain colored light. Red for the stringed pieces, green for the brasses, yellow for the traps, white for the wind instruments. As the lights flash, under the conductor's guidance, the volume swells and diminishes.

Sex in Sound

HENRY HOLT, paint shop head at Paramount, has invented an acoustical paint to eliminate sound. It does away with minor noises, will take any color, and is used by that studio on its sound stage sets. It will not be placed on the commercial market but its use will be restricted to sound stages. M-

Embarrassing to tell them—but women should know that this sanitary pad, which excels in comfort and ease of disposability, now deodorizes completely.

WHEN shopping, in business, socially—wherever women meet the world—there is an important question of personal hygiene that can mar their happiness. They do offend others at times. And this new treatment which deodorizes every Kotex pad positively prevents such offense. Kotex scientists have discovered (and patented)* a safe way to banish all odor.

That other fear—the feeling of being conspicuous—is now eliminated. Corners of the Kotex pad are scientifically rounded and tapered so as to leave no evidence of sanitary protection.

Yet every advantage remains

You can so easily adjust Kotex to your individual needs. Cellucotton absorbent wadding takes up 16 times its weight in moisture; it is 5 times more absorbent than cotton, itself. The fact that you can so easily dispose of it makes a great difference. And a new treatment renders it softer, fluffier, than you thought possible.

Improved Kotex is 45c for a box of twelve, at any drug, dry goods or department store.

*Kotex is the only sanitary pad that deodorizes by a patented process. (Patent No. 1,670,587.)

Use Super-size Kotex

Formerly 90c—Now 65c

Super-size Kotex offers the many advantages of the Kotex you always use plus the greater protection which comes with extra layers of Cellucotton absorbent wadding. Disposable in the same way, Doctors and nurses consider it quite indispensable the first day or two, when extra protection is essential. At the new low price, you can easily afford to buy Super-size Kotex. Buy one box of Super-size to every three boxes of regular size Kotex. Added layers of filler mean added comfort.

974 The Arcade Cleveland, O.

G-M have discovered that the corners of its sound stage have gender. A male corner is one where masculine voices have finer sound qualities. A female corner serves to reproduce a woman's voice better.

Sound stages are usually lined with Cellotex board, a sound-deadening compound, although talkies have been successfully made on ordinary stages with heavy black cloth, to lessen outside noises, encasing the set on four sides. The sound stage at M-G-M is especially constructed of eight-inch concrete, lined with sound proof plaster and double-insulated walls. It is set on vibrationless piers. The floor is sixteen inches thick. Its sound proof doors weigh two tons and when closed form a perfect sound vacuum. Ventilation is achieved by forced air feeds. Outside sound is filtered out of the air before it is turned into the stages.

Barnyard Interference

A CROWING rooster almost stopped the sound shooting on a sequence in Pathe's The Missing Man. Action was to take place in the crow's nest aboard a vessel and the scene was to be shot in the dark hours of the early morning on the back lot. But a neighboring rooster, awakened by the flashing lights, commenced to crow, thinking dawn had come. Every time lights flared, the cock cackled. Shooting was abandoned. After sun-up the rooster, which, of course, was a pet, was purchased from its owner for three dollars, and the next night the scene was made, undisturbed. However, the cock's vocal talents were not wasted. The Pathe trade mark being a crowing cock, the rooster's cackle was recorded for future synchronization and afterward a certain southern gentleman of the studio had a succulent dinner.

The New Vocabulary

MANY new words have entered Hollywood's vocabulary since the advent of the talkies. Mike, of course, is microphone. Mike-mania is equivalent to stage fright. Mixer is the man to whom all sound is transmitted on the set and who blends the volume. A volume indicator weighs an actor's voice. Sound deadeners are made of heavy felt and are screens placed at advantageous points to lessen noise. A play back is a Vitaphone phrase used when a disc is played to see if the recording is satisfactory. A blooper is one whose voice blasts. A drummy voice is one that booms. Tubby tones are hollow. A rheostat voice is weak and has to be built up. Interlock means that the camera and the voice-recording apparatus are in absolute synchronization. A baffle or a tormentor is a portable wall, hung with certain materials that prevent echo and resonance. Tank is another name for the camera's sound-proof booth. Bridge tables were arranged for the evening's recreation.

THE day before the Kenneth Thompsons left for New York, they were honor guests at a buffet supper given by Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Brennan. Cards and chatter passed the evening, and among those bidden were the Conway Tearles, Paul Sloanes, Robert Edesons, Edmund Breeses, Leatrice Joy, Gladys Brockwell, Charles Duell and George Hodge.

AN INFORMAL, carefree occasion was the buffet supper at the hillside home of the Mervyn LeRoys (Edna Murphy). Mervyn thoughtfully met his guests at the foot of the hill and guided them up the hundred stepping stones to the lighted doorway where pretty blonde Edna hospitably greeted them.

Esther Ralston came with her husband George Webb (who said Hollywood wasn't proper?) and taught us all a new word game. Kathryn McGuire and her consort George Landy, Gertrude Olmstead with Robert Leonard, Virginia Fox and Darryl Zanuck (they're married, too), Lew Cody, Thelma Todd, Alan Crosland and a host of others.

Colleen Moore and John McCormick came in late from another party and made us all laugh with a funny impromptu ventriloquist act all about the proper way to make "Whoopee!"

A Patriarch Passes

fore it. Perhaps similarity of experiences does make for similarity of expression. For you see, the one began where the other had finished. When Theodore left home for the stage, the nephew had his room in the old San Francisco mansion inhabited by the sea captain father of Theodore Roberts. Everything about the house reminded the younger one of the older one who had flown.

"Theodore had a stage in the basement," began Mr. Higgins. "He built it with his pal, Dr. Tennison Dean. Theodore expected Doctor Dean to visit him this month The two boys—why it was remarkable for those days, what they accomplished. It had wings, scenery—everything complete and all made by their own hands. In a cupboard (the house was built as much like a ship as possible with regular seafaring cupboards) I found, oh, there must have been hundreds of paper backed plays. I read every one of them because Theodore had left them.

"As a boy from eight to twelve, Theodore had two ambitions. To be a pirate or an actor. One day he took a Bible, a pistol and a rubber tent and ran away. On the boat, going north to San Francisco (everybody knew Captain Roberts and for his son to get a ride was easy), he told a man about his ambitions. This stranger suggested that since Theodore was going out into the woods he'd better leave his fifteen dollars with him. It was the old gag. When he came back, the man was gone. He crawled home a deplorably sadder but much wiser pirate.

HIS father wanted him to be a seafaring man; his mother, from a cultured English family, a minister. When he was seventeen his mother went to James O'Neil (father of Eugene) and asked him to dissuade her boy from going on the stage. O'Neil was only too ready for he was always dissuading stage-struck people. Theodore went to his hotel and before O'Neil could get his guns in order, launched into a discussion of Shakespeare—then on to others, and still others. They had a heated argument. O'Neil had thought to see a boy craving the limelight and he found one who knew as much about the masters as he did, who could recite them from cover to cover and would stand up and argue him down on any mooted point about them. The old actor told the mother that far from dissuading her son, she should urge him to enter the acting profession.

"He went back to the sea, however, after he had become a fairly well-known actor. For a year he was captain on one of his father's ships. Then, one day, he became angry at a sailor, threw him overboard and jumped in and saved him. Just at this time Fanny Davenport sent for him to be her leading man. The sea captain washed his hands, shaved, got on the train and headed for Sacramento. He played a different show every night, learning his parts, one a day, for months. Not even Fanny Davenport could understand how he did it.

"He never took anything from home after he left. No matter what the struggles, he was independent. On this point, I was the same. We wouldn't see or hear from each other for years but I was out making my own, trying to become an artist while he was striving to become a well-known actor."

He had several hobbies. One was a mad passion for laying cement. He built the walls around his home, the sidewalks. He would build and tear down so that he might build again. And he made hammocks. There are old-fashioned sea faring needles throughout the effects left to his nephew.

HIS GENIUS lay in the fact that he never seemed to be acting. A stage rival once exclaimed, "Bah, Theodore Roberts just has good luck. He doesn't know a thing about acting." A real tribute, since no matter what the role he gave the same impression.

Theodore Roberts! A great showman—a great personality. His death marks the passing of that era of frontiering in both the stage and pictures. "He lived to taste the next era in that talkie of his," George Fawcett told me. "We can all do a little with it—Hobart Bosworth, Theodore and myself—but—"

And the evening after the funeral of his old friend, George Fawcett left for the desert to rest and commune with his memories of the departed spirit. There are many, many in this world who will commune with their memories of this Grand Old Man of the Movies.

An Extra Girl Gives the Lowdown

on them. When the scene was over De Mille rushed forward to lend a helping hand. They were bruised and shaken but not badly hurt. We all thought they had been killed.

Noah's Ark was no bathing beauty's paradise either. Central Casting called me and asked, "Can you swim in six feet of water with domestic animals in it?" What a misleading question! If I could swim at all I could swim in six feet of water. I took the job without further question.

It was a four o'clock call. That meant getting up at two-thirty. We were handed long, flowing robes, weighted down with brass ornaments and yards and yards of heavy braid. We covered the goose pimples with bolemenia and made for the tank. What a jolt we got! A large tank with about four and one-half feet of water in it, horses, burros and Texas steers all waiting. Overhead, about thirty-five feet, were huge tanks filled with thousands of gallons of water —supposed to be the flood. They let us down into the icy water and told us to swim to the ark past the animals. The sirens blew, the lightning flashed, the flood broke loose and the animals went wild, but the extras were calm—staring death in the face without a murmur. It wasn't a case of swimming at all—merely a survival of the fittest. We took inventory after five retakes and we were all there ready to flirt with the undertaker the next day.

Nothing seemed dangerous after that. But it was! They piled rocks in the middle of the pool and draped the half-naked extras upon them. Then they opened the chutes! The water came down like bolts out of hell pounding us onto the rocks. But not one of us patronized the morgue.

Occasionally there is sadness in our midst. Only last season we lost our peppy little Ethel Hall. Ethel had tried hard for the front row but succeeded only in being a double. This time she was doubling in a river for Dorothy Dwan, leading lady for Tom Mix. She got caught in a whirl-pool. No one could save her. It was too bad. She'd always wanted headlines but even earning them in such a tragic manner didn't secure them for her. Only one tiny paragraph. The public must have its thrills but it doesn't care to read how it gets them.

Shortly after that we lost our beloved Pepetia Rameriz. It was an automobile accident. She wasn't on the set when Death overtook her. I was on a Lasky call the following day when a girl came in breathless and sobbing. Tears are so uncommon with us that we pressed her for an explanation. Gosh! We all knew Pete, an ex-Spanish dancer who was not only supporting herself but an invalid sister as well. She had managed all right while the sun shone but she hadn't prepared for the darkness. There were no smiles on the set that day except those Lasky paid for. We took up a subscription and many an extra's bottom dollar went to pay for the long last ride of Pepetia. We tried to have everything just as she would have wanted it. Everyone she had worked with was there—even Charlie Chaplin. The extra girl who first told us of Pepetia's death is now caring for the invalid sister.

Pictures have not been kind to me—yet I have never found anything more interesting. I have lived in the North, South, East and West; in the country and in cities; with farmers, politicians and diplomats. I have found discomfort in all of these places as well as happiness. I have seen farmers who lost crops, doctors who lost cases, bankers who failed, politicians who were unsuccessful, all with sadder faces than the extra who missed a set.

I learned more about life and its people in my four years in Hollywood than I did in all the other twenty-four years of my globe-trotting. I learned diplomacy and tact. I learned to be courteous to people no matter how I felt toward them. I learned the true meaning of comrade. I do not believe there is such a thing as jealousy among the extras. My phone rings hourly—it's Johnny or Mary or Willie or Maude—all saying blithely, "How's tricks, dear? Say, there's a set at Lasky's. Better try it. I didn't make it but you may be the type." I've driven miles out of my way after a hard days work to take some extra home and they have done the same for me. I have cooked miles and miles of spaghetti and fed dozens of extras and they have, in turn, fed me.

No, dear world, we are not starving but we often do get hungry. We have never missed a meal in Hollywood but we certainly have postponed a few.

We get blue at times, but good luck—if not our own, then the other fellow's—soon cheers us up and this we know: They can't make pictures without us!

MERNA KENNEDY, formerly Charlie Chaplin's leading woman and now under contract to Universal playing as her first lead the big feminine role in Broadway, narrowly escaped an operation for tonsilitis. She was taken to a hospital for the operation but her physician decided her fever was too high at that time. It is probable, the doctor said, her condition will improve to such an extent that she won't have to go back to the hospital.

Another hospital patient was Maurice (Lefty) Flynn, at one time a prominent screen player and Yale football hero. He underwent a minor operation indirectly due to an injury he received in his football days. He is the husband of Viola Dana and they were reconciled recently in the east after a marital tiff and are now living happily together in Hollywood.

Lupe Velez (extreme right), with her sister, enjoying the happy, carefree childhood days before she went to Hollywood and knocked 'em for a Lupe.

wait on the corner. I just have to see him. He stop and asks me how I been.

"You going to see your sweetheart?" I ask him.

"Yes," he tell me.

"Do you really love her?"

"Yes, I love her."

"Oh, I see."

"You talk like a child," he tells me.

"But see, I wear high heels now. My mother say I am too old to wear low heels any more."

"Yes, you are very old. Do you want to see me tomorrow?"

"Yes! I love to see you." And I wrinkled my eyes hard at him. He grab my hand. That make me very happy. But when he pat me on my head like I am a kid, that make me angry. I tells him only my father do that.

The next day I puts on my best dress. My mother say, "What is the matter with you, Lupe? That dress is for Sunday." I tell her it is a big day at school and we have to dress up for it. Then I paints my cheeks with red paper. It make good rouge when you lick your tongue on it. I burns a match and uses it on my eyelashes. I don't go to school. I just wait four hours on that street corner. My heart is beating, beating!

"You look cute," he say when he see me. "You look sweet enough to kiss. What would you do if I kiss you? Would you scream?"

I say, "No!"

"I never forget that kiss. It is the sweetest I ever get in my life. Oh, my Lord, wasn't it wonderful!

Lupe paused in her story. Were those tears in the eyes of the girl? Tears in eyes which usually gleam with the dangerous lights of what she calls "a devil?"

I see him that night and every day and night. I go out and and not come home until eight and ten o'clock at night. That is terrible. My mother raises hell about it. I pay no attention. I tell him he must give up that girl. "But you are just a child," he tell me.

"I will show you if I am a child! I will flirts with every mens in this city if you do not give up that girl for me!"

I did. I have eight—ten—oh, twenty mens in love with Lupe. I am always with them. So he give up the girl and then I gives up the mens and we promise to marry one another. Oh, how I adore him to death. And he adores me to death also. We are very happy. But my mother, she is worried. She think that Lupe is too young to have a mans really love her. She is afraid something bad will happens to Lupe. So she make up her mind to teach Lupe what happen to girls who have lovers. She give Lupe the biggest shock of her life. Something Lupe never forgets. It is what makes Lupe forever a good woman.

(To be Continued)

How Lupe's wise mother shocked her fiery daughter into a realization of life's dangers, and Lupe's amazing leap from convent life to brilliant stage triumph in Mexico City, is told by this star in the next installment of her dramatic life story, appearing in the April issue.

Together Again

went out again, where we took an actual part in a real fire. These ladder trucks, by the way, are so high from the ground that people and even taxis can pass underneath them easily.

"We next made Venice," continued Nick, "and there it was that Sue joined us."

"Correct," put in Sue, "but I first arrived in Paris, where I got Nick's letter telling me to come on to Venice at once. Nothing loath, I hurried to the station and boarded the train, when suddenly word came in that there had been an accident—the train that had pulled out just ahead had been wrecked and we couldn't go on until the track was clear."

"And meanwhile," interrupted Nick, "I had already received Sue's message saying she was leaving to join me. I rushed to the Venice station to meet her train and heard for the first time of the wreck in which fourteen had been killed and forty injured. I thought sure that was the train Sue must have been on—and, well, my hair didn't turn gray then, so I guess it never will! I told myself that if Sue came that long distance to see me, only to be killed, I wouldn't want to live. I waited and saw them bringing in the dead and injured. I waited for eleven long hours. Finally, I saw another train coming in. I thought I must be dreaming, for suddenly I looked up and there was Sue, looking out one of the windows and waving her hand! I don't know what I said or did to her—but I do know that was the happiest moment of my life."

"What did Nick say and do to you, Sue?" I asked, anxiously.

"He acted like a wild man," laughed Sue. "He rushed up to the train and.

without waiting for the guard to open the door, he grabbed me and pulled me right through the open window! Then he took me up in his arms and ran up and down the length of that platform just seven times. I kept saying, 'Nicky, put me down—what will people think!' but he whispered: 'I can't Sue, I can't!' and hugged and kissed me all the more —and tears were in his eyes . . . ."

They were now in romantic Venice and what good times they had! Days would be given over to shooting scenes for the picture—but at night the gondola, beneath the silvery Italian moon! And when Dave Butler would ask them the next day where they had been the previous night, Sue would smile and sweetly reply: "Oh, just rehearsing love scenes for tomorrow's shooting!"

Everywhere that Sue went, Nick was sure to follow—and everywhere that Nick went, Sue was there, too. So the rest of the party gave them two pet nicknames—Sue was "Tag," and Nick was "Shadow." And those two names they brought back to Hollywood with them.

Next on the list was Naples. "We reached there about two weeks after the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius," said Nick. "It was still erupting when we arrived, and they told us it would be a very dangerous risk to go near it. Nevertheless, we had to go to the top, so go we did! We climbed slowly, for every few minutes the deep rumble would shake the earth. And every few yards we would have to stop and take off our shoes, so hot would our feet get. Since the last eruption, great walls were formed around the crater, so we could walk all around it and look way down in. To get a better view, we obtained permission from Mussolini to fly over the volcano. He gave us army planes—the first time they were ever used for that purpose. For three days we flew over Vesuvius and through sulphur smoke, which is very dangerous, as it chokes the engines of the planes. And for three days I sat in my place with my camera before me and Dave sat in his place, and the real cameraman followed in another plane, shooting us.

"From Naples we flew to Rome, after bidding Sue a fond farewell. She had just received word from Universal to come home at once and finish her scenes for It Can't Be Done—so she left for America two weeks before we did.

"At Rome we shot all the noted places—the Colosseum, the Catacombs and St. Peter's Church. I met Mussolini by private appointment at his magnificent villa, and had quite a chat with him. He is a very interesting man and has a marvelous, compelling personality. Somehow, you get the idea that that other great Roman, Julius Caesar, must have been somewhat like him. He speaks very good English and likes to hear of America and its people. Also, I had an audience with the Pope—he, too, is a fine man.

"We made Barcelona next and at-

Can the Tobacco Habit be Cured?

For more than 50 years The Keeley Treatment has been successful. Thousands and thousands of heavy, inveterate tobacco users have regained health and strength, saved money, looked better, felt better, slept better . . . . all through this wonderful tried and tested treatment.

Is Tobacco Harmful?

Dr. L. P. Clark states: "Tobacco's effect upon the heart and blood vessels is that of an active poison, is responsible for arterial degeneration, interferes with functions of both heart and lungs, finally paralyzing the nerve centers." Scores of other medical authorities are quoted in our booklet—all physicians will tell you that tobacco is a poison.

What Physicians Say

Medical authorities generally agree with this statement of Dr. D. H. Kress: "Tobacco is a deadly poison. It kills its user slowly. Some may live to old age in spite of its use, but none because of its use."

"Your treatment best, quickest, surest" say users

It is the only safe, reliable treatment, physicians will tell, that has been thoroughly tested for over half a century. It seldom fails to stop the tobacco habit. That is why we guarantee satisfactory results or money back. You are the judge, no one else, and no strings are tied to this guarantee.

tended our first bull fight. Then on to Madrid, where Ambassador Hammond made it possible for us to meet Premier de Riviera, powerful dictator of Spain, who is always in grave danger of being assassinated."

Through Ambassador Hammond, Nick also met King Alfonso, who presented him with the medal "Coronacion De La Santisima Virgen De Guadaluppe Octubre de 1928 (yes, you'll have to do your own translating).

"The King also gave consent for us to visit the little town of Guadaluppe, where the noted convent is located and where no news-reel cameraman had ever been before. We left Madrid at two-thirty in the morning, travelled through mountains all that day and night and the next day until two o'clock in the afternoon, when the quaint little village consisting of the convent and a few tiny houses, appeared before us on the mountain-side. We met and talked with the Cardinals and a few of the other inhabitants. They had never seen a camera before and knew nothing of the outside world.

"Back to Madrid and another bull fight. This time, one gay toreador gave me a bull flag covered with blood and used in many fights. From Madrid we went to Algosiers by train, then by boat to Tangiers, past the Rock of Gibraltar and into North Africa. Morocco was our first stop and we stayed there ten days. We met the 'Mendu,' who had never given his consent before to be photographed. He shook hands with me and said to do all the film shooting I wanted to. I also became real good friends with the 15-year-old son of the Sultan, who gave me a handsome sabre of hammered brass.

"Back to Tangiers, where we took the boat to Marseilles, then the train to Paris. There I had an interview with Marshal Foch. The Marshal speaks only in French, but I understood him when he asked: 'Shall I remove my coat to be photographed?' I had two close-ups taken with him in the garden of his beautiful home. Two days of shopping in Paris followed, then we boarded the boat for little old New York.

"In all, I had visited thirteen foreign countries, crossed four large bodies of water and covered close to 25,000 miles for scenes in the picture. I had seen, too, some of the largest things on earth. I crossed the Atlantic on the largest liner; visited London, the largest city; saw the Eiffel Tower, the largest of its kind; crossed the Mediterranean, the largest sea; rode partly across the Sahara, the largest desert, and saw the Pyramids, the largest sepulchres.

"A few hours stop in New York, then we were on our way to California and home! Sue was right there at the station in Los Angeles to greet me. As I got off the train, she ran up to me and whispered in my ear, "Oh, Nicky, I am so glad you are home at last!'

"And I whispered right back: 'So am I!'"

FOOT PAINS GONE in 10 minutes

OR COSTS YOU NOTHING

Burning, aching, tired feeling in the feet and legs—cramps in toes, foot calluses, pains in toes, instep, ball or heel—dull ache in the ankle, calf or knee—shooting pains from back of toes, spreading of the feet, or that broken-down feeling—all can now be quickly ended.

SCIENCE says 94% of all foot pains result from weakened muscles that permit the foot bones to become displaced and press against sensitive nerves and blood vessels. Now a way is discovered to strengthen these muscles while holding the bones in position. Pains stop in 10 minutes when this amazing band, the Jung Arch Brace, is used. Stand, walk, or dance for hours—you just don't get tired. Just slips on—results are almost immediate. One of the secrets is in the tension and stretch. It is highly elastic and amazingly light and thin, yet strong and durable. An exceedingly soft sponge rubber lift is provided and urgently advised for severe cases. Worn with any style footwear. There is nothing stiff to further weaken muscles or cause discomfort.

Pain stops like magic. Soon band may be discarded and feet are well to stay. Nearly 2,000,000 now in use. Specialists, amazed at results, urge it widely.

Wear it 10 days; if not delighted, your money returned.

1 Trouble starts in weakened muscles. Tiny bones of forward arch are displaced. Pain follows.

2 A super-elastic band assists and strengthens weakened muscles, replaces bones. Pain stops instantly.

Go to druggist, shoe store or chiropodist. If they can't supply you use coupon below and pay postman. Write for free book on foot troubles.

Throwing aside the shackles of the past modern youth is blazing new trails, setting new standards, new moral codes.

In Dancing Daughters Joan Crawford typified the spirit of modern youth on the screen as it has never been done before.

Soon she is to be seen again in an amazing sequel to this picture, one which will surpass it in daring and frankness. But—you don't need to wait to see this picture. Read

Modern Maidens

The story of Joan Crawford's next picture, beginning in the April issue of SCREEN SECRETS.

The greatest story of carefree, jazz-mad youth ever written! Also many other fascinating features and beautiful art studies of motion picture stars in many-colored rotogravure. Don't miss it!

Snowed Under

Super-Flapper of 1928, creating an original and distinctive type of screen heroine. No star since our late beloved Valentino has had such a wide influence on the manners, clothes and behavior of a devoted public as has Clara Bow, and because she is daring to be herself—that's why she is my favorite.

And Another For Janet

My favorite: Janet Gaynor.

She is the screen's most vivid individual personality! She is vitality personified!

She cries. You cry. She laughs. You laugh. Her whole being tingles with "aliveness." For us, the everyday tasks take on added charm.

The play doesn't matter for Janet Gaynor carries with her into each successive performance a positive universal appeal. The good—bad—indifferent—ordinary, this slip of a girl has the ability, the rare gift of knowing almost by instinct how you and I would feel and act during such moments.

She's a really truly dream girl alive!

Marie Prevost Inspires Poetry

My choice is MARIE PREVOST

My "fifty-fifty" favorite,
Half the angel, half the scamp;
Adorably the seraph, bewitchingly the vamp.
A figure that is ravishing—
A face that wins the heart;
A style that's simply stunning,
Apparel chicly smart.
She is so cutely naughty;
She is so sweetly nice;
A heavenly touch of virtue—
A saucy pinch of spice.
I wouldn't have her different,
Not even if I could;
I'll take her "fifty-fifty,"
The badness with the good.
No matter what her role is,
She's every inch the queen—
My favorite of the movie stars
That shine upon the screen.

WALLACE BEERY is certainly setting a style in Hollywood. The other day he hove into sight in his brand new Travel-air six passenger plane with a wasp motor in it. He and a pilot drove the machine to Hollywood from Wichita, Kan. Beery is a sure fire aviation nut and he goes every place in his plane, with his friends as passengers. He is a good pilot, himself.

The Cruel Camera Again

ANOTHER expectant movie star has had his hopes blasted.

Robert Montgomery was playing in the stage show, Possession, a few weeks ago, when Samuel Goldwyn signed him for leading man opposite that Hungarian Rhapsody, Vilma Banky. He donned movie make-up and started work in Fifth Avenue, with plenty of enthusiasm. But when the producers saw the "rushes" they found that he photographed like Vilma's son (although, as a matter of record, she hasn't one) rather than a dominating screen lover. And so Montgomery was released and James Hall, who has bestowed fillum kisses on Bebe Daniels, Clara Bow and other femmes, was borrowed from Paramount to replace him.

Seeing Celebrities

WILL ROGERS, who tosses lariats and wisecracks with equal skill, coming out of the Bowery and East River Bank. When gum-chewing marathons hit Noo York, Will's sure to be champ . . . Bessie Love posing for publicity pictures at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Eastern studio. . . . Benny Rubin, dialectician who "wows 'em" performance after performance, introducing Bee Jackson, originator of the Charleston, on the stage of the Colony Theatre. She'll give an "organ recital," says Benny . . . . Geraldine Farrar, once the frau of Lou Tellegen, ex-idol of female stage and screen fans, driving crosstown on 44th Street. Her next mate will be Charles Foley, the impresario, so the story goes . . . . Dennis King, current in The Three Musketeers, and the average flapper's conception of what a matinee idol should be, taxi-ing with Vivienne Osborne, also of the Ziegfeld show, out to Paramount's Astoria factory. They're due for a voice test and if they register well, the chances are that there will be two more stars in the movie heavens . . . Paul Page, stage trouper, and Lola Lane, recently the love interest in George Jessel's The War Song, hurrying into the Grand Central, en route to Mr. Fox's cinema citadel at Hollywood . . . . Gene Markey, who pounds a fictional typewriter, lunching at the Algonquin. He has just done some Close Harmony in collaboration with Elsie Janis, and this picture with a music title will be a Buddy Rogers vehicle . . . . Elsie Ferguson, the footlight and former flicker lady who once got herself cordially disliked by panning "audience intelligence," ambling along Longacre Square . . . . William Collier (not Buster, his son) watching eye-refreshing Claudette Colbert work in a scene of The Hole in the Wall at Paramount's Astoria studio. He's going to help Richard Dix make Nothing But the Truth, the play which you possibly saw him in about a decade ago.

She LIES and He KNOWS It

This young lady's letter reads sweetly enough — but her fiancé knows graphology! He has studied her handwriting and knows that she is deceiving him. The engagement will be broken off.

Handwriting is the mind on paper! To one who knows a few simple facts it reveals the truth as well as if a full, honest confession were made.

HAND-WRITING CANNOT BE DIS-GUISED

TRY THIS TEST

The three specimens of handwriting shown above were clipped from the original letters of applicants for a position of trust. One is a crook and thief; another is insane; the third is an intelligent and capable person who was engaged and is regarded favorably. Which one would you engage, if they all applied by letter?

EASY TO KNOW THE TRUTH

"Character Analysis from Handwriting" teaches the science of applied graphology. The 300 examples, rules, tables and alphabetical index make it easy for anyone to learn this amazing new science. After 10 minutes' reading you can begin to know the truth about people from the way they cross their "t's."

EASY TO UNDERSTAND

This handy volume (200 pages, 6x9, cloth bound, gold stamped), by the world-renowned expert, Albert J. Smith, is described by literary critics as "the most thorough and authentic—yet, the simplest and most easily-understood book on graphology ever published."

Lina Basquette says she always sends herself a Christmas present—some little luxury she has been wanting for a long time.

Billy Joy—yes, brother of the famous Leatrice—has written a song entitled "She's My Sister's Baby," and dedicated it to his niece, Leatrice Joy II.

The Pranks They Play

very ritzy young man who talked a great deal about his society connections. He was always having to go home early in order to keep an evening appointment with Mrs. Van Astorbilt. One night, at the theater, John found the young favorite of the Four Hundred in a box with the swagger set and dressed up like a plush horse. He went to the back of the box and summoned the young man. In a hoarse whisper—heard with horror by every one in the box, John said: "For God's sake be careful of my dress suit—I want to wear it myself tomorrow night."

One of John's friends, a beauteous young lady star, is very cold toward him—because he merely went up to her in the middle of a sylish cafe party and, in a voice shaken with emotion, commiserated with her over the fact (known only to his imagination) that her brother was to be hanged the next day.

William Haines is the biggest prankster at the M-G-M lot. Nearly everybody has been made a victim of one of his jokes. James Cruze, director, is the latest, and it happened while Cruze was directing him in A Man's Man.

Cruze likes hotcakes for breakfast and Haines found out about it. When Cruze arrived at the studio commissary he ordered his usual breakfast. Billy went to the chef and asked if he couldn't help fix Cruze's breakfast. The chef was obliging.

The principal help on the part of Haines consisted of putting a disc of flannel in each of the hotcakes.

Cruze spit and sputtered when he tried to cut the cakes but he took it all good-naturedly. Threatening, however, to get even.

EVEN Pola Negri is a kidder. Not long ago, she went to a week-end house party with some movie people at Laguna. They went out early in the morning—leaving Pola still in bed. When they came back, Pola rushed to meet them in the street. "We have been robbed; bandits!" she squealed. During their absence, she had emptied all the bureau drawers onto the floor, and upset all the furniture all over the house. Pola thought it was a bigger joke than the people who had to clean up the muss.

And Mary Pickford gets jocose at times. The last time she was directed by Mickie Neilan, she was prepared for the worst. Mickie is a great director, but if he ever got to a set on time nobody ever has found out about it.

So, the first day that Mickie appeared on the set to begin the new picture—late as per custom—a phonograph with a loud speaker attachment greeted him with a blare and an old song: "I've Waited, Honey; Waited Long For You." After that Mickie was sometimes almost on time.

Douglas Fairbanks is an abandoned kidder. This in spite of all the dukes and kings who come to visit at his house. In his office he has an alluring-looking comfortable couch. Tired Hollywood always makes a bee line for that sumptuous ease; but after they sit down, they always leap up with a yell. Doug has an electric wire attached. It feels as though a mule had kicked you in an appropriate place. Ask me. I know.

One Hollywood wheeze nearly turned out to be a tragedy. One of our merry little stars bet another that he couldn't steal the famous rug—about fifty feet square—out of the main lobby of the Alexandria Hotel. It sounded about like stealing the traffic signals from Forty-second and Broadway in New York.

At the hour of midnight, there came a terrific shriek from the mezzanine floor, then more shrieks. The hotel clerks and all the Hollywood loiterers rushed pell mell up the stairs where they found a grinning extra girl—with a lacerated throat.

Meanwhile the young stars had calmly gathered up the big rug and had departed with it in a taxi cab. The hotel people did not entirely appreciate the jest.

The man who really made a fool of Hollywood was Rush Hughes—with his gag about the radio. He is the son of Rupert Hughes, the novelist and scenario writer.

Rush rang up several of the celebrities of Hollywood on the phone and told them a new experiment was being tried by the radio savants. A device had been perfected whereby they could speak into their own phones and it would be transmitted over an air wave to the eager and excited world.

Then Rush took down his own receiver and enjoyed a quiet evening at home—hearing them perform for his benefit. A lot of them fell hard; but one of the hardest was the wisest guy in Hollywood—Lew Cody. In his most dulcet tones, and his gayest quips, Lew addressed himself to what he thought was a world-wide audience with all the radio stations in the world hooked on. He told stories and sang songs and made sundry sage and clever remarks. And Rush Hughes enjoyed it a lot—as he told Lew later.

Anita Stewart was in a cafe when a gentlemanly waiter told her she was wanted on the phone. When she found out what was wanted, she wrapped herself up in her sables and tore off home. She and the members of her family wheeled the heavy grand piano into position to get the right tone effect. Rush was very fussy about the position of the piano. They had to haul it this way and that until it sounded right over the "radio." Finally, worn out with her house moving work, Anita began to warble. She sang and sang and, in her sweet, hesitating, shy voice, told charming little stories.

Rush enjoyed that, too. The following day, Mr. Hughes decided to take an extended vacation without leaving a forwarding address. After all, who wants to be murdered?

Wampas Baby Stars of 1929

stars of today—perhaps, to surpass them. Let us run briefly down the list of the Wampas Babies, of whom you will hear much more in months to come.

Anita Page was born on Long Island, studied art, came to Hollywood to make a picture for Harry Thaw, was signed by Metro-Goldywn-Mayer, and won instant attention in Telling the World with William Haines, and with Joan Crawford in Dancing Daughters.

Sally Blane and Loretta Young are sisters. They grew up in Hollywood, and went into pictures straight from high school. Sally attracted attention by dancing at the Cocoanut Grove. She played in the Universal Collegians series and many Westerns. The Young sisters scored a hit with Lon Chaney in Laugh, Clown, Laugh. Loretta, under contract to First National, is playing with Dick Barthelmess in Scarlet Seas.

Josephine Dunn, with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, got her first job in the New York Winter Garden because she had curls like Mary Pickford, came to Hollywood, had a series of tough breaks and finally scored with Al Jolson in The Singing Fool, and with William Haines in Excess Baggage.

Jean Arthur, Paramount player, was born in New York, made her first hit with Richard Dix in Warming Up and has an important role in The Canary Murder Case.

Mona Rico is a Mexican girl, declared by Ernst Lubitsch, director, to have the most beautiful hands of any girl on the screen. Se will make her first appearance with John Barrymore in Eternal Love, for United Artists.

Doris Dawson, First National player, first scored with Richard Barthelmess in The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come. She was born in Goldfield, Nevada.

Doris Hill made a hit in the first modern talkie, The Better 'Ole. She was born in Roswell, New Mexico She has played a number of roles for Paramount, to whom she is under contract.

Ethelyn Claire, born in Talladega, Alabama, created the role of Mrs. Newlywed in Universal Comedies. She is a free lance player.

Helen Twelvetrees is a recruit from the stage for talking pictures. She was born in Brooklyn and has lived in New York. She plays the lead in The Ghost Talks for Fox.

Betty Boyd was born in Kansas City, has played in Educational Comedies and will play in talking pictures with Edward Everett Horton.

Helen Foster is a free lance actress who has played leads in pictures produced by Mrs. Wallace Reid.

Caryl Lincoln has had an eventful career doing difficult doubling stunts and playing in westerns. Her beautiful legs won her better roles.

The Baby Stars will be presented to the public at the annual Wampas Frolic at the Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles February 12.

AGAIN the Wampas has conferred its honors on thirteen happy youngsters. Potential stars, all of them. Who knows what fame and fortune lies just ahead of all of them?

What does the future hold in store for these thirteen Baby Stars? Perhaps a glance at the starlets of the past may give an indication of the possibilities before them.

Last year's selection of Wampas Baby Stars demonstrates the accuracy of this famous annual forecast. The Wampas Baby Stars for 1928 were Sue Carol, Gwen Lee, Sally Eilers, June Collyer, Molly O'Day, Alice Day, Dorothy Gulliver, Lina Basquette, Anne Christy, Ruth Taylor, Lupe Velez, Flora Bromley, and Audrey Ferris. All have gone on to greater success in the year just past, and of this talented group Sue Carol, Sally Eilers, June Collyer, Audrey Ferris, Lina Basquette, Ruth Taylor, and Lupe Velez have scored outstanding hits in this brief period that more than justified the stamp of approval placed on them and their work by this organization of shrewd pickers.

Yes, the lucky ones selected may well feel a glow of satisfaction, not only for this recognition of their work to date, but also because of the impetus supplied to their careers. For it has been estimated that to be selected as a Wampas Baby Star saves at least five years of slow, uncertain progress toward a screen career.

Fashion Hints For Spring

Max Ree, costume creator at First National studios, gives a few hints as to things fashionable for feminine spring wear.

Indefinite colors are featured in blouses—that is, tones that shade into colors, but blending in such a way as to be indescribable through the regular color range.

Gingham and linen will be worn by sophisticated women for spring.

Long-haired furs, whether dark or light, will be luxurious accents to heavy silk coats for spring.

American beauty is to be a popular shade for evening gowns.

Water-color pink is a new shade.

Colleen Moore, Corinne Griffith, Alice White and Dorothy Mackaill are getting their orders in early for their spring wardrobes.

Harry Carr Comments

was at the top of the heap. Von Stroheim would have less.

Worked for Joy

VON ought to be rich. He has very little money owing to a peculiar habit of making contracts. When Von starts out on a picture, he nearly always makes contract along these lines:

That he will get a certain cash sum for writing the story; and a salary for a certain specified number of weeks for directing the same. After this mile stone, he is not to get a salary.

For instance when he made Greed, he drew a salary for about fifteen weeks; then he worked nearly two years for nothing.

When he made The Wedding March, he got $25,000 for the story; $25,000 for acting in the picture, and $5,000 a week for fourteen weeks. The result was that he worked over a year for nothing as a director.

Von's Loyalty

YOU can forgive Von Stroheim a great deal on account of one really noble quality . . . his absolute loyalty.

For instance, much of the trouble—most of the trouble—in The Wedding March, was due to two incompetent photographers who made a botch of photographing Von. Scenes which should have taken a few hours stretched on into weary weeks. But nothing could induce Von Stroheim to discharge them. He said he knew too well what it meant to be out of work with a family to support.

Jetta Too Happy

I AM afraid that Griffith's new picture The Masquerade isn't going to help Jetta Goudal much. I saw a projecting room preview of it and I thought that the fair Jetta was pretty god-awful.

I am not sure what the moral is, but the best picture Jetta ever made was White Gold, throughout which she and the director, Bill Howard, fought like two Killkenny cats. She said that she was never so happy in her life as in this Griffith picture and it comes pretty near being her worst.

Grief Helps

WELL, brethren and dear sisters, I am afraid that this runs pretty close to the rule of studios.

Whenever I see a picture come to an end with all the actors kissing each other good-bye and crying the kind of tears that college graduates shed on graduation day, I know some one else who is also due to cry—the producer who has to pay the bills for a flop.

But when I see them cursing the director behind his back; walking out with the muttered threat that they will never work for that fiend again if they starve, my heart perks up. I know that it has a pretty fair chance of being a great picture.

In the hands of Svengali the simple Trilby became an operatic songbird, such as the world had never heard before. In the hands of the stage hypnotist today people will perform the most absurd stunts that they would never think of doing of their own free will. These are only a few examples of the mysterious power of

Hypnotism

The Power to Sway People

Everybody Can Hypnotize!

Hypnotism is much misunderstood. It is NOT necessary to put the subject in a trance. EVERYBODY responds to hypnotic suggestion with their eyes wide open, in full possession of their senses. Every salesman, doctor, lawyer, executive is a hypnotist in a way. So is every mother, lover, actor—in fact, everybody.

Make People Say "Yes"

Everybody needs this knowledge—the SALESMAN whose prospect must never say NO—the LOVER who brooks no refusal—the EXECUTIVE who wants obedience and loyalty—the MAN who wants to rise in his lodge, church or club—the WOMAN who aspires to social prestige—the DOCTOR whose personality does more than his medicine—the everyday MAN or WOMAN who wants to dominate in home and family.

Fame—Fortune—Happiness

Don't you feel such a knowledge would help you succeed in life? Don't you see what a power you would hold over others? Don't you see what a blessing and force for good you might be? Can't you see visions of fame—of fortune—of wealth—love—happiness?

Disease—bad habits—bashfulness—fear—worry—flee before this hypnotic power. Make of yourself a high powered, magnetic, cultured person—welcome everywhere, respected, obeyed, admired and envied.

Secrets Now Revealed

by a world-famous professional hypnotist and lecturer in two splendid books for beginners. One book tells all about the mysteries of this curious science, its history, background and scientific principles. The other teaches you word for word, step by step, move for move, just how to hypnotize different people make them do what you want, induce various stages of hypnotism, how to awaken the subject, how to break bad habits, overcome bashfulness, gain a magnetic personality, etc.

Mind Reading

Magnetic Healing and Mesmerism

are also explained in plain words which anyone can understand. The whole course of 25 lessons was written expressly for home study and practice. But it goes into everything needed to make the reader a professional hypnotist if desired.

A $20 Course for Only $2.45

This course was sold in separate lessons for $20 at first. Now it may be yours for only $2.45—less than 10c per lesson—to study at your leisure.

When I Am Forty

Estelle Taylor and her husband, Jack Dempsey, are in full accord about beating the fateful forties, as they are about almost everything else.

a month I went to the various racial theaters. I compared the methods of the Russian actors with those of the Hungarian school. Occasionally I went up to Harlem and saw negro troupes perform. I went to the Metropolitan and learned to discern Puccini from the operas of the bombastic Wagner.

Instead of reading light fiction, I trained myself to enjoy biographies, books on philosophy, stories of the operas. It was not easy. It's hard to change from a diet of truffles to the beefsteak of literature. For the first time in my life, I am not ashamed to admit I was thinking. Heretofore, my life had been a series of emotional outbursts that had sped me on to whatever success I had achieved. How long this would have lasted, I do not know.

I think it was the words of a man who offered me many things that money could buy in return for my love that gave me my first definite plan of what I would do when I was forty, and how I could best use the cultural knowledge that I was absorbing under the guidance of my good friend, Mr. Brabin. This man, a banker, offered me an estate and a limousine and all the things that women have been offered since Lilith. And when I refused, he said: "What difference will it make when you are forty? Wouldn't you rather be the mistress of a fine home than have to scrub for a living?"

I was not flattered. I was furious. It was then that I decided to reach a victorious forty entirely through my own efforts, converting daily experiences into profit, learning, thinking clearly.

I decided to devote my early life to the screen. Then to go to the stage, where youth is not so much the requisite. And when my stage days were over, I would write plays and stories. I would not go blindly at the business of writing, although I reasoned that my years on screen and stage would help me materially. I would enroll in Columbia University where they have a course in story and play construction. I would fill my life with work. When I could no longer create beauty on the stage, I could give beauty to the world through words. I would write and write like George Sand, though by no means as illustriously. Tirelessly she wrote while her life flowed by. She wrote almost up to her death. I, too, would be busy until I breathed my last.

With this idea of self-improvement I have chosen my friends, not alone for congeniality, but for the cultural luster they can cast upon our friendship. It is not snobbishness. It is not as bald as it sounds. I want them to derive the same joy from association with me.

I planned this life, of course, before I met and married Jack. Marriage alters things. It is bound to. Women may say it doesn't, but it does. However, instead of diminishing the scope of my plans, he is fully in sympathy with them. You see, Jack has no fondness for those devastating forties, and has his own pet plans for vanquishing them.

though not a producer or newspaper owner. At least, that's what Charlie said when he found he was the loser.

Bebe entertained with an imitation of Al Jolson singing "Mammy." And the way Bebe imitates is just nobody's business.

Wise Gal

WITH her connections with Paramount severed, maybe Bebe Daniels isn't glad she's been a wise little girl and saved up her pennies. She's counted among the few wealthy women in this business. Wampas Baby stars and other beginners might well learn a wise lesson from Bebe. With three offers from other studios she can wait to choose her own contract at any terms she desires.

Still Going Strong

BETTING is about even as to the seriousness of the Lupe Velez-Gary Cooper infatuation. Lupe has intrigued so many men—Gary has increased the heart action of so many women. Yet, they are so evidently mad about one another that you cannot get odds on either side of the question.

Too Athletic

MRS. MARGUERITE W. L. BEERY has filed suit for divorce against Noah Beery, screen heavy. He has to go into court soon to show cause why he should not pay his wife alimony. She also asks for a division of their community property.

Mrs. Beery asks freedom on the ground of cruelty, alleging that Beery forgot to confine his "heavy" talents to the screen but carried them into their home, throwing her to the floor, flourishing menacingly a loaded revolver; that he told mutual acquaintances she associated with peons and that his demeanor toward her was harsh and brutal.

Hidden ills are the most to be feared

Foes to our health stalk everywhere, yet alert men and women need not fear those ills that give warning, for modern science has perfected many a safeguard.

At the first warning of pain, do not be satisfied with superficial remedies! Gastric pains, dizziness, lack of energy, and indigestion, may be the danger signals of active stomach ulcers—one of the most dangerous of ailments because it is hidden.

For more than a generation, Dr. H. H. Warner, with his chemists and medical staff, have been perfecting a remedy for this disease, and now Dr. Warner's Stu-Mak Remedy is accepted everywhere as a harmless, healing panacea for this all too common trouble. If you suspect the presence of this ill, which may so easily become malignant, send for a trial box. The price is $2.00, or three boxes for $5.00.

How William Haines Became a Wisecracker

Mary Brian and William Haines as they appeared in Brown of Harvard —showing one of the biggest rewards of cracking wise.

I had saved enough money for my first trip home for Christmas. Jack Conway, the director, didn't want me. Nobody seemed to want me. I wanted that part; I knew I could play it, but I just went home and left them with a lot of indifferent, hardboiled wise-cracks to remember.

"That picture, as you know, made me. My wise-cracks, forced to veil the porous heart-coverings of a sensitive nature, had saved me. I've always wanted to do a serious picture; I've really yearned to enjoy a few serious moments. But I've made my bed—and now I must lie on it."

They did give Bill one chance at a serious picture—A Man's Man—with Jimmy Cruze megaphoning. It was so serious that at the studio preview women burst out weeping. At the Los Angeles preview one woman became hysterical from emotion; she giggled. The producers heard the giggle and cut the picture to be funny.

No Hollywood party is complete today without the wise-cracks of Billy. The more risque the jokes are—the more they laugh at him. Billy Haines is supposed to be funny. His pictures are supposed to be funny. The fact that he may be a Pagliacci doesn't enter into the consideration of either friend or producer. To them, he was created to promote laughter.

"You can train yourself just as you train your dog. You can have two personalities—the one which cries at the other; the one which laughs at the little boy who is sometimes still crying. It's not easy in the beginning but just like Pagliacci, you can—with work—hide the one and parade only the other."

Meet M. Chevalier

"I just look." And he beamed at me with his blue eyes and his beautiful smile, implying that if I were a sample of American girls, he was satisfied.

He's like Lindberg. He always says the right thing.

"Before I left Paris," he went on, "they told me I would be run to death with reporters. They met my boat in New York, and fifteen—twenty of them came to my hotel to ask questions. I met the press at a luncheon on my first day in Holywood, but not so many have come since, so I think they just say it to scare me.

"But if all interviews would be like—just sit and chat with pretty girl—I wish I could have one every day!"

We stepped out into the well-advertised California weather, and he beamed in a way to make a native son's heart warm to him.

"They tell me it will be like the south of France," he said, "but we have not such sun. It's wonderful! A paradise! And my wife say so, too. I do not know about pictures, but if they will only like me, I will love them."

He shook hands again in his American businessman fashion.

"You must watch out," he warned me. "That love-bug you do not know about will GET YOU YET!"

The Future of the Talkies

"One moment," I cried, "won't television in the end scrap all the theatres?"

"Use your bean," said McCarthy reprovingly. "Don't you know that the same men who control the basic rights and manufacture of sound equipment also control television, and would they let the one play hob with the other? But, seriously, it will be many years before television will operate satisfactorily in the homes, and television will have about the same effect on the picture business as the so-called home projectors."

This man now working in Hollywood is he whose Broadway-and-Forty-second-Street place throughout fifteen years was the movie hall of fame and whose approval of a picture—like a diamond expert's appraisal or a connoisseur's cachet of an Old Master—assured its world success.

In that place, which became a renowned mart for the best offerings of the studios both domestic and foreign, but six pictures were selected for general road exhibitions out of the hundreds that were proffered. These six landmarks in the history of road-showing pictures are The Birth of a Nation, Way Down East, The Covered Wagon, The Ten Commandments, The Big Parade and Ben-Hur. Each set a new standard of art or developed hidden possibilities of the cinema. And each brought not only enduring praise to the maker but also a great golden bumper-harvest of financial reward which the producers knew could not have been fully attained without this man's uncanny showmanship and unerring judgment of values.

It was a decided surprise to the theatrical world when it was announced that the famous offices at 1476 Broadway were closing and their occupant would go to Hollywood to take charge of movietone production for Fox.

Any week-day enter a big studio at Hollywood and Western, Los Angeles, and proceed along a formal garden path till you reach an embowered bungalow of two great rooms, in the centre of each of which stands an enormous glass-topped desk.

Seated at one is a rosy-cheeked, stocky man, Winfield Sheehan, the Fox vice-president and general manager. At the other is a suave, tall man, slight of bodily build, quick-eyed, big-brained. Save in the matter of inches, somewhat of a throwback to his ancestor Napoleon. And that is J. J. McCarthy. Named after Joseph Jefferson, brought up, as it were, in the theatres of old-time New Orleans, "super" captain, theatrical agent, general manager, infallible picker of great pictures, he knows as much of the theatre as any man in America.

Will his talkie predictions come true?

Alice White's Secret Diary

Alice White as she appeared in Show Girl in a night club scene—no wonder prohibition agents have been breaking down doors to enter.

news from First National. Looks like they may want to re-sign me. The old cloud may have a silver lining after all. Signed my contract for The Satin Woman.

March 26. Went out to First National. Talked about re-signing and I was very happy. Went to my first Mayfair dance.

March 27. Sunday. A boring day. Leaped around. Didn't do much of anything. Home early. Have a big day tomorrow.

March 28. Much conference out at First National about new contract. I wonder?

March 29. Went shopping. Saw T. for awhile. He's awfully nice.

March 30. Started to work on The Satin Woman with Mrs. Wally Reid. She is one of the most adorable women I have ever known. I am very keen about her. Walter Lang is directing the picture.

March 31. Worked today. Ivan and Gilbert came over awhile. Gee, I was glad to see them. Gilbert is a fascinating boy. One thing about him, he never bores you. You don't know whether he will be moody or gay. It must be that old Spanish custom. I am afraid I am still fond of Gilbert.

April 1. Worked today. Was dressed up like a kid—curls and socks and short skirts. Driving along Sunset Boulevard, I yelled at Jack Gilbert. He looked at me and probably thought I was some ardent fan. Finally he stopped his car when he saw it was me and nearly died laughing. He's a grand person. Little me is just one of a million femmes who thinks so. Told me, once, he wanted to play A Widow in the Bye Street and I dashed out and bought a copy to read. He'd be marvelous in it. I think I'd buy a complete edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica if Jack said he was going to play the Encyclopedia.

April 2. Worked all day. Signed my new contract with First National. Wonder what new plans they have in store for me?

April 3. Slept most of the morning and went to see my picture, The Sea Tiger. People liked it very much. Heard them saying, "Who is that new girl?" Gee it was a thrill. I felt like turning around and saying, "Take a look! Here I am." Maybe I'll be a star after all.

April 4. Dinner in Beverly Hills and then went scampering around places and doing things. Been a very good girl.

April 5. Worked at the Ambassador Swimming Pool. First time I ever worked on an outside location. Rather thrilled at all the people watching me.

April 6. Worked all day at the Ambassador. Received my first big check for

Go out after supper and come back with $10—$15—$20 or more cash—in your pocket. If you want to make $75 to $100 a week—ready—I've got the proposition you're looking for. I say you can clean up with this new line of Ced-O-Bags and Butterfly Moth Bags and I'll prove it!

$41.80 in 3 Afternoons

Ced-O-Bags have always been fast sellers. Now they're being made in color. Beautiful green, blue, rose. And they come equipped with a new patented slide fastener! Will they sell? Why, my Representatives have been making $10 and $15 a day taking orders for Ced-O-Bags, without the help of color. H. A. Smith, Missouri, made $14 in two hours. Joe Belthazer made $10 in half an hour. W. A. Neal, South Carolina, in three afternoons made $41.80. Now think what you can do with these new, additional selling features.

Get Your Profit in Cash—At Once!

And I haven't told you the whole story yet, I've added Butterfly Moth Bags to my line. They're made of beautiful Egyptian Cretonne in choice of seven color combinations. Women are crazy about them. With a line like this, all you have to do is show your samples and fill out order blanks. You get your profit on the spot. I deliver and collect.

Get Started NOW—Delay Will Cost You Money

Thousands of dollars are just waiting for you right in your neighborhood. But you must act quick. You've got the head start now. But the only way you can keep it is to get in touch with me at once. If you really want $15 to $20 a day—steady and sure—write for details TODAY.

Now anyone who is sincere and ambitious to take off weight safely and without diet or exercise, can secure a 9-day treatment which is generally enough to reduce 5 to 8 pounds for the small sum of $2.00. $250 a week. More thrills. Believe me I'm going to start chucking my money in the bank and buy some good bonds, so that when I'm forty my sex appeal will be of the yellow-back variety.

April 7. Worked all day. Home early.

April 15. Went out to the movies with Buddy Rogers. He is an awfully nice boy. Very wholesome.

April 16. Worked on location. At night Mrs. Reid gave a very lovely party at her home. Lots of interesting people.

April 17. Slept most of the morning and in the afternoon went to a party at Ward Crane's. Had a lot of laughs. He sure is funny.

April 19. Finished Mrs. Reid's picture yesterday. Went shopping this morning. Bought a gorgeous gold brocaded evening wrap. And a nice black satin coat trimmed with white fox. It's grand to be able to buy pretty things for a change.

May 1. Went out to the Cruze home in Flintridge. Met Betty Compson and Jim Cruze. She is absolutely the most interesting girl I've met in pictures. They were very, very sweet to me and I hope I shall know them for a long time.

May 3. Spent a lovely day at Betty Compson's. Had a lot of fun.

May 5. Met Mal St. Clair at Montmartre. Told me he thought he had a nice part for me in Connie Talmadge's picture.

May 6. Signed contract for part in Constance's Breakfast at Sunrise. It's a grand part. I hope I'm good in it. Went riding and visiting with M. Am very fond of him. He's very adorable and I hope we're friends for a long time. And I mean "friends." Men get so darned possessive when they become lovers. Of course a woman likes that for a time but then it becomes boring. And being bored slays me.

May 7. Went to the studio for a while. Then made a personal appearance that night at Loew's State. Scared pink. Afterwards went to the Grove. Met the Hearst boys. They're nice kids.

May 15. At Betty Compson's house again. The more I see of her the better I like her. She's so darned genuine. Lots of interesting people came out to visit. Stayed all night. Sat up 'til almost dawn talking. Decided the perfect man would have Jack Gilbert's eyes and charm, Leslie Fenton's voice, T's mouth. Fell asleep, thinking about it, and had a delicious dream.

May 19. After tangoing every day this week for the picture, went to the Grove and danced some more. Met Buster Collier. He's awfully attractive. Marceline Day was there, too. She's lovely.

May 20. Waited home for a call from N. He didn't call. In the future he can jump in the lake. No more waiting for me. I threw over a lot of dates just to wait for that call. X. sent me a flock of flowers, some perfume and a little stuffed dog. Said he would make a star of me. That's a lot of applesauce. I sent everything back to him except the flowers. Sent them to a hospital. Guess he thinks I'm just hatched, to fall for that old line.

May 24. Worked. Have started going to the Turkish baths. Decided I wanted to get thin. At night a banquet for the First National convention at the Ambassador. Made quite a hit. Everybody rushed me.

May 28. Still working in Constance Talmadge's picture. Mal St. Clair and I made a test for D. W. Griffith. Mal played my leading man. We emoted all over the place. Mr. Griffith predicted a future for me. It sure is encouraging to hear people who really mean something say things like that. Later. Went out to J.'s beach house. Lot of people there, but they were rather boring. Left early and walked along the beach by myself. It's a relief to be alone sometimes.

May 30. Went to a lovely dinner party at the Uplifters. Charlie Paddock and Bebe Daniels and Jack Pickford were there. Flirted with J. S. He was rather annoyed when I told him I never heard of him before. He's a big scenario writer and I guess I should have raved over his stories, but I never knew he wrote. Saw the rushes on Breakfast at Sunrise in the afternoon. Tomorrow is the last day. Rushes are very beautiful, but I doubt if they will be left in the picture. They are much too interesting. Mr. Griffith saw them and said they were very grand.

June 4. Went to a party. Had on a very gorgeous new evening dress. A girl gave me L.'s telephone number.

June 6. Met Leslie Fenton. We took a long ride along the beach. Had a very interesting conversation. Talked books and got very literary. He's a precious lamb. Whoa! Alice, you aren't falling, are you?

June 7. What a night! Almost got myself married. Almost wish we had as he is a very adorable boy. All started by kidding Eddie Brandstatter at Montmartre. He asked us why we didn't get married. We made an interesting looking couple, he said.

June 8. Newspapers full of almost-marriage. I feel terrible. Many people are 'phoning me asking what it's all about. Having a grand time denying it all. Later. Met L. at Henry's with another girl. I'm burnt up! Gosh I must be pretty keen about him if I'm that jealous of him. Maybe this is love!

(To be Continued)

Be sure and read the last instalment of her little Journal in the April issue. Alice meets another man. And then the one who makes her forget everything . . . even her little Red Diary.

A Russian Rhapsody

Baclanova wearing the pajamas of green and silver metal cloth that started a fad in Hollywood—exotic apparel for an exotic lady.

were confused in trying to separate the qualities of her singing voice from her abilities as an actress. The Moscow Art Players aimed at this very effect—to make the composite so fine a thing that individual talent could not be separated from the whole. Her one stipulation in signing a contract with Paramount was that she be given an opportunity to interpret women who are big, intense, dramatic.

"My husband is a lawyer," she tells me, "but oddly enough he has dropped that now and become an actor in Russian picture companies. He does not wish to be divorced!" And it seems as though he has discarded his vocation of barrister to be closer in his professional life to the wife he still loves.

"But I do not love him," Baclanova is decisive. "Soon we will have a divorce for a two-year separation in Russia means that a divorce will be granted—if the wife still wishes it. If necessary, I will get a decree in Russia, another in Paris and one in the United States, too, for I wish it! But it takes time. My letter to my lawyer takes one month from Hollywood to Russia; his replies take another. This all takes much time. Later, I will become an American citizen, then I wish my little boy to come here and live with me."

THERE was a time two years ago when things were very precarious for the Russian player and the hungry brothers and sisters in her native land.

Morris Gest, who brought the Moscow Art Players to this country, later casting Baclanova in The Miracle in which she toured until Gest became ill, told his players his business affairs were in a precarious shape, and he could no longer keep his artists.

Previously, the Moscow Art Theater had sheltered and provided income for her for ten years. Then, under Gest's management, she had been protected. Was it any wonder that when an agent asked her to sign a moving picture contract that she grasped this straw, signed her name to a lot of English agreements that she could not read and understood less?

"And now I have to go to the courts to find out what I signed," she admits. "It seems he thinks he has a a right to collect a big percentage of the salary I have drawn for the past three years!" Her smile is magnetic. There are twinkling lines about her eyes. Little doubt of a judge's decision.

Now she speaks perfect English. The first year she was in New York with the Moscow Art Players she sang entirely in Russian and only learned a few English words. And she has had no teacher, she tells me.

"How did you learn to speak so quickly and so well?" I asked.

"From listening to others at the studio," she explained.

"And from the picture titles," she added innocently. Indicating that to cap all her other virtues, she possesses a splendid sense of humor.

New Million Dollar Can Opening Machine

BRAND NEW INVENTIONS BRINGS FORTUNES TO AGENTS

Here's Something Brand New! An Amazing Simple Invention—Yet, Absolutely Revolutionary! For Now, at One Sweep, Millions of Old Style Can Openers are Doomed to the Scrap Heap! Think of it, Men! A Tremendous New Opportunity for Quick Profits in Every Home in America! No Wonder Agents are Making Astonishing, Almost Incredible Sums—$75, $100, $150 a Week Easily Right Along. So Mail the Coupon for All the Facts and Full Details of My Remarkable FREE TEST OFFER!

ABOUT once in a "Blue moon" some genius pops up with a new invention that everyone has been waiting for. Then, presto! Almost like magic, agents' profits go soaring overnight to tremendous heights! And now the cold, hard-boiled facts about this amazing new can opener bear convincing proof!

More Than a Can Opener

This queer new device doesn't cut a ragged hole around the edge of the can. It lifts the entire top completely out, clean as a whistle! The machine holds the can—opens it—flips up the lid so you can grab it—and gives you back the can without a drop spilled, without any jagged edges to hack your fingers—all in a couple of seconds! You just put the can in the machine—turn the handle—and almost instantly the job is done! Built to do the job better than anything ever devised! Will last a lifetime! It's far more than just a can opener, it's a real can-opening machine!

The Secret of Big Money

Women hate the old style can opener—and with good reason, too. It's the last relic of barbarism in the modern kitchen. Yet every day millions of women have to open cans the dangerous, laborious old-fashioned way. Food is spilled and wasted. Fingers are cut and torn—often followed by infections and blood poisoning that result in expensive doctor bills. Opening cans the old way is a job nasty enough to make most any man swear—this amazing new way—it's so easy a ten-year-old child can do it with perfect safety! No wonder women—and men, too—simply go wild over it!

Works Like a Charm
Just insert can in holder and turn crank. Top is cut completely out inside the "lid" of can. Juices can't spill out. So simple, a child can operate with perfect safety.

No Jagged Edges
Speedo cuts the top out, smooth, slick, and clean. Ends forever the danger of infection from fingers cut on jagged tin edges.

Food Pours Right Out
No fuss or muss. All food pours right out of can without scraping or "spooning." Even foods frozen in the can slip out easily.

A Spectacular New Sales Plan

I want you to see this surprising new invention with your own eyes. I want you to know why everyone, man or woman, falls for it the instant they see it. Whether you are an experienced salesman, or never sold a penny's worth of anything in your life—I want to tell you about a remarkable new sales plan that wins you a profit on every call you make. This plan is made possible by another spectacular money maker in the Speedo line and guarantees you a steady income of up to $150 a week!

...see what this strange book has done for others!

"Worth $10,000"

So far-reaching has been the influence of this singular book—"Instantaneous Personal Magnetism" by Shaftesbury—that it has led countless thousands to success beyond their fondest hopes. For example, J. P., Inglewood, Calif., writes: "I would not part with it for $10,000 if I could not get another!"

Becomes Manager

Not only personal popularity, but financial success as well, comes automatically to those who master Shaftesbury's secrets of Magnetic Power. After he started using the subtle force described below, L. G., Sacramento, Calif., wrote: "I have been advanced to manager of our new store!"

Royal Recognition

Shaftesbury's secrets of Magnetic Power, whispered into the ears of world-famous personages, are said actually to have altered the course of international affairs! Queen Victoria, as well as Gladstone, Cardinal Gibbons and two Presidents of the United States, listened eagerly to this "Man of Mystery."

"Success At Last!"

Magnetic Power—as revealed by Shaftesbury—has been the starting point of more than one brilliant career. For example, Madame Garrigue of the Metropolitan Opera House, writes: "I would not sell the insight it gave me for $1,000"...and L. M. Slater of Omaha writes: "I never dreamed such changes could be possible!"

I'll loan you these secrets of MAGNETIC POWER for 5 days FREE

HERE is one of the most remarkable offers ever presented to the American Public—an opportunity to BORROW, without cost or risk, a book so singular that formerly only people who could pay $25 to $50 were able to secure secrets that it contains.

A strange book!—perhaps the strangest that ever saw the light of day! A book so uncanny that it often alters the whole course of its readers' lives and gives them Magnetic Personality almost instantaneously.

Folks are rarely the same after scanning its glowing pages! Suddenly and unaccountably, they waken to a vital new power surging within them. A power that attracts friends as a magnet attracts steel—a power that revitalizes the body with electrical health and enables them to forge ahead in any business or profession with double speed—a power that can sweep away all obstacles and bring the most priceless gifts that life may bestow.

A Thrilling Experience Awaits You!

When you receive your copy of "Instantaneous Personal Magnetism" by the world-famous Edmund Shaftesbury—now loaned to you for 5 days FREE—make this test! Shut yourself off in a room away from everyone else! Then commence to read! Almost from the first page you become aware of a subtle "something" you cannot call by name. An indescribable feeling stirs within you—a feeling that transforms weakness into strength, nervousness into courage, and failure into SUCCESS!

Yet that is only the beginning! In the days that follow, you are conscious of being guided by a powerful, unseen force you never knew you possessed. Mysteriously, you have quickly become more attractive in the eyes of everyone you know. You find them looking at you in a new light—regarding you with new importance.

People who never seemed drawn to you before suddenly seek out your society and become eager to talk with you. Instead of being arrayed against you, the world becomes anxious to help you and see you succeed. This way you actually draw power from others—for even the wealthy and influential are as clay in the hands of one who has mastered the inner secrets of Magnetic Power and Personality.

But the most surprising thing is the fact that even your closest friends cannot fathom the change that has come over you. They see you forging ahead, dominating situation after situation, winning out with clock-like regularity. They marvel—utterly baffled—while YOU, secure in the possession of your newly acquired power, sit back and smile to yourself at their bewilderment! Just picture yourself in such a situation! It is an experience that comes once in a lifetime!

Fascinating Beyond Words

The first half hour you spend with "Instantaneous Personal Magnetism" will open your eyes to things you have probably never dreamed of—for Shaftesbury has consented to disclose hundreds of discoveries never put in print before. Step by step, he reveals HOW to develop Magnetic Personality; HOW to use certain Oriental Secrets; HOW to read people's feelings by watching their lips; HOW to control others by a glance; HOW to attract the opposite Sex; HOW to end awkwardness and timidity; HOW to use Magnetic Healing—these and a hundred equally vital matters. And best of all, he explains everything in such a simple way that you unconsciously start using his secrets at once, without effort or exertion!

Limited Offer—Act NOW!

Is This the Beauty Secret of the Screen Stars?

Can Every Woman Double Her Beauty With Make-Up?

Read the Answer by Hollywood's Make-Up King—Max Factor

Joan Crawford, M-G-M Star of "Our Dancing Daughters" discusses with Max Factor her color harmony in make-up for evening wear.

"WHAT we have discovered in pictures about beauty, about make-up, about cosmetics . . . every woman should know. True! Make-Up is magic . . . but the wand of make-up is not so magical, so mysterious that every woman cannot wave it over herself and produce in her own likeness the vision of beauty she has always dreamed of." And then Max Factor, Hollywood's genius of make-up, creator of make-up for the leading motion picture stars, told me the secrets of make-up which every woman will want to know.

Josephine Dunn, Warner Bros. Star of "The Singing Fool" finds glorious beauty in her own color harmony make-up suggested by Max Factor.

If you would double your beauty . . . listen . . ! In Hollywood, leading screen stars are using a new kind of make-up for social and evening wear. From this experience has come faultless beauty in make-up. Color harmonies in powder, rouge, lipstick and other make-up essentials that produce the most exquisite, life-like beauty effect imaginable, blending in perfect harmony with complexion colorings and personalities.

And each star has her own individual color harmony, too—just the exact shades in each essential to blend into a make-up ensemble exactly suited to her own individual self—suggested by Max Factor to accentuate the allure of natural beauty. No wonder millions silently applaud the fascinating beauty of the stars.

Lupe Velez, United Artists Star featured in "The Gaucho" enthuses about the mystery and fascination Max Factor gives to the eyes with make-up.

"I GAMBLED 2¢ and WON $35,840 in 2 YEARS"

A Story for Men and Women who are dissatisfied with themselves

THIS is the story of a gamble—a 2c risk—which paid me a profit of $35,840 in two years. I am not, and never was, a gambler by nature; in all probability I never would have taken the chance if more money was involved. So even if you, too, are against gambling, you will feel like risking two cents after you've read my story.

Some people believe I was lucky. Others think I am brilliant. But this sort of luck I had everyone can have. My type of brilliance is that of any average man.

Almost any $40-a-week wage earner has as complete a mental equipment as I had two years ago. And he feels today just about the way I did then. For two years ago I, too, was in the $40-a-week rut. My earnings were $2,080 per year!

I was discontented, unhappy. I was not getting ahead. There didn't seem to be much hope in the future. I wanted to earn more money—a lot more money. I wanted to wear better clothes and have a car, and travel. I wanted to be on a par with people I then looked up to. I wanted to feel equal to them mentally and financially.

But it all seemed hopeless. I was beset with fears. I was afraid of losing my job. I was afraid of the future. I could see nothing ahead for myself and my wife and baby but a hard struggle. I would live and work and die—just one of the millions who slaved their lives away. I was irritable, easily annoyed, discouraged, "sore" at my fate and at the world. I could not think clearly. My mind was in a constant whirl. I was "scatterbrained." I had a thousand half-baked ideas to make more money, but acted on none of them.

The end of each year found me in about the same position as the beginning. The tiny increases in salary, grudgingly given to me, were just about enough to meet the rising costs of living. Rent was higher; clothes cost more; food was more expensive. It was necessary for me to earn more money. So once in a while I got a few dollars more. But it wasn't because of any great change in my ability.

Today I have an income of $20,000 a year. That's exactly $17,920 more than it was two years ago. A difference of $35,840 in two years. My family has everything it needs for its comfort and pleasure. My bank account is growing rapidly. I have my own home in the suburbs. I am respected by my neighbors, and I have won my wife and children's love as only the comforts and pleasures of life can do.

When I am old I will not be a millstone around anyone's neck. My children will not have to support me.

I look forward to the future with confidence and without fear. I know that only improvement can come with the years. Once I wandered through life aimlessly, cringing, afraid. Today I have a definite goal and the will to reach it. I know I cannot be beaten. Once my discontent resulted in wishes. Today my slightest discontent results in action. Once I looked forward hopefully to a $5 a week increase in salary. Today I look forward confidently to a $100 a week increase in my earnings.

What magic was it that caused the change in my circumstances? How did I, a $40-a-week clerk, change my whole life so remarkably? I can give you the answer in one word—Pelmanism. I gambled 2c on it. Yet without it, I might have continued in my old $40-a-week rut for the rest of my life.

Pelmanism taught me how to think straight and true. It crystallized my scattered ideas. It focused my aim on one thing. It gave me the will power to carry out my ideas. It dispelled my fears. It improved my memory. It taught me how to concentrate—how to observe keenly. Initiative, resourcefulness, organizing ability, forcefulness were a natural result. I stopped putting things off. Inertia disappeared. Mind-wandering and indecision were things of the past. With new allies on my side and old enemies beaten, there was nothing to hold me back.

I am writing this in appreciation of what Pelmanism did for me. I want other average men to gamble 2c as I did. For the cost of a postage stamp I sent for the booklet about Pelmanism, called "Scientific Mind Training." Reading that free book started me on my climb. I took no risk when I enrolled for the Course because of the Institute's guarantee. All I gambled was 2c and I am $36,000 better off now than I would have been had I not written for the book about Pelmanism.

* * * * *

The Pelman Institute will be glad to send a copy of "Scientific Mind Training" to any interested individual. This book is free. It explains Pelmanism. It tells what it does to the mind. It tells what Pelmanism has meant to others. For over 25 years Pelmanism has been helping people to happiness. Over 650,000 others have studied this remarkable science. Among those who have praised it are such great world figures as Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Jerome K. Jerome, Sir Harry Lauder, T. P. O'Connor, Major-Gen. Sir Frederick Maurice, H. R. H. Prince Charles of Sweden, and many others. Your whole life may be altered as a result of reading "Scientific Mind Training." Send the coupon. You have nothing to lose. I Made $4,500 in One Sale

How, after 12 years' hard work as a railroad brakeman, I got into real estate, and now make more in a month than I used to make in a year

By L. C. CLARKE

(Address furnished on request)

FOR twelve years I was a brakeman on the Mohawk Division of the New York Central. During that time my wages averaged exactly $638.40 a year.

Then I got started in the real estate business, and during the past year I made one sale that gave me a commission of $4,500, which is more than I made on the railroad in seven years of hard work.

And I don't feel that I have done anything wonderful—anything the other fellow can't do if he will; I simply got into the right kind of business—a business of big opportunities—a business where big money is made.

You—who are reading these words—can do what I have done if you have a mind to. You don't need education, experience, capital or influence. I didn't have any of these things.

I had to leave school when I was thirteen, so I had mighty little education. I had no real estate experience. I never earned more than just enough to keep me out of the poor-house, so I had no capital. And, as for influence, where would a $50-a-month brakeman get any?

And you don't have to go to a big town to succeed. I am located in a little New York State town of only 3,000 population.

Of course, I am pretty enthusiastic about the real estate business. I think it's the greatest business in the world. It has more advantages and bigger opportunities than any other business I know of. It is as permanent as the earth itself. It is almost unlimited in its possibilities—about ten million properties are always on the market. It is easy to learn. You don't need capital to get started, as you do in almost any other business. The business can't grow smaller—it keeps getting bigger as population increases. And you can get started in the business right at home in your spare time. When I realize that I have an independent, enjoyable business of my own, a good home, two automobiles, and every convenience and comfort a sane man could want I sometimes find it hard to believe that I'm the same fellow that put in twelve long years of hard work as a railroad brakeman.

And I'm not the only one who has taken advantage of this wonderful business opportunity and pulled himself out of the rut of routine work. Chas. F. Worthen, formerly a salesman, did, and he made $8,500 in 17 weeks. H. G. Stewart made $14,400 in less than six months. Anthony C. Maurell made $4,100 in 3 months. M. J. Stokes, a Pennsylvania man, made $900 in three months, just in his spare time. H. J. Dwillard, of Michigan, was fitted to hold the position of Sales Manager of the largest contractors' and builders' real estate department in his city.

Now, if you are kicking about what I used to kick about—long hours, hard work and poor pay—if you want to get into a business where you can have the biggest kind of an opportunity to make good—simply send your name and address to American Business Builders, Inc., Dept. D-82, 18 East 18 St., New York, and they will send you without cost or obligation, a copy of their free book, "How to Become a Real Estate Specialist."

In five minutes after you start reading this fascinating book, you will agree with me that you have at last struck the best business opportunity that ever came your way—an opportunity to learn a splendid money-making business and get started—right at home—in your spare time—without capital or experience—in a safe, sound, independent business of your own.

So get busy, if you want to grab something big. If you are ambitious to make something of yourself—get ahead—make more money—this is one chance you can't afford to let slip out of your grasp. It costs you nothing to find out what there is in this for you. You take no risk. So, mail the coupon at once. Take my word for it, you will never regret the day you sent for this free book. And some day you may do just what I did—put through a deal that will put more money in your bank account than you ever saw in one pile before.

$1,000 Reward

Here's the proof that this is the biggest money-making opportunity of all: ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS IN GOLD will be paid to anyone who shows us any other business course of any kind that has helped as MANY men and women make as MUCH money in as SHORT a time as our remarkably successful Real Estate Course.

Fan Clubs

News of all the fan clubs appears each month in this department. Any fan wishing to receive information about the clubs or their secretaries, is invited to write Grace Simpson, conductor of this department, Box 1757, SCREEN SECRETS, Minneapolis, Minn.

Snappy Magazine

THE International Motion Picture Enthusiasts, of Los Angeles, is now putting out bi-monthly a big, attractive club magazine. The magazine contains news of many other clubs and also many snappy editorials, jokes, cartoons, short stories, and general articles. It is edited by Alice Furer. Dues to this club are $1.00 per year, which includes the magazine every other month. It welcomes suggestions from you and also wants clean and inspirational articles, essays, poems and anything that may be published in the club paper that will be of interest to the fans.

More Patrons For Lina

ANOTHER fan club for Lina Basquette has just been formed by a young lady of Muncie, Indiana, whose name is Georgia Sargent. The club issues a journal called The Flyer and it makes its appearance every three months. In the next issue will commence a serial story written by Miss Sargent.

Membership Contest

IDA AISPUR'S Ben Lyon Club, with headquarters at Minneapolis, now has a membership of 920. Dues are twenty-five cents yearly. A club journal entitled The Buzzer, is issued from time to time and for this a small extra charge is made. Miss Aispur offers the following prizes to her members in a perpetual "new membership" contest (not including special ones): For five new members—one year's free membership in club; ten new members—club pin; fifteen new members—diary; twenty new members—Eversharp pencil; and twenty-five new members—a year's subscription to any movie magazine.

A Pledge To Buddy

A MERRY band of young people of Boulder, Colorado, have joined hands and formed another Buddy Rogers club, headed by Paul McCallister. This club to date has 350 members and is steadily growing. They are planning a paper, have elected officers and are seeking further recognition. The following is their pledge to Buddy Rogers and the model whereby they pay tribute to his acting:

"We—the members of The Buddy Rogers Club, do hereby recognize him (Buddy Rogers) as our model actor in portraying young America on the screen. As youth, we commend his personal, screen and public life to every young boy or girl wishing by copying his ideals to further better ourselves and to instill a liking into every heart—young and old—for cleaner and better pictures as played by Mr. Rogers."

Charles (Buddy) Rogers shows his appreciation of his tremendous fan mail by sitting down and devoting a great deal of his time to writing his admirers personally.

All-Star Organization

ANOTHER new club is the All-Star Fan Club, of which Eddie Atkins is President and Founder. It is only five months old and so far has thirty members. Dues are fifty cents a year, which includes the usual club privileges and a free subscription to the club newssheet which will be out very shortly.

June Collyer Assists

THE June Collyer Fan Club, with head office in Hollywood, is coming along very nicely and June herself is very much interested in its welfare. In fact, she has offered to send a large eleven by fourteen photograph of herself out free to the first new club member who signs up in the club for two years. Due to the club are twenty-five cents a year—this means that the first young lady or man who sends in fifty cents for two years' membership will receive the big, beautiful photo from June.

Audrey's Admirers

THE Audrey Ferris Fan Club, of Hollywood, is rapidly growing in membership and popularity, and now the club is offering attractive bundles of stars' photographs to the next five members who enroll for two years in the club—dues for the two years being fifty cents in advance (in either stamps or coin). Each bundle averages ten pictures of popular players and each one is autographed. There's a bargain for you!

Richard Dix' Club

THE club colors of the Richard Dix Club have been chosen as purple and white. All their printed matter is done in those two colors, which makes it look very unique. The club symbol is the lion, because it symbolizes the strength and character of Richard Dix; and the club flower is the orange blossom, because it is a symbol of purity, love and happiness, and its beauty is enchanting.

I Sell Records a Queer Way

So people tell me, because I will gladly send to any person who sends me his name and address, a selection of ten records absolutely ON TRIAL, entirely at my risk. Choose any records you want.

Furthermore, I positively insist that you return the records to me at once, if they are in any way inferior to records that sell for three or four times as much. Don't be "sorry" for me, but shoot the records back, and let me stand the postage expense both ways, unless the records are better, clearer and richer in tone than any records you have ever before had, at any price.

I have built a million-dollar business in records on just these "queer" methods, trusting absolutely in the honesty of my customers, and making them the sole judge of whether or not the records will cost them even one cent.

I've built these records to give you pleasure, enjoyment and some real honest good times for months and years to come. I've tried to study the wishes and tastes of the great music-loving public and I've collected in this list below, the very CREAM of my entire catalog. All the records are electrically recorded—and nearly all of them have been done within the last few months, and are in the very latest and best style of the present day. They are all in the standard ten-inch size with music on both sides and play on any phonograph, just like 75-cent records. They include the most recent hits, as well as famous old favorites, and I'm willing to stake my last dollar that they are GOOD.

Choose any ten records you want and simply write their catalog number on coupon below. Send no money. See terms on coupon and see how fully I protect you in every way.

Now You Can Reduce 2 to 4 Lbs. in a Night

Eat what you please
Wear what you please
Do what you please
Take no risky medicine

Send the Coupon for your first three Fayro Baths

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs are now Brought to You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Lose Weight Where You Most Want to

Fayro reduces weight generally but you can also concentrate its effects on abdomen, hip, legs, ankles, chin or any part of the body you may wish.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost from 2 to 4 pounds. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. Soon you will be the correct weight for your height. No need to deny yourself food you really want. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

Try Fayro at Our Risk

The regular price of Fayro is $1.00 a package. With the coupon you get 3 full-size packages and an interesting booklet "Health and Open Pores" for $2.50 plus the necessary postage. Send no money. Pay the postman. Your money refunded instantly if you want it.

HERE'S PROOF

I GUARANTEE NEW HAIR

in These Three Places—

OR DON'T PAY ME A CENT!

ARE you sincerely anxious to be done with dandruff, itchy scalp, falling hair and baldness? Do you really want to grow new hair?

Perhaps you've already tried hard to overcome these afflictions. Perhaps you've put faith in barbershop "tips," and used all kinds of salves, massages, tonics, all with the same results . . . lots of trouble and expense but no relief!

Now, consider what I offer you. And figure out for yourself what a handsome proposition it is. I GUARANTEE to grow new hair on your head—on the top, front or temples—IN 30 DAYS . . . or not one red penny of cost to you.

Isn't that a different story from those you've heard before? I don't say, "try my wonderful remedy—it grows hair!" I say, and I put it in writing, "I GUARANTEE to grow hair . . . or no cost!"

My Method is Unique!

Naturally, you say to yourself, "How can anyone make such a guarantee? It's hard to grow hair. I know, for I've tried a lot of things and failed."

Ah that's exactly the reason thousands who formerly suffered from scalp troubles bless the day they heard of me. For my treatment is based on science, on years and years of research. I studied scalps, not how to sell treatments. And I found, as did leading dermatologists, that ordinary surface treatments of the scalp are futile. Baldness begins at the ROOTS. If roots are dead, nothing can grow new hair. But in most cases, roots are only sleeping, waiting for the right treatment to bring them back to healthy, normal life.

I Reach the Roots

Now, I leave it to you. How can ordinary treatments penetrate to the roots of your hair? How can ordinary tonics or salves remove the real cause of baldness?

My treatment goes below the scalp, right down to the hair roots, awakening them to new action. My treatment works surely and quickly, all the while stimulating the tiny blood vessels around the roots to new life and action. And with just the mere investment of a few minutes a day, thousands get these results from my treatment . . . or they never pay a cent!

DANGER: One, two, three—BALD! And perhaps total baldness, say leading dermatologists, if you neglect any one of the three places shown above. But so gradually does hair depart, so insidiously does baldness creep up on the average man, that thousands fail to heed the warnings. But there is hope for everyone, no matter how thin the hair. Read my message to men growing bald. Study my guarantee. Then ACT!

I Welcome Investigation

Do you want absolute proof of the true cause and proper treatment of baldness? Consult your family physician. Or look up medical reference books.

Do you want positive proof that I can and do apply these accepted scientific principles? I offer you the best proof of all . . . my personal guarantee, backed up by the Merke Institute, Fifth Avenue, New York.

A Square Deal Guaranteed!

Others may make rosy but flimsy promises. I could do that too! But I don't. I couldn't afford to, for every statement I make is guaranteed by the Merke Institute. This scalp research bureau, established 13 years, is known to thousands from Coast to Coast. It has a reputation to keep up. It wouldn't dare to back me if I didn't tell the truth. So when I guarantee to grow hair or not a penny of cost, you're absolutely sure of a square deal.

Why Suffer Years of Regret?

Before you turn this page take a look in the mirror at those thin spots on your head! Think how you'll look when all your hair is gone. Consider how much prestige and attractiveness you'll lose. Then decide to act at once! Right now, tear out the coupon shown below and mail it in for the FREE booklet giving my complete story. In it you'll find, not mere theories, but scientific FACTS, and the details of my "hair grown or no pay" offer. My treatment can be used in any home where there is electricity. Send the coupon NOW! And by return mail the booklet is yours without the slightest obligation. Allied Merke Institutes, Inc., Dept. 484, 512 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

SCREEN SECRETS

The Prospect of Better Pictures

Captain Roscoe Fawcett
Editor

THE happy forecast for 1929, is fewer and better pictures. On this most of the giant producers are agreed, and, if it proves to be the case, the years that follow 1929 are not likely to show a return to the former flood of hasty, inferior movie fare. To do so would be unprofitable, because the movie fans have shown their preference for really worth while pictures—and have shown their ability to choose.

Right You Are!

THIS last is the important thing: The fans know good pictures when they see them. They have demonstrated their critical ability and sound judgment beyond all doubt, especially during the year just past. Because 1928 did bring forth good pictures, several of them, and the reward of these pictures was overwhelming success. No longer is it considered such juicy stuff for allegedly high-brow movie critics and commentators to crack wise about the low standards of public taste, to concoct near-funny remarks to the effect that only trash can win box-office success. Such hooey falls flat for the ridiculous thing it is when one considers the almost uncanny accuracy with which the public has selected the true and the intelligent on the screen, in unmistakable numbers.

Comely Comedy

ONE excellent omen, indicating that the new regime is almost upon us, is the plan for a series of elaborate musical comedies to be produced by Fox. An excellent omen, I say, because of the astounding strides forward recently taken by the Fox Company in the production of short sound subjects. Already this enterprising organization has laid before the public several short features of superlative excellence, intelligently, amusingly presented. It is Fox, for example, that is responsible for the public's opportunity to see Robert C. Benchley in his civilized but hilariously funny renditions of well-known types in ludicrous situations. Bringing this great humorist from his secure but limited position in literary circles, and placing his genius before movie audiences was a daring venture—rewarded by the overwhelming acceptance accorded his work by the public.

Lass But Not Least

THE marriage of Rosabelle Laemmle to Stanley Bergerman, Los Angeles business man, is of more than a little importance to the screen industry. She is the daughter of "Uncle Carl" Laemmle, of Universal, and has had a voice of no slight authority in the court of highest resort in that important film organization. If Rosabelle said a story was bum or an actor wasn't handsome, well, it was a bum story and he was out and that was that. If Rosabelle had said that Hamlet was a punk play, Uncle Carl would have dug up Shakespeare's bones and thrown them in the river. She is a clever girl with a remarkable power of theatrical intuition.

Being Herself

IN ADDITION to being a gifted actress, Lina Basquette inspires respect for her independence. According to popular report, she sacrificed her large inheritance from the estate of her late husband, Sam Warner, when she marched to the altar recently with Peverell Marley. And while other stars were hiding their children under the bed to conceal the frightful fact that they were mammas, Lina sent out her young daughter's picture as a Christmas card, and even appeared with her at the Montmartre, for luncheon.

The Heavenly Host

ALTHOUGH Christmas is long since past, Hollywood is still talking about the Christmas card which Betty Compson and Jimmy Cruze sent out. It was a cartoon two feet long and a foot high, representing the Cruze home under the perplexities of hospitality. Jimmie is one of the few movie Tycoons who remembers the friends of his early days of struggle and poverty, and they remember him. They come by troops and they come to board. They object to his brand of liquor; take away his books and clutter up his house. The whole sad story was told in this cartoon Christmas card. Not that it will do any good, of course; for, after all, Jimmy and his charming wife, Betty Compson, are most hospitable, the meals tasty and the chairs very comfortable. I know, for I have been there myself on more than one memorable occasion.

The Pathos of Glory

CHARLIE CHAPLIN is now engaged in making what looks to me to be the greatest picture of his career. I have heard the outline of the picture and I take off my hat to him. It sounds like one of the finest screen stories ever written. Perhaps it would be better to say concocted. Charlie never writes his picture. He makes it up as he goes along.

In this picture it looks as though the tragic element were to be stressed more than the comic. Charlie plays the part of a poor little street bum who befriends a blind flower seller. It is given to few artists to be able to portray subtle shades of humor and pathos as Charlie does.

WHO KILLED William Desmond Taylor

THIS story begins with Miss Mabel Normand buying some peanuts.

She had had a telephone call from her friend William Desmond Taylor. He wanted her to come to his apartment to get a book he had found for her. Taylor was one of the greatest of all motion picture directors at that time. Mabel was a well-known and charming actress.

So, on this day—February 1, 1922—Mabel started in her big car to go to his apartment to get a book.

Impetuous child that she always has been, she stopped at a stand en route to make two purchases—a bag of peanuts and a Police Gazette.

While the limousine purred on through the Los Angeles streets, Mabel sat on the cushions of the back seat, munching peanuts. By the time the car got to the Alvarado Apartments, the limousine looked like the bleachers at a circus—lacking the pink lemonade.

The Alvarado Apartments were at 404 South Alvarado Street, near West Lake Park. This was before all the movie stars emigrated to Beverly Hills, and was a favorite neighborhood. At right angles to Taylor's apartment lived Mr. and Mrs. Douglas McLean. Adjoining was the apartment of Edna Purviance.

Taylor was at once the favorite and the mystery of Hollywood. He was a charming, self-contained, dignified, cultured gentleman. Every one thought of him as English, but he was Irish.

His real name was Tanner. His father was a squire of a great old Irish family. At sixteen, young Tanner ran away from home because his father wouldn't let him be an actor.

HE BECAME successively, a rancher in Harper, Kansas, a gold-rush miner in Alaska and a motion picture director. He had directed Betty Compson, Mary Pickford, Mary Miles Minter, Constance Talmadge, George Beban, Dustin Farnum, Wally Reid, Florence Rockwell, Myrtle Stedman, Edna Goodrich, Vivian Martin, Kathleen Williams, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, House Peters, Elsie Ferguson, and many others.

Every one he had worked with was devoted to him; and a large proportion of the young ladies fell in love with him. But they all stood a little in awe of him. He was not the kind of man who told of himself or his private affairs, a fact which later complicated the police problem.

Even Mabel stood a little in awe of him; and Mabel is awed by few.

When the limousine drew up in front of the Alvarado Apartments, she requested her chauffeur, in a little scared voice, to clean up the peanut shells before he should see them. Then she went into the house.

At the entrance, she drew back. Taylor was telephoning to somebody. A woman was on the other end of the line. It was Mrs. Marguerite Burger, an income tax expert. That telephone call was afterward to have an important police significance.

Taylor finished his conversation and advanced to meet Mabel. He greeted her with well-bred cordiality and gave her the book he had found. It was a heavy tome on German philosophy. Taylor and Mabel Normand were among the few in Hollywood who did any heavy reading.

He asked her if she would stay for dinner; but she was tired and had an early call at the studio. As he said goodbye at the door of her car, he made a remark:

"Here you are—Freud and Nietzsche under one arm and the Police Gazette under the other."

"Yes," said Mabel, "and I wish I could get hold of an old Joe Miller's Joke Book. That would make the list complete."

As Mabel got into her limousine and rolled away, she waved goodbye. It was an eternal farewell. They were never to see each other again.

Taylor went back into his rooms and began working over his income tax returns. A soft step interrupted him. It was his negro servant, Henry Peavey. He had laid

1. Who wrote Taylor passionate love notes?
2. Where did Sands go after looting Taylor's apartment?
3. What enemy in the British Army had a score to settle with Taylor?
4. Why did Taylor closely conceal his past life?
5. Who received a large portion of Taylor's enormous salary?

The First of an Amazing Series of Unsolved Mysteries of Hollywood—by Harry Carr.

out Mr. Taylor's night things, turned back the bed and had come to say good-night.

"You may go, Henry," said the director without looking up.

HENRY softly closed the door and went out. Once in the street, he remembered something. He stopped at a drug store and bought some milk of magnesia for Mr. Taylor. He was accustomed to provide for Taylor's wants out of his own money. At intervals, Taylor would ask: "How much do I owe you, Henry?" Then there would be a settlement.

Henry bought the milk of magnesia and went back to the apartment.

Coming in, he saw a pair of upturned feet in the middle of the floor; then the body of Taylor lying near an upturned chair. He was stone dead.

The frightened colored boy ran out into the court yard and raised the alarm. It was about 7:45 at night.

The McLeans came; Edna Purviance came. A little later, Edna telephoned the news to Mabel that Taylor was dead of heart trouble.

As a matter of routine, the police came and also the undertaker. The first policeman turned in a report that Taylor had died apparently of heart trouble and turned the body over to the undertaker.

At the undertaking parlors, they undressed the body and prepared it for burial. Under the left arm, the attendent was astonished to find a bullet hole. It was almost closed.

An autopsy surgeon being hastily summoned, it was found that Taylor had been killed by a revolver bullet. It had been fired into his body at close range. The bullet had plowed nearly all the way through his body, passing just below the heart. It was fired slightly from behind and at the side.

In making a close examination of Taylor's clothes it was found that the bullet hole in the coat did not exactly correspond with the hole in the vest.

This was sure indication that Taylor's arms were not in the usual normal position. One theory is that he was holding up his arms above his head in response to a command; another theory that he was reaching for the chair that was found overturned near his body.

If he were reaching for the chair it would seem that a controversy had taken place and that, in all probability, he knew his assailant. If holding up his hands, it was considered more likely he had been taken by surprise.

Mabel Normand, close friend of William Desmond Taylor, unknowingly bade him eternal farewell, a few hours before his death.

Mary Miles Minter, whose autographed picture adorned Taylor's piano—was she the author of the flaming love notes written him in code?

WITHIN an hour, Hollywood was wild with excitement. Police swarmed into the place with the reporters. Unfortunately souvenir hunters swarmed first. Undoubtedly they carried away—in the opinion of police—what might have been the clew to the still-unsolved mystery. If the murderer left the gun, the souvenir hunters carried that off.

An investigation was made—first of his house; then of his life.

The only sign of disturbance was an upturned chair. On the piano were two framed photographs—of Mary Miles Minter and of Mary Pickford.

Mary Pickford's bore the inscription, "To my nice director, William Taylor, the most patient man I have ever known—Mary Pickford."

On Miss Minter's picture was written: "For William Desmond Taylor—artist and gentleman. Mary Miles Minter."

On his desk was a half-finished income tax report. In a drawer his check book.

This check book was seized upon by the police as an important clew. It showed a bank balance of $6,653 cash. All the other assets that were ever found amounted to $24,001.24.

Taylor had been drawing a salary of $1,000 a week for a long time. What had he done with all his money? He lived very simply; made no important investments. He had been drawing large checks of which no record was ever found.

To the minds of the police, this could have but one explanation—blackmail.

AMONG other effects were found a woman's pink night gown of dainty and luxurious material. In a part of his mail were found a number of letters from Mabel Normand. She said she had been trying to get them back. They had no significance; they were just affectionate, witty, brilliant letters.

In one of his riding boots in a closet were found others —letters of love so warm they would leave blisters on an alligator's back. They were written in code.

Here are some of milder extracts:

"What shall I call you, wonderful man? I want to go away with you up in the hills, anywhere just so we could be alone."

"Wouldn't it be glorious to sit in a big comfy couch by a cozy warm fire with the wind whistling outside, trying to harmonize with the faint strains of music coming from the Victrola?"

"I would sweep and dust (they make the sweetest dust caps, you know). Oh, yes, and fix the table and help you wash the dishes and then, in my spare time, darn your socks.

Mabel Normand, as she appeared in a Hal Roach two-reel comedy at the height of her career as a comedienne when Taylor's death occurred.

"I'd go to my room and put on something scant and flowing; then I would lie on the couch and wait for you. I might fall asleep for a fire makes me drowsy. Then I would awake and find two strong arms around me and two dear lips pressed to mine in a long sweet kiss."

Another in the same code:

"I love you—Oh, I love you so. God, I love you so."

There was a P. S. with a butterfly crest saying: "I love you—I love you—I love you."

These letters were seized as a very important clew. They were signed "Mary." But they were not from Mary Pickford. Every detective has his own idea as to which Mary. Hollywood is full of Marys.

THERE is no intention to insinuate that she was necessarily the author of these letters, but Mary Miles Minter was in love with Taylor. Her mother said it was just a little girl love.

Anyhow, as soon as Taylor's death became known, Miss Minter went flying to the house with her mother—in a tempest of hysterics. Then she went alone to see Mabel Normand.

Mabel received her in a thoroughly Mabelesque manner. She dragged the weeping young lady into her bath room.

"Here," she said. "Turn on the water before you begin to talk. If somebody has a dictaphone concealed here, this will drown out the sound of our talk."

One set of detectives began exploring Taylor's past; another set snooped around the neighborhood. Both found important facts.

Taylor was discovered to have had an army record in the Royal Fusiliers—a British regiment. While in the army, like many officers, he roused the enmity of an enlisted man whom he had disciplined. Some one remembered Taylor's having pointed out a man on a Hollywood street, saying: "There is a man who says he will kill me if he has to wait a lifetime." From Tia Juana came the news that a war veteran had been boasting, after Taylor's death, that he had settled his score with one ————.

Among other things, it was discovered that Taylor had been married before; that he had a grown daughter. Also that he was supporting the wife of his brother who had disappeared.

One fact came out that was considered as having great importance.

Taylor had had a secretary. His name was Sands. Mabel Normand described him as a quiet but very servile person. Taylor trusted him. Even with checks. About a year before the murder he had gone to England to make a picture. Edward Knoblauch, the British dramatist, was at that time in Hollywood. They made an arrangement whereby Taylor took over Knoblauch's London house and the English servants therein. Noblock took Taylor's apartment—and Sands.

When Taylor came back he found that Sands had given the place French leave. He had forged Taylor's name to a stream of checks. Among other things he might have bought with the bogus checks was the pink silk lingerie found in the Taylor apartment.

Just before Christmas—a month before Taylor was killed, there came a note from Stockton, California. The note was signed "Alias Jimmie Valentine" and inclosed some pawn tickets—for Taylor's stolen property. The tickets were in the name of Mrs. Tennant, Taylor's sister-in-law. In complaining to the police, Taylor said he was sure they were written by Sands as the latter always misspelled Mrs. Tennant's name.

Taylor lost in that burglary something that proved to be an important clew—a carton of imported cigarettes of unusual brand.

The police tried to find Sands after the burglary and before the murder. It is possible that Taylor heard threats from him during the pursuit. At any rate, Mrs. Burger, the income tax expert, told the police what she and Taylor were talking about over the 'phone when Mabel Normand came in. She said that Taylor said he regretted complaining to the police about Sands.

THEN Mrs. Douglas McLean came into the picture. She said that she had seen a man go quietly out of the door—just after the fatal shot was heard. The man was wearing a plaid golf cap. He stopped at the door; looked back; then shut the door very softly and left, quickly.

The Alvarado Apartments, at 404 South Alvarado Street, Los Angeles, where Taylor lived when he was murdered by his mysterious assailant. The diagram above shows details of the ghastly scene discovered by his negro butler. Note the nightgown and love letters which played such an important part in the investigation.

Mrs. McLean's maid said that, about the time Miss Normand was in the house she saw a man lurking around the back alley. The police searched the spot where she had seen the man. They found the half-smoked butts of six or seven of Taylor's stolen imported cigarettes.

A hot search then started for Sands. Looking up his record, it was learned that he had deserted from the navy and had worn various and sundry names. The police have never found him. A man of his description tried to get a job in Vancouver cooking for an expedition starting for a treasure hunt on Cocos Island. A man of his description committed suicide in a little town in Connecticut a year ago. A man of his description was shadowed by detectives in Chicago for trying to get hold of young girls by promising them movie jobs. But he was never found.

Meanwhile the Sands theory was seriously punctured by the confession of a crook named "Harry the Chink." To the police of Detroit, he confessed that he had acted as chauffeur for a gang of bootleggers who went in to Taylor's house to collect a booze bill and killed him when he refused to pay.

This confession was hardly cold when the runner for a narcotic gang was arrested in Los Angeles—and finally the whole gang. The discarded sweetheart of one of the hop heads said the gang had killed Taylor because he had rescued a famous motion picture star from their clutches.

This confession was in turn paled by the statement of a man who wrote to the police—forgetting to sign his name. He said that he had discovered that his wife was a sweetheart of Taylor's. To restore the amity of the family, they went together to Taylor's apartment that night. He went in the front door, she in the back. While he stood there, his wife went up to Taylor and said: "Well, William, dear, I see you still hold your fascination for women." Then she shot him. And they fled.

MEANWHILE the police began working on two other theories. That Taylor was shot by a film star who was jealous of Taylor because of Mabel Normand; by a boy who was jealous of him because of Mary Miles Minter.

Any of these theories is logical; to all there is objection.

One hundred and ten people will win cash prizes!
Are you going to be one of them?

Can you fit the picture together? Fun for all the family will be found in this novel new contest for 110 cash prizes.

WITH the announcement of the winners of the popular "Guess Who?" contest which appears in this issue of SCREEN SECRETS, a new contest offering $1,500.00 in prizes is offered for your delectation.

SCREEN SECRETS Magazine will give one hundred and ten cash prizes for the solutions to this new Cut Puzzle Contest, which begins in this number.

Four puzzle pictures will be published in this magazine, the other three to be similar to the puzzle which appears on the opposite page. Each puzzle picture will show, when properly assembled, a group of three well known motion picture stars.

The object of the contest is to cut out the puzzles, put them together by fitting the pieces, then name the stars. When this is done, choose one player from the group and write a short biography of him or her—just the briefest outline (not over one hundred words) of the player's life.

The winners will be those who send in to SCREEN SECRETS Magazine the four correctly assembled puzzle pictures and names of the stars, in the neatest arrangement, with the most interesting brief histories of four of the players.

Do not send your entries in until the close of the contest. All entries must be sent by first-class mail, prepaid. Parcel post will not do, since the contributions will contain written matter. Entries must reach the Contest Editor not later than July 15, 1929.

GET OUT your shears and test your wits now! It's all very simple. To get the best results, it is advisable to first paste the puzzle on stiff paper, then take scissors and carefully cut out the pieces. Next, paste the pieces together on cardboard.

After the puzzle is properly put together, you should have no difficulty in recognizing three well known stars. Write their names below the puzzle, and put the cut out away in an envelope until the last puzzle has been published. It will be easier to write the four brief biographies after all four puzzles have been assembled.

To help you in getting up your essays, SCREEN SECRETS Magazine will publish each month a short life history of various famous stars. You will find this new feature begun this month in the back part of this magazine. "Who's Who in Filmland" should make a valuable addition to any fan's scrapbook, for it will provide the only authentic and up-to-date biographical collection now available.

Watch for the next puzzle in the May issue, on sale April 10. It will be no harder to solve than this one. Get out your shears and paste now, read the rules, and get into the game. A few minutes with this pastime may bring you one of the big cash awards. Can you think of an easier way to get paid for having a good time?

Cut Puzzle Contest

Here is cut puzzle No. 1. The remaining three will appear in the May, June, and July issues of SCREEN SECRETS Magazine. Sharpen your scissors and try this fascinating game. The prizes are worth while, and the contest is open to everyone. Can you fit the pieces together? Try it!

So This is

CECIL B. DE MILLE surprised the local boys when he went to Broadway to choose the leading man for his new picture, Dynamite. Everyone did think C. B. would stand by the old-homers.

We met Charles Bickford, the lucky one, the day after his arrival. He has a shock of red hair, a rough and ready face—

"Why, you're a junior George Bancroft," we exclaimed.

"George Bancroft? Oh, yes, he's a good actor, too," was the modest answer from Bickford.

Perhaps De Mille was right and the kid does belong in this city.

Just a Modest Meal

BICKFORD arrived on his birthday. De Mille gave a breakfast for him and offered this toast in his honor:

"Here's to the Birthday Kid. May he always have as good a director!"

Anita Grand and Glorious Feeling!

ANITA STEWART had to go out of Hollywood to announce her engagement to George Peabody Converse. They went to San Francisco to do it. Anita had to go there for a personal appearance. George's betrothal present to Anita was a $10,000 automobile. Converse is the son of the late Edmund Cogswell Converse, ex-president of the United States Steel Corporation. They met at an attorney's office. Both have been divorced. They plan on marrying about July 4 of this year, when her divorce from Rudy Cameron becomes final.

For Pet's Sake!

STUDIO workers paid Mary Duncan a big tribute and when they do this it must be to a regular fellow. Miss Duncan has a Sealyham, and wherever she went about the studio the canine followed. So the men on the set got together and built a dog house for Miss Duncan—an exact replica of the ranch house in which Mary played in Our Daily Bread, the recent F. W. Murnau opus. It's just enough for the dog to live in. And was Mary happy? Now she knows who her friends really are.

Mex Appeal

LUPE VELEZ has a new screen rival. Delia Magana, the little girl who stepped into Lupe's shoes as the most popular actress in Mexico when Lupe went to Hollywood, has been signed by the Fox Company. She is four feet, eleven inches tall with eleven feet, four inches of pep and vitality. Her first role is the lead in Robert Flaherty's Nanook of the Desert.

Well, Lupe has surely given Dolores Del Rio a run for her money. It will be great sport to watch this new Mexican baby go after the laurels of Lupe!

Stop, Lupe, and Listen!

LUPE was describing her new home to Laura La Plante. "Eet is gorgeous. It has a top and a bottom—"

Laura looked bewildered.

"I've found I can get any man in Hollywood I want, so why bother about them?" is her explanation of this return to domesticity.

Among Those Pheasant

CECIL B. DE MILLE, famous for his Oriental flair for exotic luxuries, is going to remodel "Paradise," his mountain ranch, into one of the largest pheasant preserves in the world. He is collecting all varieties of this fowl just for his own pleasure and with no idea of marketing them. The ranch is also to be stocked with other rare and gorgeous birds.

Rumor For One More

JUST where do rumors start in this city? For two months we heard, as fact, that June Collyer was to leave Fox. June heard it so often that she began to believe it herself and accepted sympathy from her friends about it. Then Fox renewed her option a month before it was necessary and sent her to New York for the Christmas vacation. And gave her a salary raise in the bargain.

So much for Hollywood gossip.

The Victor Record

WE ARE prone to call everyone featured on billboards "stars". In reality there are very few stars working for any company. For example, Fox has only one for 1929. And he is Victor McLaglen.

It isn't always beauty which wins the highest place and the highest salary in this business.

Yawn With The Dance

LIFE after dark has ceased to be a problem in Hollywood. All the stars perambulate down to the beach where a dancing marathon is in shuffling progress. At the writing, it has been going for seventeen days with no hope in sight for the sufferers. There are still half a dozen unwearying partners making the rounds of the ballroom floor.

Billie Dove was one of the interested onlookers. And so were Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle, each in their separate parties. Of Billie a number of the participants begged autographed photos, obliging with like offerings of themselves, signed in scrawling hand as they slowly waltzed about the floor.

A Man of Litters

ARTHUR LAKE came home from the studio one day to find that his dog had a surprise for him. A whole new set of puppies. The next day on the set Arthur passed out the cigars in honor of the occasion.

So This is Hollywood

Maria Alba, a twinkling Mexican star, who is attracting a great deal of attention at the Fox lot.

Johnny Mack Brown and Mary Pickford realize an opportune moment when they see it, as in this scene from the forthcoming Coquette, from the play of that name.

Bearding the Lyon

BEN LYON was working on location at Riverside. He wanted to come home that evening to keep an appointment with Bebe Daniels. He had a plane fly up to location for him. The company was about ready to take the scene but Ben ran out onto the field to signal the flyer to land. The assistant ran after him and shouted: "Get back on the set—what do you think you're being paid for?"

Ben was surprised and indignant. "Just whom are you accustomed to dealing with?"

"Horses and actors," was the snarling retort.

"All right, get a horse to stand in there, then," and Ben took his plane for Hollywood.

Smacks of Familiarity

GAY circumstances at a christening. It happened when the Los Angeles Metropolitan Theatre was converted into the Paramount Theatre by changing the electrics and diverse other necessary things, to which you and I must plead ignorance. Esther Ralston, who had made a personal appearance, was waiting for her limousine, as stars do, when a frenzied fan, arms akimbo, shoved her face into Esther's and shrieked, "Just wanted to see what you looked like, that's all. Just wanted to see what you looked like."

Whereupon Esther smiled, tossed her a finger-tipped kiss and stepped into her car. The fan was overcome with the shower of graciousness, but not too overcome. No, not that. With a palm that but a moment before had been applauding Esther's stage appearance, she smacked that portion of the body that is used for sitting, and shrieked, "Aw, gwan!"

For Barking Out Loud

MAYBE you've heard the latest howl in the talking picture brawl and maybe you haven't. Anyway, Louise Fazenda, a Vitaphoner of repute, says she understands Warner Brothers are going to make a Rin Tin Tin picture, using a Fido-phone.

It Won't Be Mong Now

WILLIAM V. MONG, veteran character actor of the stage and screen, has an amusing way of explaining how he became a character actor with a reputation for skillful make-up. He says:

"In the old days I was what was called, in professional argot, a 'straight' leading man. I had no intention of learning make-up for character work, but it came in handy to evade landladies in theatrical boarding houses."

He is now engaged in a role in The House of Horror, at First National.

Came the Dumb

BILLIE DOVE and her husband, Irvin Willat, were celebrating their fifth wedding anniversary with a few friends when their chauffeur suddenly burst into the room. Willat tried to wave him out but the chauffeur persisted. They let him talk. He finally informed them that the Scotch terrier had just had five pups in the garage.

So This is Hollywood

Lewis Milestone, directing Emil Jannings' new picture, An Alpine Tale, Gary Cooper and Esther Ralston are talking turkey in the hay.

Sally Blane, newly elected Wampas Baby Star for 1929, exhibits some of the reasons why.

Rags and Titters

LUPE VELEZ met Beulah Livingston on the street. "Oh, Beulah, I am so tired of seeing you wear that old coat. Come down and shop with me. I'll—"

"But, Lupe, this coat is real snakeskin. Norma Talmadge gave it to me last year for Christmas. It's—"

"But, Beaulika, darling, even a snake sheds its skin once a year." Lupe answered.

(P. S. Miss Livingston is now wearing a new self-purchased coat on her round of press agent duties.)

Fowl Play

GARY COOPER recently gave Lupe Velez an eagle, imported from his ranch in Montana. It is a mammoth bird with a wing-spread of nine feet and an eye as wild as they make them.

It arrived in a huge box. It took a carpenter three days to build a cage for it.

Lupe went to the meat market and asked what to feed an eagle. "Fresh meat and a couple of rabbits daily," the butcher told her. Two rabbits a day were put on order.

Then she discovered that none of her servants would go near the cage. So she feeds it herself. It takes an hour daily.

After ten days, Lupe was nearly frantic. Besides the time and the expense there was the commotion with everyone scared to death of the fowl. "I don't know what I'm going to do!" she cried, as she took a friend away from the cage after telling her the story. "I can't go away, I—"

"Telegram, Miss Velez!" the maid interrupted. Lupe tore it open. It was from Gary, in the north on location.

"Am sending you a mate for your eagle" it read. And for the first time in her young life, Lupe nearly fainted.

Caught Snapping

A CHORUS of beauties was on the sound stage doing high kicks, back bends, splits, and everything else in the repertoire of intricate steps. When the scene was played back for a test there was a peculiar noise at intervals. Technicians were puzzled, until one of the chorines fessed up.

"It is my joints," she said, "I'm stiff from rehearsals, and those kicks and bends just made them snap."

So This is Hollywood

Max Reinhardt, celebrated impresario, who is to direct The Miracle Girl, arrives in Hollywood accompanied by Lillian Gish, and is being welcomed by Douglas Fairbanks.

Fast and Lew's

HOLLYWOOD husbands are pulling a new gag these days.

"If you've heard this one, dear, stop me!" is their greeting when they roll in at an unmentionable hour in the morning.

They do say Lew Cody started it.

Little Knell

ESTELLE TAYLOR, wife of Jack Dempsey, has been broken-hearted. For shortly after her recent return from New York, where she appeared on the stage, her pet parrot died. Poll was quite accomplished and provided many a laugh for Jack, Estelle and their friends. Poll died of pneumonia and exasperation at the amount of attention the cook gave Chico, the bull terrier. A romantic burial took place under the weeping willow tree by the pond on the Taylor-Dempsey estate was chosen for the bird.

Who Are They?

A FAIR damsel finally consented to appear in pictures and came to Hollywood from Broad's Way, Big Town, to make her residence.

"Oh, hello, dear!" a Follies friend cried, on meeting her on Boul Hollywood one morn. "Are you having a good time? Have you met many picture people?"

"Hardly any," drawled the fair damsel.

"Have you been places?"

"Not very many. Down to Agua Caliente once."

"Surely you met some picture people down there. They all go to Caliente."

"Just one. Mr. Joseph Schenck. No other picture people, though. But he had some rather charming men with him. I think their names were Mr. Zukor and Mr. Louis B. Mayer."

Whereupon the Follies friend gasped and swooned.

Love Under Difficulties

ANITA PAGE is playing a second lead to Joan Crawford in Our Modern Maidens. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is cast as Anita's sweetheart in this picture.

What can I do in a case like that?" Anita timidly inquired. "I'm—why, I have to let him kiss me. I'm almost afraid to play it. Joan will be there every moment!"

Lily Decorates

LILY DAMITA pranced into Sam Goldwyn's publicity office and drew a heart on the wall with her rouged lips!

Al Santell sauntered in, looked a moment and remarked, "Well, you should be glad she put something there which you didn't have to hurry and cover up!"

Ah, yes, our Lily is a wild baby.

Their Plans

WHEN Joan Crawford and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., finally get married they will divide their honeymoon between Paris and London.

"You see I want to visit Paris," Joan explained, "and

CHAPLIN'S New Cinderella

Virginia Cherrill revels in her new existence in Hollywood as Charlie Chaplin's leading lady—her fan dreams having come true with a bang.

By CHARLES GRAY

GIVE us this day our daily break" is Hollywood's constant prayer—but this is the story of a girl so unfamiliar with all that pertains to Celluloid Boulevard that she doesn't know it has any prayers. Ever hear of Cinderella? Or Virginia Cherrill?

The fact has been rather widely commented upon that the first names of all Charlie Chaplin's leading ladies end with the letter a. Look at the list: Edna Purviance, Lita Grey, Georgia Hale, Merna Kennedy—and the feminine foil opposite him in City Lights carries on the tradition. "Virginia" also terminates in the lucky letter. And so, it may be pointed out, does "Cinderella!"

"Speaking of luck!" I exclaimed. "Here you are—a girl who doesn't know a Kleig light from a yes man—stepping into a job for which four-fifths of the girls in pictures would give the marcel right out of their hair. Yesterday, a private citizen. Today, on the threshold of a career. And tomorrow—!"

VIRGINIA laughed. It was dazzling, youthful laughter. "Perhaps back to Chicago. Who knows? This is my first interview—maybe it will be my last!"

Maybe . . . but I scarcely think so. None of Chaplin's discoveries thus far have been forced to return home, dragging their hopes for fame behind them. And there seems to be little reason why this lovely newcomer should not share the good fortune with which he seems to have endowed the others.

"It's all so new," she answered my question, "that I don't know what to think. I haven't quite caught up with what's happened. It's dizzying. I'm so excited with the present that I haven't had a great deal of time to wonder about the future."

"Let's begin with the past," I suggested. "Just how did you happen to encounter Chaplin?"

"At the Olympic Auditorium—at a prize fight. As we were leaving, Mr. Chaplin came over and my escort introduced him. You undoubtedly know of his habit of using an unknown girl for his leading lady in each new picture? Well, he asked me if I would be interested in a screen test for the part in City Lights!"

She laughed again. "I thought he was kidding me! I had been down at the beach all day—at the Swimming Club. And as if that weren't bad enough, I had spilled salad dressing all over the front of my sweater. I was a fright! I couldn't see how anyone would be impressed with me as screen material. But Mr. Chaplin persisted, and the next day I took the test."

Virginia Cherrill was just a little girl from Chicago who thought movie breaks only came to lucky girls like Sue Carol—until Charlie Chaplin found her.

Here's Virginia with her pet pooch in the sort of a sweater she wore when Chaplin first saw her at a prize fight.

LOOKING at her, I readily could understand why Mr. Chaplin had persisted. She has genuine beauty, a beauty which needs no artifice of make-up or lighting—and which is too authentic to be impaired by such trivialities as sunburn and spoiled dresses.

She is a true ash-blonde and looks like Peggy Hopkins Joyce.

"Everyone tells me that," she admits. "Naturally, because Miss Joyce was such a good friend of Charlie's, she has been around the studio a lot. Every day I meet some-

Letters of a Movie Extra

Dear Dolly:

Hollywood, California.

At last! Lasky's shocked me out of a year's growth by giving me a call and I took the jolt beautifully. I'm glad I went. In addition to the check I gotta lotta laughs. It was on the Nancy Carroll-Buddy Rogers set. And say, do they make a handsome team? I'm spreading the glad news that they do! Too bad it has to be just a screen romance but Nancy has her Jack and, I guess, Buddy has his Jill, too. Buddy is so tall and dark and handsome. He tries to act grown up but he's really just a kid. No wonder he is never referred to as "Charles." While Nancy has eyes that look as though they just dropped down from Heaven and her hair is red. Yes, really red, and if anyone doubts it, all he has to do is examine her eyebrows and then match colors. And s-sh—she has freckles, too. She's a very human sort of person, laughs at other people's jokes as well as her own and eats soup and sandwiches at the Studio Cafe instead of cheese souffle at Madame Helene's.

Then they have Skeets Gallagher, Matty Roubert and Harry Breen, all vaudevillians and they wise-crack all day long, each one trying to outdo the other and no one has won the contest yet.

Eddie Sutherland is directing—that is he is going to have the line on the screen that says "Directed by —"—but most of the actual orders are given by a tall, dignified gentleman called Cromwell. You see it's a talkie and one man directs the action and another the lines and in those little boxed up stages there is more talking than walking—hence Sutherland gets a rest.

Funny thing about that Sutherland. Honest, he looks about twenty years old and he has had two weddings and two divorces checked up against him. The first was Majorie Daw and the second, and last, was Louise Brooks. They were both brunettes. Now he should try what gentlemen prefer. And by the way, I understand that Paramount is taking tests of Marjorie—wonder if Eddie will have a chance, after all these years, to tell her what to do.

You asked about my pictures. Yes, I had them taken but you should see what that camera did to what Howard Chandler Christy once called the most perfect face in America! Really, I showed them to a casting director and he said, "Sorry, but we're not using any character women today."

Anyway, it's useless to lug pictures around to casting offices in this modern day. With all this talkie talk even extras have to carry portable victrolas with records of their own voices. I don't know what they will do when they finally get this odor business perfected.

I worked one day out in the sage brush with Ben Lyon. They were making a pioneer picture and he was acting. Not natural either. He had to play the part of a girl-shy boy! You know Ben is interested in aeroplanes and every time one crossed the field he would forget his business and look up. Finally the director said, "Say, you're acting like a sailor in Sea Gull Bay."

Well, write and tell me all about your new Easter outfit. Are you going to sing in the choir this year, too?

Love,

Francois Fern.

MAMMY!

Al Jolson views his prize, Ruby Keeler, with delight, surprise, and burnt cork on his face —she is his real reason for shouting "Mammy!"

Al Jolson's glorious career brought him only aching loneliness—until Ruby Keeler entered upon the scene, and love conquered Al.

By ERNEST HAYNES

TWO men meet, one a Broadway columnist, the other perhaps the most popular theatrical figure in America. The afternoon has worn on at a tedious press function. The two men have been talking, and one, the columnist, suggests that the other accompany him to a show that evening.

The actor is wary, acutely conscious of the world's enthusiasm for being seen in the company of celebrities, conscious of newspapermen's ruthless appetite for copy.

"No" the actor says, "I guess not tonight."

The columnist, mindful of the actor's sensitiveness, insists.

"Why should you want to go to a show with me?" asks the actor. "I can't give you a story."

"I don't want a story," says the other. "I've enjoyed this afternoon talking to you. I want to go to the show with you because you're a good fellow and because I like to be with you. That's all."

Al Jolson told me about the episode with real feeling. "We went to the show," he said, "and did have a swell time. It took me a while to relax, to get over that nasty feeling that it wasn't me he wanted to be with—that it was Al Jolson, the famous jazz singer. It's the hardest thing for me to believe that somebody doesn't want to try to get some news out of me or want to show me off to his friends. I just can't believe that a person wants to be with me because he enjoys my company—or my friendship. I guess that's because I've never had any real friend.

"Well, I finally did believe it. After the show we went somewhere and had a few drinks. We talked about everything under the sun and it was like medicine to me. I told him everything that was on my mind—things I'd stayed awake nights thinking about because I didn't have anyone to tell them to. Say, listen, I'd like to have you see the letter he sent me the next day."

Al Jolson went into the next room and brought out several typewritten sheets. He read them aloud. It was a long letter, the gist of which was the following: "Dear Al: I want to write you to tell you what last night meant to me. It showed what I believe to be the loneliest man in the world. Here was I, an insignificant newspaperman talking to the greatest entertainer of our time or perhaps of any time. But when drink, the almighty leveler, had made us just two human beings talking to each other, I want you to know how much I was touched, how happy I was to be in the company of a swell guy, a fellow who's real from top to bottom. I want you to know that, newspaperman though I am, if I ever stoop so low as to sacrifice a friendship like ours, brief though it be, for some lousy little piece of copy, I guess I'll just have to go and hang myself."

As I said, the letter was longer, for I have only summarized it as nearly as I can remember it, but when Al Jolson had finished the reading he looked up and said, "If he'd written another sentence, I would have cried, honest I would."

Thus Al Jolson before his marriage to Ruby Keeler, lovely Ziegfeld dancer, and the one person whose love and comradeship can give this great artist the sympathy and pal's support that he so sorely needed. Love has won a glorious victory over desolate loneliness in his heart—and a new Al Jolson has supplanted the old.

A MAN who responds quickly to the merest suggestion of friendship, a man whose laughter is on the verge of tears, whose success has meant only that his human side has been separated farther and farther from the very creatures who laud him, that is the real Al Jolson. The story of the man who hides his tragedy behind the comic mask of the Pagliacci, the clown who "laughs though his heart is breaking"—that story is trite, dull, and already laughable. But in its actual incarnation in the case of Al Jolson it is fascinating, moving, and tragic—because it is true. Al Jolson's life on the surface is the very essence of "dreams come true." He is a man who is feted and praised wherever he goes, a man who has turned the amazing miracle of the talking picture into a consummate entertainment for the masses and intelligentsia as well. Where other speaking pictures often lay themselves open to derisive laughter by their falsity and amateurishness, Al Jolson has developed a technique which is always entertaining and never cheap. He has behind him the great achievement of having made sentimentality palatable. And this achievement is only his most recent one. Before Warner Brothers claimed him, he had established himself as the most popular male figure in the world of the musical revue. But this man who today is the highest paid actor in the movies, whose success in a popular field is second to none, this man has been the loneliest and most pathetic person to have achieved popularity.

FROM the very beginning, Asa Yoleson, the son of a Jewish cantor, fought against this loneliness as he fought against the traditions and demands of his family which militated against his ambitions. Years ago he used to sit in the synagogue in his father's class mournfully singing mournful hymns. His heart was in the jazz songs that were just beginning to be popular. He wanted to develop his theatrical talent, for already he had discovered that the voice which was so admirably suited to the sad hymns of the synagogue could be perfectly applied to the mood of blues songs. At a very early age, Asa Yoleson, later to become Al Jolson, had appeared in a performance in his home town, Washington, of Israel Zangwill's Children of the Ghetto. Cantor Yoleson disapproved of any form of popular entertainment. To him, the songs of the people, unless they were of the church, were wicked. He wanted no son of his to be connected with an institution which appealed to anything but the souls of men. So Asa, his son, ran away from home and joined a circus. His resonant voice was admirably suited to the job of barker, a ballyhoo man!

AT THE turn of the century, young Asa Yoleson could be heard singing in a Washington café. Remember the scene in The Jazz Singer—the boy with the sweet, sad voice captivating his blasé audience, the boy intent upon satisfying his ambition of popularity and success. Little did he realize at the time that nothing could ever mean as much to him as the friendship of his comrades. Youth takes such things for granted. It is the full grown man who begins to take account of his gains and finds that none matters so much as the joy of genuine companionship. Remember how the cantor failed to realize the indomitable will of the youngster, dragged him from the cabaret, threatened and raved, intent upon the boy's following in his own footsteps? In general, that is all biographical. The cantor took his son from the café and placed him in a home so that the boy would be guarded and protected from the curse of jazz.

At this point young Yoleson showed his acting ability.

It was a glad day for them both when Ruby Keeler left her show and joined Al Jolson in Hollywood, shortly after their marriage.

From the story by Josephine Lovett

AS GIL JOHNS pressed against the throttle, the car leaped forward like a living thing, sliced a curve as it passed the other machine, and barely missed crashing into an embankment. One or two of the girls shrieked in terror; but the danger was over in a moment, for Gil, even when reckless with gin and drunk with fun at three o'clock in the morning, was a skillful driver. It was, indeed, his only noticeable accomplishment.

Billie Brown (Joan Crawford), captivating, modern daughter of wealth.

"Attaboy, Gil—let 'er rip!" cried Billie Brown, crouched down beside him.

Now as they sped around another curve a billboard loomed, gaudily decorated, brilliantly lighted. Billie leaped to the seat of the car.

"Stop!" she commanded imperiously.

The brakes screamed to an abrupt standstill beside the sign, while the occupants of the rear seat catapulted forward onto the floor in a crazy heap.

"'S orright," murmured a thick voice, whose owner began patiently to extricate himself from the scrambled-egg effect, somewhat puzzled as to which arms and legs were his, and which belonged to one of the others.

Billie, still maintaining her balance, the night breeze whipping her flimsy apology of a dress about her vital young body, swept her arm majestically toward the sign.

"'Join the elite!'" she read mockingly. "'Even one B. Bickering Brown Motor Car proclaims class louder than a Big Brass Band.'"

From the back seat came the wail of a piccolo. Billie, about to continue her speech, paused to look into the bottom of the car where Reg Darrow sprawled against the door, completely absorbed in his thin piping. Propped against him was his partner, lost to the commotion about her.

"Say, Blondie, can't you keep your boy-friend from ruining the night?" protested Billie good-naturedly, with fingers in her ears.

"S'long as it's just the night he's ruining, I haven't any kick," retorted Blondie, settling herself more comfortably against Reg, who continued his playing unconcernedly.

Laughingly, Billie tossed a rug over them. The piccolo suddenly stopped in the middle of a trill, then let out a protesting, muffled wail.

Suddenly from out of the wind-swept hills came a loud voice that startled the young pagans into silence.

"Mr. Brown, of the B. Bickering Brown Motor Car, knowing the yearning for music in the most untutored heart, has graciously caused to be broadcast the finest music by the finest bands to every spot of these United States . . ."

"What is it?"

"Who—?"

"Over there! The billboard! It's got a radio attachment!"

An M-G-M picture directed by Jack Conway.

As the daughter of B. Bickering Brown, fabulously wealthy and powerful motor magnate, Billie Brown's luxurious existence had led her to believe that, as she put it, the world was her football.

Now the crash of a big brass band filled the night with resounding melody.

"Radio advertising!" cried Gil, in amused admiration, when his first bewilderment had passed. "One up for your father! He doesn't believe in hiding his light under a bushel!"

"And I don't notice any dimmers on B. B. B.'s only child!" boasted Billie, snapping her fingers in time to the jazz. Suddenly she threw her arms about Gil's neck and cried gaily, "I want a last fling as one of 'Miss Stern's Select Young Ladies'! Let's make whoopee right here in plain sight of the dear old alma mater rearing its proud and stately gray head down there among the trees!"

A new prank! Delightedly the youngsters tumbled from the cars. There was a general move of the boys toward Billie, who held them off laughingly.

"Me, please, Billie!" beseeched Gil, slipping his arms about her waist and, with his head pillowed on her breast, looking up at her with a smile that she found irresistible. "Please pick me, Billie!"

"Oh, yes, take your pick, Billie!" drawled Blondie nastily, emerging from beneath the rug. "We'll have the leavings—as usual!"

From the depths of the car came the sharp "me-ow" of the piccolo.

Unembarrassed by Blondie's cattiness, Billie proceeded to choose, thrusting amorous hands and lips from her, and drawing Gil close, as she announced: "I'll trust my beautiful body to no one but Gil. As a friend of my youth, he'll take care I don't—trip."

From beneath the rug came a sour squawk, which was answered by shouts of laughter.

Flattered by Billie's choice, Gil lifted her from the car and held her close for just a moment before he set her down. The piccolo's lazy notes paused in midair as Blondie snatched it and began tugging at his arm.

GIL, holding Billie closely, his cheek against hers, danced her down the broad, moonlit cement road. When they had escaped from the others the boy whispered, caressing her hair with his lips, "Slip your hand into my pocket—s'prise for you."

By the size of the tiny box Billie must have suspected its contents; but as she saw the gorgeous square-cut diamond on its bed of velvet, she involuntarily cried out in admiration.

"Gee, Gil, that's some little headlight!"

"Going to put it on?" he challenged, grinning.

Billie cocked her pretty young head on one side and glanced thoughtfully from Gil to the ring, and back to Gil.

"Billie—please!"

Dancing seductively in his arms, she deliberately teased him a little. "Yes—no—well, I'm not sure. Maybe—" But finally she slipped it on her finger, laughing indulgently at his boyish anxiety.

"Sure, I guess so!" she agreed lightly. After all, a girl had to become engaged sometime, and she did like Gil.

The boy crushed her in his arms, his lips seeking hers in youthful passion. Coolly Billie responded, but broke away in the midst of a caress to lead the way to a sheltered spot beside the road. Seated there, absently watching the other dizzy, dancing couples, she seemed unconscious of his lips again brushing against her hair, caressing her throat, seeking for her lips.

"Gill," she said suddenly, slipping the diamond from her finger and eyeing it speculatively, "Let's keep our engagement secret until you get a decent diplomatic post."

Chilled as by a plunge into cold water, he released her from his ardent embrace and looked puzzledly into her unabashed eyes.

"Say," he grinned, half-aggrieved, "did you think all that up while I was kissing you?"

"Oh, no slur on your technique, Big Boy," she consoled, drawing his arms closely about her again. "I was only thinking of the swell publicity we could get if we waited a little while. 'The beautiful and fascinating Miss Billie Brown,' " she said stentoriously as if quoting from a paper, " 'is engaged to the rising young diplomat, Gilbert Johns. They will honeymoon in Paris, where Mr. Johns will take up his official duties.' "

"Oh, say, Billie, not so fast!" he protested. "Those things don't happen right off the bat. I'll probably be sent first to some flea-bitten desert isle. And by the way, B. B. B. will kick at the idea.

Billie looked at him quizzically. "B. B. B. is right, Gil. Little Billie was not born to bloom unseen."

"But it's only just at the start, you know—just while I'm getting experience. Afterward—"

"No! Billie doesn't like fleas. It's no use, Gil."

"Then what's the use of trying?" he asked despondently.

"Oh, don't be sil! You can't give up the fight before you've even entered the ring."

"Kentucky" (Anita Page), a lovely youngster longing to be one of the sophisticated set around her.

THE radio was blaring toward a smashing climax. Billie's eyes lighted triumphantly as she listened. Suddenly she threw her arms about his neck, burning with ambition and desire.

"I'm going to lead the parade with a big brass band!"

Gil hungrily watched her high-flung head and sparkling eyes. "God, Billie, you're beautiful!"

Unmindful of his worship, she went on, catching him to her in a gesture of defiant possession. "I'll give the world a show that will knock it cold—and dance to victory over the corpse!"

The boy took her shoulders and thrust her a little away from him. "Say, what do you think the world is, Billie—your football?" he demanded, half resenting, half admiring, her arrogance.

"Exactly!" she exulted cockily. "And what's more, the world is going to like it!"

Seeing Billie Brown at the moment, so alive, dominating, tempting and gay, one could easily imagine the world allowing itself to be flattered, even to be kicked.

The band broadcasting crashed to a bacchante finale. Then from the hidden microphone came the announcer's voice again. "When you hear the gong, it will be exactly four a. m. by B. Bickering Brown's electrically controlled chronometer."

With hasty but ardent farewells, the other girls broke away from their protesting boy friends and started toward the school.

Billie deftly slipped her vanity case from Gil's pocket, and dropped the ring into the coin purse.

"Parked, until brain, youth and beauty stop the show!"

"Oh, but Billie, please—"

She silenced him with a quick, passionate kiss. A moment later she broke away and, pantomiming a mocking farewell, plunged into the darkness of the trees sheltering the school.

WHEN Billie returned home after the close of school, she had at her disposal the luxurious private car of B. Bickering Brown, in which she and her friends managed to make themselves comfortable. For hours on end the phonograph ground out the hottest jazz; the youngsters sang loudly if not well, under the mellowing influence of the liberal supply of alcoholic refreshments; they danced the miles away dizzily; and finally, bored with everything else, they rustled up a crap game for stakes that would have staggered a normal man.

Billie threw her arm protectingly around Kentucky's shoulder and commanded, "Now lay off the Baby. She'll make the grade if we give her time."

SOMEWHAT apart from the others Kentucky sat busily writing in a diary, her legs curled under her like a child's, her blond hair tumbling in pretty disarray about blue eyes that sometimes looked up from the page into some far-away dream world. Now and then she looked at Gil—handsome young Gil whom she had always adored from afar. Her romantic dreams must have included him, for always after studying his profile earnestly, she wrote down new thoughts in her little leather book, which she carried with her.

Gil Johns (Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.), fiance of dashing Billie Brown.

"Eleven! My haul!" exulted Billie, raking the money toward her.

"Hell!" cried Blondie, slamming a bill on the table, while Kentucky looked up quickly with a startled, half-admiring glance. "It just doesn't seem humanly possible always to be so damned lucky as you!"

Billie laughed good-naturedly, and mischievously hummed, "I'm sitting on top of the world!"

"Aw, you cats make me tired!" growled Reg. "Gimme the li'l ole ivories—my throw."

Billie, only casually interested in the game, looked toward Kentucky. How like the dear child to be completely absorbed in writing, while the rest of them made whoopee!

"What're you doing, honey? Let mama have a look-see!" commanded Billie patronizingly, as was her habit; for the world was her football. Nevertheless, she was really very fond of Kentucky, whom she mothered, and who fairly worshipped her.

"Secret!" warned Kentucky, trying to hide the book; but Billie deftly captured it.

"Oh, Billie—please—!"

But Billie, holding her off at arm's length, was already in convulsions of laughter.

"Listen, kids! Kentucky's writing about 'Men.' Men!"

"Hey, hot stuff! Let's have it!" cried one of the girls.

"Men!" laughed Blondie derisively. "Ever step out with a man who wasn't your father or an elderly unk?"

Reg silenced her with a firm kiss; but Blondie had been kissed by experts in her time!

Ignoring him, she snatched the book from Billie and, assuming a melodramatic pose, began to read tauntingly.

"'Love! Will it steal gently upon me, or sweep me away in a cloud of glory—?'"

"Duck the tornado stuff, Kentucky!" advised Gil humorously.

"Don't hold your breath waiting," cautioned one of the girls. "You gotta be like the big M. P.'s, and go right out after your man!"

"Yeh," drawled Blondie cynically, "it's a battle, sure

Harry Carr's

Harry Carr.

Harry Carr, who is responsible for many picturesque and colorful epics of the screen, has just returned from a jaunt through the heart of old Mexico. Perhaps his experiences and observations there will stimulate the creation of another successful picture. There are many inside angles on picture personalities and productions which you can get only over Harry Carr's Private Line. His monthly column of comment appears exclusively in SCREEN SECRETS among the fan magazines. In his long association with the industry he has watched players grow from extra roles to stardom and knows them all intimately.

GIRLS, take off your bloomers!"

This stern notice recently appeared on a set at one of the big studios. It meant what it said; but it didn't mean what low suspicious minds might imply.

The truth is that a strange rustling noise disturbed the making of a talkie which Harry Beaumont was directing. They hunted and searched and shut sound-proof doors. Finally it was noted that it made itself manifest especially when the lovely Anita Page drew near.

When the din from Anita's rayon what-d'y'call'ems was ameliorated, all proceeded in peace, quietude and art.

Scat for Airships

THE extreme susceptibility of the microphone used by talkies causes a good deal of distress in many ways. In one recent picture made in the Paramount Studio, they had to destroy half a day's work because the director's nervous habit of tapping on a table with his fingers wrecked everything.

King Vidor is in the depths of despair because every time an aeroplane goes over the studio all work on the negro talkie he is making has to stop. As the M-G-M Studio has three aeroplane pastures as neighbors, the sky is thick with them most of the time.

Lillian Comes Back

LILLIAN GISH is back from Europe with the great Max Reinhardt in her train. I think that United Artists feels a little bleak about the picture he is going to make with her.

Her Heroine

IN ONE of the Balkan countries there has been a girl who has been both a religious and a medical mystery. She is, in a way, a living miracle.

Upon the occasion of each religious anniversary having to do with Jesus Christ, she bleeds at the hands and feet—just where the Savior's wounds were at the time of the Crucifixion.

Anita Page.

This girl is to be the heroine of the Gish picture that Reinhardt will direct.

Too Ethereal

MISS GISH'S is a strange and interesting case. She has been recognized everywhere as the greatest artiste of screen acting; but her pictures have not been successful since The White Sister. She thinks that Max Reinhardt may turn out to be the Moses who will lead the talkies out of the wilderness.

Lillian Gish.

When he first came to America, Reinhardt poohed at the talkies, but he has become a sudden convert to noise. As the greatest stage producer of his generation in Europe—a producer whose productions have always made a special appeal to the eye, it would seem that her confidence might not be misplaced.

A Great German

COMING over here with the prestige of The Miracle behind him, Herr Reinhardt has a contract which will give him his own way in everything. He is already a cult in Hollywood. Men like Lubitsch and Joe Schildkraut learned their stuff from him and they think he tells the sun when to rise.

Although he does not speak English, he is a very charming personality.

"Prof" Fairbanks!

NOT Mr. Doug Fairbanks—

"Prof" Fairbanks!

The eminent father of Douglas, Jr., has become a professor in the University of Southern California. A class in motion art has been installed there through the influence of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and Doug is the first lecturing professor.

It is unnecessary to say that the thirst for learning has risen to an alarming extent in California since this announcement was made. The university, in its effort to keep one jump ahead of the stampede, has found it necessary to make a rule that you can't take lessons from Doug unless you also take all the rest of it—geometry, Einstein theories and everything else.

I'd like to sit in the class myself. Of all the motion picture people I have ever known, Douglas has the most enlightened ideas—and looks farthest into the future. He is really the only producer who realized that he was dealing with a new art.

The Guest Book

MEANWHILE Doug's responsibility of feeding visiting royalty has not ceased with his new honors. The Italian countess—lady-in-waiting to the queen—made a bee line for Doug and Mary when she showed up in Hollywood. If they keep a guest book out at Pickfair, it has the most distinguished names ever between book covers.

The Champ

THERE is something extraordinarily interesting in the box-office survey made by one of the movie trade papers. It shows that Clara Bow has nosed out Colleen Moore as the greatest box-office attraction of the movies.

What Price Art

I TAKE it that every one admits that two of the greatest artists of the screen are Charlie Chaplin and Greta Garbo.

In this survey, based upon actual box-office returns, the fair Greta lags along a sad eleventh and Chaplin is not even in the running. Art doesn't seem to sell so well.

Hard Times

THE going is very hard in Hollywood right now. The talkies have brought in so many stage stars. I know of many cases where actors who were living in luxury a year ago are now panhandling for their next meal.

Pola

ONCE in a while I get a message from Pola Negri in Paris. She is making a picture over there, but wants to come back to Hollywood. She might get another chance now that the talkies have conquered us. She has one of the loveliest voices I have heard, very musical and filled with caressing cadences.

To the astonishment of her Hollywood friends, Pola has turned out to be a very domestic young lady since her marriage to the Prince Mdivani. She is one of the devoted wives who sees that the bath water is right and that socks of the lord and master are put away in the right compartment. She isn't what you would call blissfully happy; she will never be happy. She gets too much of a kick out of being miserable. But for Pola, she is doing very well. I like Pola. She is one of the most charming talkers to whom I have ever listened and she has a vast fund of the kind of culture that comes of meeting many people in many lands and of reading much from good books.

Pola Negri.

Walsh's Hard Luck

ANTICIPATING the disasters that might cross one's path, very few of us have lost much sleep dreading lest a rabbit jump through our auto windshield and put out the sight of an eye. Yet that is what has happened to Raoul Walsh.

Raoul Walsh.

Riding across the desert near Hollywood, a scared jack-rabbit, confused by the light, leaped through Walsh's windshield, breaking the glass, bits of which went into one of his eyes. He went to New York to consult a specialist, but it was no use. To save the good eye, he has had to lose the injured one. It will not affect his career as a director, but he will never be able to act again.

Helping Hollywood

Broadway's famous evangelist arrives in Hollywood with energy and plans for doing big things to that lively city.

By CHARLES DARNTON

HOLLYWOOD'S soul—that is, if Hollywood has a soul—may now be saved by "The Angel of Broadway," as old New York fondly nicknamed fair-haired Rheba Crawford when she was trying to put the fear of God into those sinners who rarely see the error of their way between Times Square and Columbus Circle.

Having wrestled with Manhattan actors, chorines, hoofers and the like, Angel is now girding up her step-ins to tackle Hollywood's movie producers, stars, extras and yes-men. Let us pray she may bring them to repentance, and well she may, for, glory hallelujah! She is just the type. Yes, a blonde. I, for one, have believed in blonde angels ever since I pumped a church organ. Somehow, a brunette angel doesn't seem to fit into the heavenly scheme of things. Angel not only is blonde, but she's young—looking. The only thing about her that's hard to believe is that she is twenty-eight. She says so herself, but maybe she isn't very good at figures and has put a 2 where a 1 ought to be. Anyway, she could easily pass for eighteen, morning, noon or night.

Ernest Torrence, character actor, is being admonished by Rheba Crawford against the sins of pipe smoking.

I saw Angel at night, and we had what might be called a night talk. That is to say, we talked of night life here and there, comparing Hollywood with New York, if there is any comparison. Angel happened to say that she had pulled off a wedding at one of the night clubs where a lot of Hollywood's best spenders hold evening services. It seems that a little dancer was to be married without benefit of clergy, so Angel stepped in and gave a justice of the peace the air. It was just a matter of sentiment, not of competition, Angel feeling the dancer should get a break inasmuch as this was the first time the poor child had been married. To make the ceremony a good one, Angel threw in a prayer.

"You know," she told me, "anyone can pray in a church, but not everyone can pray in a night club."

No, not out loud, but let me ask

Heavenward

Corinne Griffith with Rheba Crawford, the evangelist, who was greatly impressed by the intelligence and spirituality of the "orchid of the screen," as well as by her physical beauty.

you, brother, have you never been moved to silent prayer as out of the corner of your eye you watched the waiter adding up the check?

"And," pursued Angel, "night clubs are not so bad."

This stirred my sympathies to the point of recalling that Texas Guinan once assured me she had never taken a drink. The shock of this news gave Angel pause.

"Wait a minute," she begged, "till I check up on that."

She bent her pretty head, narrowed her even prettier blue eyes, and concentrated. The suspense was terrible. You could have heard a bottle drop.

"One night," she related, coming out of it, "I went over to Tex's club with Walter Winchell. Now let me think. Yes, Walter had a flask. Tex came over to our table and sat down. Let's see now, I want to be sure of just what happened. I remember. Walter poured out a drink for Tex."

"But," I sternly demanded, "did Tex drink it?"

"I—don't—remember," she confessed, for all the world like an angel on the witness stand.

"Very well," I agreed, "we'll say no more about it."

AND so we came back to Hollywood, where the erstwhile Angel of Broadway plans to build and conduct a Cinema Cathedral. But before we go into that solemn project let us learn what Angel thinks of Hollywood and its people. She had made the rounds of various studios and got chummy with a number of stars who don't easily get chummy with visitors.

"I was particularly interested in Lon Chaney—in his mind," she added. "He is essentially intellectual. And I liked immensely, too, Ernest Torrence. He was so jolly, had such a keen sense of humor, that I quite fell in love with him. He suggested we have our pictures taken together, and so we did, with him smoking a pipe. He borrowed the pipe."

Another Scotch story.

"And I was won," she went on, "with the sincerity of Corinne Griffith. I found her just as lovely inside as out. Beauty in women is more common than sincerity. People who are just sweet and pretty never impress me."

"What do you think of the pretty boys in pictures?" I anxiously inquired.

"I don't use language like that," chided Angel.

That being the case, I asked her how she had felt about pictures and picture people before coming to Hollywood.

"For a long time I was not interested in pictures," she replied, "because most of those I had seen seemed inane. But, among others, I liked Mary Pickford for her wistful charm. There is nothing in the world quite so beautiful as charm, but we see so little of it that we are more than

Cupid's Bulletin Board

Constance Talmadge, who is reported as engaged to:

Townsend Netcher, wealthy Chicago business executive.

All For Connie?

WITH Townsend Netcher vigorously pushing construction of a new palatial home in Santa Monica, and apparently as attentive as ever to the lovely object of his affections, Constance Talmadge, Hollywood feels justified in predicting an early announcement of the engagement of the lucky pair.

Mr. Netcher is a member of a wealthy Chicago family, and a very prominent business man in that city.

More Building

VIRGINIA VALLI cheerfully admits that Cupid is in the offing in her romance with Charles Farrell. The cinema city believes that the mere matter of a contractor's hurrying up Charlie's new house is all that stands in the way.

A Daniels Come to Judgment

IT HAS remained for Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon to give Hollywood, hardened as it is to sudden jolts, the solar plexus punch. These two attractive people, whose heart charts have provided the Bulletin Board with many juicy items from month to month, have now settled the matter once and for all (we hope) by announcing their engagement to each other. Bebe has been variously rumored engaged to Charles Paddock, Jack Pickford and Tommy Hichcock, while Ben Lyon's name has been connected with that of Dorothy Mackaill, Marilyn Miller and Marian Nixon, among others.

Nope!

IT SEEMS that Lefty Flynn came back to Hollywood and to his wife, Viola Dana, to bring about a reconciliation, but that something went amiss. And now Viola has decided that there are things that cannot be forgiven, and she will soon sue for a divorce.

More Sad News?

A REPORT from the East has it that all is not well in the Dorothy Gish-James Rennie menage. Too bad, indeed, if two such personable young folks have handed Cupid a serious sock in the eye.

The Doves

THE Marquis de la Falaise de la Coudray, Gloria Swanson's husband, spent a brief three weeks' vacation in Hollywood during the holidays, and has again gone to Europe to act as "glorified observer for F. B. O." Gloria's genuinely romantic parting from her titled spouse effectively put to rest the rumor that hostilities between them were impending.

Gloria Swanson bids regretful farewell to her husband, the Marquis de la Falaise de la Coudray, and denies rumors of a domestic rift.

The Bells

AGNES LYNCH, film actress and sister of Helen Lynch (wife of Carroll Nye, the well-known screen juvenile), has also been nominated by Cupid, having just recently become the bride of Jason Robards, stage and screen actor. Mr. Robards was divorced from a previous wife a year or so ago.

Lupe Velez, as a girl, dreamed of a career on the stage that would lead to stardom.

Señorita CYCLONE

How Lupe Velez faced her first crisis, and her amazing leap from convent seclusion to Mexico City's stage, is described herewith in her absorbing life story as told to Ruth Biery by

Lupe Velez

MY LIFE—it has been very strange. When your American kids go to school I am riding with my father in the Mexican army. I see mens killed when I am very young. It is while I am still a baby that I start to dance. I dance always. Dance and flirt—those are the two things I like to do best. I have my first sweetheart when I am seven. At thirteen I fall very much in love. One night he kiss me. I never forget that kiss. It is the sweetest in my life. I see him every day and night.

MY MOTHER is a very wise womans. She knows life and she want her girls to know also so they will not get into trouble. When my sisters is thirteen she take them to see about life just as she now goes to take Lupe. But it is a death secret. One girl can never tell another.

I know nothing where we are going until she take me by the hand one morning and lead me to a hospital where there are many sick womans. She take me first to a womans beautiful like the Madonna! Her skin is like the snow, and hands—ah, Lupe can never forget the hands of that womans. They lie like two beautiful flowers more white than the covers beneath them. She cannot raise them; this wonderful, beautiful womans. She try to talk. She make no words come from her mouth; only sounds. I stand there and I suffer. I never see anything so beautiful; I never see anything so terrible.

My mother turn to the nurse. "She will live?"

"No." The nurse answers and shakes her head very sad. "She can live only a little longer."

Lupe cry. It does not seem possible that the womans so young—she is not more than twenty—so beautiful, almost like the Virgin, can die!

Lupe turns to go away. She cannot stand it. But her mother, she grabs my arm and makes me stay and watch the womans try again and again to raise those lovely hands, Lupe and Gary Cooper, whose romance is the talk of Hollywood.

try to say something. I cry out! I cannot stand it. My mother takes me away a little and asks me, "Do you know the matter with this womans?"

I do not know.

My mother tell me; tell me about womans who let mens get ahead of them.

"You want to go straight, Lupe?"

"Yes," I sob as I answer.

"You can do as you wish, Lupe. You can have beautiful jewels, beautiful clothes and be like this womans. Or you can have less and be a good womans. No one can do it for you. Go to hell if you wish, or live a good life. It is your life, and it is up to you to live it!"

Lupe with Douglas Fairbanks, who gave her the first boost towards stardom by choosing her for the lead in The Gaucho.

I OWE everything to this lesson from my mother. I feel sorry for the American boys and girls when I see them on the beach at night, parked in their cars taking drinks of whisky and petting one another.

In America I do not think the mothers tell their children. In my country mothers know that life is life and they make their girls understand it. I trust no mans, ever. I flirt with them but I do not trust them. I can never forget. It was a shock to a young girl. It took me long time to get over it. It is crude; it is rude; I cannot eat; I cannot sleep. I cannot forget the face of that womans or the faces of the other womans which my mother shows me. But I can never go away with a mans who do not marry Lupe. Never!

But I do not stop flirting and I do not stop seeing Mil-a-tone, the man who I wishes to marry. I am out every night and mother can do nothing with me. She is afraid that maybe the hospital is not enough lesson. I drive her nearly crazy. So she decide to send me to a convent with my sister Josephine.

We start for the Lady of the Lake convent in San Antonio, Texas. My mother go to the train with us. She cry and say, "Baby may never see her mother again." I am a devil. I just say, "Hurrah! I'm going away. I don't care if I never come back. I am going to the United States and see a different country!"

I hate the convent then. But I like to remember it now. It is the happiest time of my life. Someday when I get through making money in pictures I think I go into the convent forever. You know, there is another side to Lupe. Lupe never cry but sometimes she get sad and want to be back with the Sisters who seem always to have content and be so quiet and happy.

But all I learn at the convent is to write for one thousand times again and again, "I must be good!" I hate it. Everything I do is bad. We cannot chew gum in school. I loves to chew gum. One day a Sister takes the gum out of my mouth and sticks it on my nose. I am so happy! Gee, I am happy! For when she turn her back I take it off my nose and puts it in my mouth and when I see she is beginning to turn around I takes it out of my mouth and puts it back on my nose. That way I always have my gum with me.

I DANCE the hula and the shimmy. We go to a picture show every Saturday afternoon and I learns it from watching the actresses in the picture. The Sisters, they see me do it. I have to write again a thousand times, "I must be good!" But the minute the Sisters turn their back I stop writing and do over and over again the hula and the shimmy.

The girls all hate me. I take their boy friends from them. I do not mean to be bad. I love Mil-a-tone but Lupe just cannot help but flirt no matter how much she love somebody. He writes me. I write him. I love him like mad but I must flirt or I cannot live. I get sick if I do not flirt ever. I flirt with the girls' boy friends. They come up under my windows and sing, Who's Sorry Now, Charlie, My Boy, Poppa Loves Momma and I Wonder What Becomes of Sally. That's the way I learn to sing pieces. I send messages to the boys by my sister, Josephine. Nobody ever think, she is so good, that she will take them. She never get caught at it. But she better take them. I will scratch her eyes out if she don't take them!

There is a bridge in front of the school. We can go to this bridge when we play but we cannot go over it. One day I decide to run away. I ask Josephine to go with me but she is a skeered cat and will not do it. The first time, I get just across the bridge when the Mother Superior drive up in a big car.

"I cannot help but flirt," says Lupe. It would seem a shame if she didn't, with all those bewitching charms.

"Stop!" she say to the chauffeur. She is very angry. "Where are you going?"

"I go to buy gum."

"Don't you know you aren't allowed to chew gum? Get into this car this minute."

So I go back and write a thousand times more, "I must be good!"

I WAIT three days then I try it again. This time I changes my clothes and sneak out and get into the city. I have some money and I buy some clothes like I always been wanting. High heels—way high like this. (Lupe's fingers indicated that her first French heels must have been at least eight inches.) I get a little dress which is high also—oh, when I come out of that store!

I am so happy. For the first time in my life I looks like a real flapper.

A boy wrinkles his eye at me. I says to myself, "I am making a hit." But before I get a chance to speak to him, three other mens come up to me. Then I know I am making a hit! But I am mistaken. They are three policemens, without uniforms, which the school have sent to find me.

When they take me back they say they are going to put me in the reform school because I am so bad. But I go

JOHN GILBERT Gets His

Greta Garbo and John Gilbert as they appeared in A Woman of Affairs, typical of the glittering romantics he is deserting for sterner stuff under the generous terms of his new contract with M-G-M.

Bidding farewell to gaudy roles, John Gilbert embarks on a career of fewer, greater pictures reflecting the rugged, intense drama of real life.

By HENRY MACMAHON

GOODBYE great lovers, philancerers, "sap" heroes and sawdust-and-buckram romantics! John Gilbert tells me he has left them midst the ruck of program pictures and turned a new leaf with the calendar year 1929.

It came about through our Jack's not going with United Artists (though everybody predicted he would); a hurry-up visit of Nicholas Schenck to Hollywood—and presto! the genial great lover puts his name on the dotted line of a contract signatured by Irving Thalberg, and is transformed from the busy maker of four to six pictures a year to one of those quiet "immortals" of the films who expend 180 days on a picture and whose quota of productions therefore is only six works in a three-year term.

Did you know that Jack Gilbert has always had a yen to be his own producer? That he expresses disgust with many of the characters the various studios have ordered him to portray? That he fairly radiates novel, interesting picture ideas, and that his friend Thalberg, head executive of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is going to help him realize a number of them?

Most striking of all is the good-looking star's aversion to the soulful Adonises with which his enchanting smile and slight, elegantly-made person recently have been associated.

Gilbert doesn't object to plenty of "it" in his heroines, but he feels the unreality of continually playing the "sexy" male attraction. "I want to play honest characters!" he said to me, in an outburst of genuine feeling.

"What do you mean—honest?"

"Real, average human beings, no better and no worse than my Jim Apperson in The Big Parade."

"Then you are a realist?"

"Of course. I don't want people to be thrown into extraordinary behavior by my presence or soulful eyes or so-called 'sexiness'; that isn't real life, and artistically it's trash. Rather, I want to be controlled by the situation, to let the situation—the course of events—take charge of me and impel me.

"For example, I wanted The Cossacks, but I wanted real Cossacks; stern, realistic, primitive, grim. Instead of that, they made it musical comedy.

"There is no particular interest to the public—or to the actor—in playing a succession of great lovers. I have no desire to do Lord Byron or Benvenuto Cellini. Yes, it might be good fun to play the young Hannibal in The Road to Rome. And in later life I might have a try at the superannuated romance of Old English or the old fellow that O. P. Heggie reenacted out of Galsworthy, because there's the genuine dramatic interest of the rake or roue or elderly Don Juan coming to the end of his tether. But philanderers—never!

WISH

TALK about power," he continued. "As the Russians have shown us, there's more power in the lives of ordinary people than in the great names or solemn events of the earth. A common soldier fighting for his country, singing John Brown's Body or Dixie as he goes —a trolley motorman, modern controller of the lightnings, returning to his hearth to find the fires ashes and his wife stolen by his best friend; what greater power than in such homely themes which have the touch of universal reality?"

"What progress have you made since The Big Parade?" I asked.

"Not much," he replied, "for the reasons I have cited."

"What about your new contract?"

"I did not get supervision of my product," he grinned. "But making only two pictures a year with protective clauses as to story, director and cast—under Thalberg's direct supervision—there should be opportunities. We won't start a picture until we are sure it is going to be good, and while occasionally we may be bad prophets, nevertheless the effort will represent the best and finest that is in us—"

"You might tell SCREEN SECRETS' readers the names of candidates for leading lady?"

"Ah! Who knows? Each leading woman will be selected specially for the particular role. There will be no teaming, but only consideration of dramatic values." Gilbert intimated that Greta Garbo was by no means out of the list.

His merry eyes lighted brightly and his well-known countenance took on tense eagerness when we started talking talkies.

"The talkies," he opined, "will make acting twice as important to the actor. If, for example, I go before the camera and do hardly anything and provided my personality happens to be agreeable, I can get by and I score what is commonly called a success. But when I have to work in acting, to convey dramatic insight and power by speech, then the thing becomes far more important and more fun—much more difficult, and with far higher possibilities.

"Can you imagine," he said in almost awestruck tones, "The Big Parade would have killed people if it had been talkie? The shock of the oralized scenes would have proven itself so terrible that the censors would have been obliged to forbid the presentation. You and I can realize what a terrific power the addition of speech to poignantly pictured scenes conveys, and what an instrument it will be in the hands of directors and players of genius.

"Before that time, some Griffith of the speakies will have to evolve a new technique of pictures-plus-speech. But the thing will develop, and we'll get great pictures—

While United Artists vied with M-G-M for his talents, John Gilbert, at his palatial home and grounds, planned a future that would satisfy his artistic longings.

THESE SCREEN SECRETS

Here they are! A complete announcement of the winners of the big cash prizes in the "Guess Who" contest with a list of those who won honorable mention will be found below.

AT LAST the suspense is over! The judges in the big SCREEN SECRETS "Guess Who" contest have finally accomplished the great task of selecting the winners from among the thousands of unusually fine entries in time to make a complete announcement of the outcome in this issue.

This number brings not only joy to those who have won, but also consolation for those who were not so fortunate, because the response and enthusiasm shown on the part of readers for this contest have been so great that on another page will be found the announcement of a new and even more fascinating contest starting at once.

The contest is a cut-up puzzle and even more prizes will be offered so that those who did not win a prize this time will have a chance to try again. Further details will be found on pages 28 and 29.

Since midnight, January tenth, when the contest came to a close with a final deluge of entries, the judges have been hard at work at their colossal task of sorting, classifying and judging the entries.

First came the job of selecting the entries in which the stars had been correctly identified, thus satisfying the first rule of the contest. Surprising as it may seem in view of the fact that all of the stars selected have appeared often on the screen during the past few months, and there have been pictures of all of them in SCREEN SECRETS, more than half of the contestants failed to identify them correctly.

Clara Bow, Janet Gaynor, Buddy Rogers were easy. Marie Prevost was a little hard for some. Marceline Day and June Collyer proved to be the greatest stumbling blocks. Many mistook June Collyer for Laura La Plante.

The task of judging the respective merits of the essays was far more difficult. So many displayed such ingenuity of thought and sincerity of expression that it was almost impossible to choose the best.

Clara Bow and Janet Gaynor were favorite subjects for the essays. Some contestants offered their contributions in poetry, or in lines, the first letters of which spelled the name of their favorite star, but the greater number of entries were in prose. The most outstanding aspect of the contest was the care and thought shown in the form in which the entries were presented. There were miniature stages, toy movie theatres, beautiful lampshades, dolls, boats, butterflies, fans, screens, treasure chests, pillows, albums, baskets, stars and scrolls.

Here Are the Major Prize Winners

Grand First Prize of $750—won by Carmen Wood Marcelus, 96 Nelson Street, Kingston, Ontario, Canada.

Second Prize of $300—won by Iola Mae Isley, 3325 Memorial Ave., Lynchburg, Va.

Third Prize of $200—won by Mrs. E. C. Van Pelt, Marion, Kentucky.

Fourth Prize of $50—won by Mrs. Mattie L. Lamb, 2104 East Glisan Street, Portland, Oregon.

Lists of those who won honorable mention will be found farther back in the book. Here are the prize winning answers:

First Prize—Carmen Wood Marcelus:

"Those who light our pathway and lift us to a higher plane are our spiritual messengers of peace and brotherhood. In Seventh Heaven Janet Gaynor breathes, from her very soul, faith beyond all creeds. She proves to us the power of hope and courage, upon which is builded everything that is great. Her example of love and fortitude during one small hour in Street Angel reveals to us the real Janet Gaynor therefore Janet is my choice. She gives us the pure wholesome kernel without the husks."

(This entry was a beautiful Christmas landscape scene on a toy stage worked out with complete symbolism of the essay. The essay itself was typed on birchbark and beautifully decorated.)

Second Prize—Iola Mae Isley:

Child of clean comedy, chockfull of charm;
Little Lady of Love, laughter and life:
Ablaze with animation, awakening adoration,
Redolent of romance, radiant, refined,
Ace-high in her art—ADORABLE!

Bewitchingly beautiful—balm for the blues—
Outstandingly original, outshining others,
Winsome and wise and worshipful woman—WHO?
My Favorite—CLARA BOW!

(A pretentious proscenium arch formed the background and setting for this entry. The pictures of the six stars appeared in jeweled frames on either side of the proscenium while the composition appeared on a movie screen in the center.)

Third Prize—Mrs. E. C. Van Pelt.

"I like CLARA BOW because her hair is red and her personality just as vivid. She's got IT; whether dressed in a fascinating bathing suit, or in a "what-cha-ma-call-it," as at the right. Having known misery and loneliness in her childhood, she now makes living a gay curtain to cast over the drab memories of those early days. CLARA BOW is more than a movie star! She is the living symbol of the modern girl; the fulfillment of all that youth would like to be; of all that age wishes it might have been."

(Mrs. Van Pelt's entry was a book of samplers, each page of which contained elaborate embroidery with names and pictures of the stars. The essay was embroidered on the first page.)

Fourth Prize—Mrs. Mattie L. Lamb:

"How can I choose my favorite star
From six who shine so bright?
It's hard for me to make a choice
Tho I try with all my might.

The girls are all so charming
And pretty as can be,
That to make a choice from them
Is difficult you see.

So I'll play safe and choose a star
Who well deserves his fame:
He brings us youth, clean-cut and fine—
Charles Rogers is his name.

He is the type we all admire,
Courageous, kind and true.
No other star can shine more bright—
I leave it up to you."

(This entry was a tabloid stage of a movie company making a pirate picture on the beach. Each star in the group was given a part in the picture and was represented by a doll.)

Following is the list of those who won $10 prizes, and favorite stars.

1. Dorothy S. Reese, 813 First St., Jackson, Mich.—Janet Gaynor.
2. Miss Deuse D. Bragg, 1285 8th Ave., San Francisco, Calif.—Clara Bow.

MORE SECRETS

Alice White in her tricky costume is a vision compelling the belief that a diary of hers would be crammed with masculine tributes to her saucy blond beauty.

from the Diary of ALICE WHITE

How Alice reached stardom—her new experiences with Hollywood's famous—and real love at last with its heartbreaking outcome—as told in this last installment of her famous Little Red Diary.

This is my permission to print my diary
Alice White

JUNE 9. Am to work in Billie Dove's new picture, American Beauty. Not very thrilled because it's a very small part. Left the studio in tears. Will I never get a good part? Sometimes this picture business is so darned discouraging.

June 13. I'm not doing right by you, Diary, old thing. Maybe this is love. Anyway, it's taking a lot of my time.

July 9. Spent Saturday at Leslie Fenton's mother's house at the beach. He has a lot of very nice brothers and we all went swimming and had a grand time. I love to swim with him. His arms are so strong and brown, cutting the waves. And his teeth are all glistening in his wet, tanned face. He says I swim like a mermaid. He should know. At night there are bonfires on the beach. We had one, in a little cove, and everything was cozy. Only the sea purring and the fire crackling. He told me a lot of things.

July 17. Wanted to see L. all day. Waited for a call. Then at night saw him riding with another girl. I dislike her very much. I never did like her type. She is trying to take him away from me.

July 21. Find out I am to do a part in The Private Life of Helen of Troy. Supposed to be a good part but one never knows by the time a picture is finished.

July 22. Getting official. Wot? Took many pictures today with Mayor Cryer and the girl who flew down from San Francisco. Still have a crush on L. Went out for a ride with P. just so I would stop thinking, thinking, thinking about Leslie. Saw F. and M. riding together. F. was looking at all the girls on the street. M. didn't seem to care. If any man started looking at the other chiffons on the street when he was with me, he could have his hat. For good, too.

July 23. Just leaped around all day. Felt very lost. Bored by lots of people.

July 27. Signed my third option with First National. Wouldn't it be grand if they would star me? Golly.

July 28. Out at night with B. Had a lot of fun. Down to Venice afterward. Rode on the roller-coasters and merry-go-rounds. Had my picture taken on one of those funny little tin-type things. Girl stopped me and said, "You look like the girl who played in The Sea Tiger." I could have kissed her. At last someone recognizes me for Alice White and not Clara Bow.

July 30. Had my horoscope cast by international astrologist. Very strange but he told me things practically the same as the other did.

July 31. Went to the beach again. Spent a lovely day with Leslie. Makes me want to laugh at what the astrologer said about not marrying for a long time, when I'm with him. Maybe we're happier this way, though. Marriage is awfully final.

August 1. Home most of the day. Dinner at night with L. We went to the theatre.

August 4. Started to work on Helen of Troy. My costume is the original Turkish towel. One wiggle and you're out of it. I'm playing Helen's maid. Gosh, my hair looks funny. It's all curled up in tight little ringlets.

"August 4—Started to work in Helen of Troy. My costume is the original Turkish towel —one wiggle and you're out of it." Thus Alice records another stepping stone on the road to fame in her Little Red Diary.

Aug. 6. Lovely dinner party at the Ambassador in honor of some writer who was going away. Had a grand time. Shirley Dorman and I put on an Apache dance. A lot of laughs. I got a couple of black and blue marks on my delicate anatomy from some hard falls.

Aug. 13. Went to a Richard Dix preview. Met Clara Bow again. She was very nice and talked of her intention to play "Dorothy" in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes.

Aug. 14. Over at Dix's house. Much fun. A lot of nice people there. Richard is quite a regular person.

Aug. 21. Went out to Betty Compson's again. She's a peach. She surely knows how to entertain. Just lets them do as they want. Some of the guests went swimming, others played cards and some just sat and talked. After a while a big buffet was spread and everyone helped himself. It sure is "open house" out there. I know that Betty did not know some of the people who were there.

Alice White demonstrating that in spite of her new conscience contract, she has nothing to hide.

Aug. 22. Worked all day. Saw L., the darling, at night.

Sept. 16. Learned I am to do part of "Dorothy" in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. Richard Barthelmess has wanted me to do the lead in The Noose. Sure is funny. You either get a lot of parts at once or you don't get any at all. I feel rather fortunate as I am the two hundredth girl to take a test for Dorothy.

Sept. 22. Started working in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. Was very happy. I sure hope I'm good in the part. Went out to the Rosson's house to hear the Dempsey fight returns. That interesting Victor Fleming was there.

Sept. 23. Working. Victor came over on the set. He waited for me and took me to dinner. We spent a very lovely evening. He's fascinating in a great masculine, protective way.

Sept. 25. Dinner at Montmartre with Victor and Mary Astor and Howard and Kenneth Hawks.

Oct. 8. Mal St. Clair gave a "Lorelei and Dorothy" party. Everybody was there. We danced and fooled around. I went to the party with Victor.

Oct. 17. Had dinner at Howard Hawk's house. We ate the ducks the boys brought back from their hunting trip. I never did like duck but I had to eat some. Had a grand time playing bridge.

Oct. 18. Finished part in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. I think I'll be good in this picture if they leave some of me in. I think I'm out of love. Wish I would get a terrific crush on some one again. I get tired of these little flirtations where they take you to dinner and dancing and expect to board with you from then on.

Oct. 22. Went on a boating trip with Ruth Taylor and Madeline Hurlock. Had a nice time but I never did care much about boats. I suppose you might say I'm not nautical but nice. Oh, terrible!

Oct. 29. Party at Mrs. Winifred Westover Hart's. Had a lot of fun. Little Bill, Jr., is an adorable child.

Oct. 30. Spent the afternoon at dear Betty Compson's.

Nov. 6. Went up to Noah Beery's trout farm in the valley. It's very beautiful. Whenever I ride through that beautiful, beautiful country, I feel like I want to ditch pictures and Hollywood and everything and live there forever. Everything is so fresh and rugged. Probably "Feb. 3—What if Dick should fall?" Dick Grace, Alice's aviator friend did crash many times as in the picture above, but lived to mend a broken neck.

I'd miss the bright lights in two days if I ever went back to nature.

Nov. 7. Had a terrible accident. Drove over an embankment, trying to avoid a smash-up. Just a miracle that I wasn't killed. Some kind fate saved me. I guess there are still things that I have to do on this earth.

Nov. 8. My darling pet monkey, Chico, died. He looked so sad, his eyes sort of half-open and his hands crossed. I tried so hard to keep him alive, but somehow I just didn't know what to do. Poor thing, he looked like a human being. I buried him in my prettiest candy box. Wept all over the place. First my little Ching goes on a rampage and then Chico dies.

Nov. 29. Went to the opening of Sunrise. Rather interesting picture. Went to a grand party at Murnau's house. Lots of celebrities there. Was mistaken by a noted motion picture writer to be Clara Bow. I'm getting darned tired of this sort of thing. I hope some people, sometime, will know that it's me.

Dec. 3. Started to work on The Mad Hour with Sally O'Neil. I was supposed to do the big part but my name wasn't big enough and they gave it to Sally. She's a lot of fun.

Dec. 19. Went Christmas shopping. Surely was tired out. Bought a lot of things.

Dec. 20. Started to work in Allan Dwan's picture, The Big Noise. It sounds like a very cute story.

Dec. 25. Spent Christmas at home with the family. At night went to a big Christmas party. The Christmas tree wasn't the only thing that was lit up. Never laughed so much in my life.

Dec. 31. Left for Tia Juana. Had a lot of fun on the way down. Spent day at Tia Juana. Won some money on the horses. Won some money in a crap game. It seems to be my lucky day. Lot of picture people were there, crowding down that funny little street that has music and beer and dancing in every stall. Drove home that night, crossing the border just before it closed. Got ready for my new picture.

Jan. 3. Working in The Big Noise. Chester Conklin plays my father. He introduced me to a rather interesting boy. His name is Dick Grace. He has nice crinkly eyes, that are very humorous. Quite an extraordinary person, too. He is an aviator. Does stunts and things, in pictures. I adore a man who does things, important things, I mean.

Alice White and Dick Grace, the aviator extraordinary, who supplied her with thrills in the clouds as well as on solid earth.

Jan. 28. Started to work on Harold Teen. It's a very cute picture. Arthur Lake and Mary Brian are in it, and Mervyn LeRoy is directing. I've been rushing around with Dick. I think I'm in love with that lad. Anyway, I haven't had time to write in my Diary, it's that hectic.

SOCIETY in Cinemaland

This jolly group—Charles Farrell, Duane Thompson, Roy Brooks, Jobyna Ralston, and Richard Arlen—faced the camera at a recent Hollywood party.

BEBE DANIELS' party at her new beach home was a gala event in filmland. She was assisted in receiving by her mother, Mrs. Phyllis Daniels, and her grandmother, Mrs. Eva Griffin.

I noticed Charlie Chaplin danced with his pretty leading lady, Virginia Cherrill. Matty Kemp seemed to divide his attentions equally between his dark-eyed hostess and piquant Lila Lee. Buster Keaton dutifully danced once with his charming wife, Natalie Talmadge; then wrested Harold Lloyd from his spouse, Mildred Davis, and went off in a corner to talk over the solemn business of comedy-making.

Estelle Taylor, lovelier than ever, arrived with Jack Dempsey. Betty Compson came alone, declaring she couldn't make her husband (James Cruze) into a successful party man. Anita Stewart and her fiance, Charles Converse. Lily Damita and Robert Castle greeted one another joyfully—they played together in German pictures and had much to talk about.

Joseph Schenck was there, and Robert Vignola, the George Fitzmaurices, Phyllis Haver, Roland Drew, Billie Dove and Irvin Willat, Carmelita Geraghty, Eddie Sutherland, Lois Moran, Marshall Neilan and Eileen Percy with her devoted husband, Ulrich Busch.

Dance contests were staged, old-fashioned square dances were entered into in an hilarious spirit; Charlie Chaplin brought down the house with a skating dance, and impromptu sketches performed by Lila Lee, Roy Brooks, Bebe, Phyllis Haver, and Dr. Harry Martin were much applauded. The climax of the evening's jollity was afforded by a film feature made up of odds and ends of old starring vehicles of Bebe, Pola Negri, Clara Bow and Wallace Beery.

DIAS DORADOS, Beverly Hills home of Carl Laemmle, was the exquisite setting for the wedding of the film magnate's only daughter, Rosabelle, to Stanley Bergerman, May Company executive. The ceremony was performed at six o'clock by Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin in the presence of relatives and a few friends.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was gorgeously gowned in a moyen age period dress of white ivory chiffon interwoven with gold and edged with rose point lace; her veil was of tulle with a cap of lace and a pearl coronet. She carried calla lilies. Her four attendants—Mrs. A. W. Berson, Miss Estelle Cohen, Mrs. Leo Keiler and Mrs. A. Stern—wore gowns of peach taffeta and carried orange-colored roses. Little Blanche Keiler made a sweet little flower girl. Carl Laemmle, Jr., was best man with Thomas May, Leo Keiler, Ben Rosenbaum and Jerome Daube serving as ushers.

A wedding dinner in the huge dining room where the tables were spread with gold cloth and centered with mounds of fruit and flowers followed the ceremony. Later a reception to over two hundred guests was held. Guests included Messrs. and Mesdames Glenn Tryon, Reginald Denny, Rod La Rocque (Vilma Banky), Rudolph Schildkraut, Walter Anthony, Adolph Zukor, Paul Leni and Edward Laemmle, Misses Beth Laemmle, Carmel Myers and Lillian Brandt.

A WEEK before the wedding Miss Laemmle was the recipient of a shower given at the Ambassador by Miss Carmel Myers. The feminine guests were invited to come early in the evening for dinner which was served in an alcove at Cocoanut Grove; the tables were tastefully decorated with silver candlesticks and yellow candles, and the favors were miniature brides and grooms. Waiters brought in the shower gifts by the basketload, all of which were gleefully opened by the happy bride-to-be. At eleven o'clock, the men who had attended a stag party given by Carl Laemmle, Jr., put in their appearance and dancing was enjoyed until the wee, small hours.

The feminine contingent comprised, besides the honoree and hostess, Colleen Moore, May McAvoy, Bessie Love, Edith and Irene Mayer, Patsy Ruth Miller, Gertrude Olmstead, Laura La Plante, Carmelita Geraghty, Pauline Starke, Claire Windsor and Mrs. Ben Schulberg. Among the men were Stanley Bergerman, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Maurice Cleary, Bob Leonard, John McCormick, William Seiter, Buster Collier, Jack Warner, Ernest Lubitsch and Jack White.

The surprise of the occasion came when Miss Myers announced that another wedding would take place in a few months time and the blushing little Miss May McAvoy displayed an exquisite diamond ring Maurice Cleary had placed on her finger the night before.

Rosabelle Laemmle, only daughter of Carl Laemmle, film magnate, and Stanley Bergerman, business executive, to whom she was recently married at one of Hollywood's most impressive ceremonies.

Lilyan Tashman and Edmund Lowe, who recently entertained the leading lights of Hollywood at a buffet supper.

It looks as if this is the month for cinemaland weddings. Lina Basquette, widow of Sam Warner, and Peverell Marley, cameraman for C. B. De Mille, were united before the altar of All Saints Church in Beverly Hills. June Collyer and Arthur Edeson served as maid of honor and best man, while Ernest Belcher gave his stepdaughter away.

PLANNED as a Mardi Gras, a carnival spirit pervaded the surprise birthday dinner to Joseph M. Schenck given by some seventy of his friends. It was a stag affair—Arthur W. Stebbins, financier of New York and Los Angeles, acting as host, and M. C. Levee as toastmaster.

An interesting feature was a 300-pound boat carved from one piece of ice and bearing appetizers, while the presentation of a four-foot birthday cake was greeted with cheers (the cake contained a false bottom which when removed disclosed ice cream in fancy molds). Each guest received a humorous souvenir of the happy occasion.

Bidden were Richard Barthelmess, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, John W. Considine, John Gilbert, Samuel Goldwyn, Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg, Ernst Lubitsch, Fred Niblo, Buster Collier, Edmund Goulding, Buster Keaton, Adolph Zukor, Milton Sills, Winfield Sheehan, Jack Warner, D. W. Griffith, Robert Z. Leonard, Louis Wolheim, Edwin Carewe, and many others.

THIS month's Mayfair dinner-dance was marked with small-smart parties. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Denny entertaining for the first time since their marriage, were hosts to the Edward Clines and Lonnie Dorsas.

Charles (Buddy) Rogers took advantage of a visit from his sister, Mrs. John Binford of Lincoln, Nebraska, to give a gay party at the home of Mrs. Meda Boggs

THE BRIDGE OF SAN LUIS REY, by Thornton Wilder, one of the most popular novels of recent years, is shortly to be seen on the screen.

Whatever it may lack in a basis of melodramatic plot is more than made up in a wealth of picturesque background and setting and with characters to match.

The story is laid in Latin America and Spain of several hundred years ago.

Among the principals in the notable cast are Lily Damita, Raquel Torres and Ernest Torrence.—M-G-M.

Nancy

Nancy Carroll's remarkable beauty elicits not only praise for itself, but exclamations of "Sweet!" and "Darling!" and "Naive!" as well—a rare tribute, but discouraging, when she sets out to act definitely wicked.

Would be Naughty

—but her baby face won't let her!

By HARMONY HAYNES

MISS NANCY CARROLL arose from her chaise longue to greet me. Her luxurious gown trailed behind her. She stifled a yawn as she languidly extended manicured finger tips and drawled, "I am so sorry not to be dressed, my deah—"

SHE did not! She bounced into the office at the Paramount Studio where I was waiting and said, "Hey, where's that pet abomination who wants the lowdown on me for SCREEN SECRETS?" I came forward to accept the challenge. "Outta my way, girlie—I'm looking for a writer." Zowie! Right on the tender spot. But I knew that writers are not to be baffled in such manner so I dug my toe into the carpet and said, "Aw, gee, Miss Carroll, ma couldn't come so she sent me. I hope ya don't mind."

She laughed. "Well, just stick that toe on the petrol, my dear, and let's get some soup. I'm making a talkie and if I am gone for more than an hour my voice may change."

She led the way through the back alleys to the Studio Cafe and I followed. We didn't have caviar, not by a check-book full; she had an egg sandwich and I had some soup and after that we both had a lotta laughs.

Nancy may be screenish but she isn't starish. She's just a poor little girl trying to get along in this Movie City without a maid, without a secretary, without a hobby, without aversions and without inhibitions. All that poor little actress has is a contract, a sense of humor and a husband. Her contract is a bit unusual. It is a frame-up between Fox and Paramount for twelve pictures a year and all the rest of the time she has to herself. If she is lucky she can get to bed by four in the morning, and she doesn't have to get up until almost eight. That is, unless she wants breakfast. Then she has to get up a little earlier, but, as Nancy says, "I'd rather sleep than eat and when that owie feeling hits my tummy about ten-thirty in the morning I console myself by saying that I am reducing." On holidays they let her have the evening off—say from midnight on.

SHE never said a word about her dear public—maybe she thinks it belongs to Pola or someone else who claimed it first. She doesn't talk about her future—she's so busy with her present. She doesn't live in Beverly Hills because it is too far from the studio. She doesn't have a chauffeur because she knows where the starter is herself. She doesn't have a maid because all her dresses slip on over her head.

Between sips of soup I said, "Tell me about yourself."

The blue eyes widened. "Whoa—is this a front page story?"

"It is if it's printable."

"Don't flatter me, infant, it'll be printable. No matter what I say you'll twist it around until is sounds nice and ladylike and about as interesting as a W. C. T. U. lecture. Oh, how I wish I could say something sensational! I'd get a big kick out of having people say, 'Oh, there's Nancy Carroll, the girl who—buzz—buzz—buzz—' and whisper the rest of it. But it's no use. I can't be naughty in print, not even a little bit, and if I do turn a neat little trick that should furnish material for Zit's, no one talks about it. They just say, 'Oh, that's Nancy Carroll. Isn't she sweet?' If they would just say I was wicked, dangerous, beautiful, dumb—anything but sweet. But my life is so colorless. I've never been successfully able to wield a paint brush.

"One time at a party I deliberately flirted with

Nina May McKenney, a leading lady in Hollywood at the age of sixteen, and with an enviable stage record behind her, is fired with ambition.

By HENRY MacMAHON

De Nellie Bly am a mighty fast boat,
An' a mighty fast Cap'n, tuh;
He sits up dah on de hurricane deck,
An' he keeps his eye on de crew!

"Ah cain't stay here, fo' dey wuks me tuh hard;
Ah's bound tuh leab dis town:
Ah'll take mah duds an' tote 'em on mah back
When de Nellie Bly comes down!"

LED by the Four Emperors of Harmony from Harlem town, gaily-hued roustabouts heaved merrily and sang this chantey of the Mississippi urge as they heaved. Round the bend came majestically the good side-wheeler—Cap'n, Kyurnels, Natchez belles in calicoes, and all. Down came the plank, up went the gangway as the ropes were made fast; and then the negroes, bending to the severer labor of getting the quarter-ton bales of cotton aboard, lightened the labor by religion, singing with gusto of what the prophet Ezekiel saw in the sky:

Way up yonder in de mountain top
'Way in de middle of de air,
Mah Lord spake and de Chariot stopped
'Way in de middle of de air!

Little wheel run by faith,
Big wheel run by de grace ob God,
Wheel, O wheel!
Way up in de middle of de air!

Yes, this happened in Hollywood, and so did the following:

A preacher addressed the unrepentant at a colored "woods preaching" down by de Ole Swamp. He donned the locomotive stoker's cap and engineer's overalls, shuffling his feet like the noise of the locomotive starting. "Satan's express train is a-startin'," he cried. "It's destination is Hell. Tickets one-way only. It carries a full load, and there are only three station stops—"

"Oh, Lordy!" "Jesus kin stop dat train! Brudder, git off at de fust station—"

"Now the first station is called Faith. Here it is!" The shuffling feet ceased, and the ebony speaker dramatized the jump-off to salvation. "How many goin' to leave that train now?"

"Ah is!" shouted a bouncing wench at the very edge of the Swamp. "Glory be! Hallelujah!" came from the "saved," squatted in the front rows. "How about bringing your old man?" cried the preacher. The two-hundred-pound negress flew back and seized her weazened husband, who also came dancing with joy.

"Now the second station is Obedience," continued the worker of magicry. His thundering tones thrilled even the casual Caucasian with premonitory tremor and lively desire to escape the pit. "How many goin' to forsake hooch an' gamblin' an' join the Lord?"

By dribbles a dozen or more obeyed the call. The "saved" were getting frantic in their imprecations of the Satanic Railway. Down in the middle of the assemblage a woman was having the "power." The Devil indeed had her in his grasp, as a century and a half ago he exercised her great-great-great-grandma in some dim Nigerian forest. With shrieking voice, rolling eyes and many tossings and tumblings, she dramatized the exorcisement and victory.

"The third and last station is Repentance," announced the preacher.

The Rescue

When Romance Grows Stern

ALTHOUGH The Rescue is not one of the best of Joseph Conrad's novels, it has been made into a colorful motion picture which stands Ronald Colman in good stead for his first lone starring venture after his parting from Vilma Banky.

Colman looks the seafaring man who is a gun-runner for a Javanese tribe, and it is only natural, perhaps, that this man should take love, or infatuation, whichever you please, quite grimly when it comes to him in the form of an English lady who is bored with her commonplace husband on his stranded yacht. Perhaps it is natural, too, that the sea captain should put it aside even more sternly after it has led him to forget his vow to a rajah whose death is the penalty.

In these circumstances—almost strictly those of the book—we cannot expect throbbing feeling and fierce thrills, nor do we find them. But this romance has much of the vague beauty and mysterious glamour of the sea, and that may be just what Conrad was driving at. The picture shows also the blowing up of an old schooner and gorgeous tribal ceremonies.

Colman's mood is right and there is fine, quiet strength in his acting. Lily Damita is just a pretty woman, not at all the English lady, and, no matter what the time, the place or the state of weather, terribly dressed up.—Goldwyn.

A Lady of Chance

Angel Face Needs Lifting

A LADY OF CHANCE serves only to cheapen and vulgarize Norma Shearer. No further proof of the shameful waste of her charm is needed than the ugly fact that she is made a party to the notorious badger game.

They call her Angel Face, and she certainly looks it. But everything else is wrong with the picture. The confidence lady, paroled from prison if you please, goes from New York to Atlantic City and proceeds to trim a susceptible delegate to a tile and cement convention.

As this poor sap, John Mack Brown, dresses and acts like a rich young man. Thereupon, Angel Face marries him and heads south. Finding he is poor, she runs true to type by taking the night train to New York, but morning, lo and behold! sees her back with her husband.

This sudden change of heart in the cold-blooded grafter is no less amazing than her voluntary return to prison, to save the cement lad from her old partner in crime, and her final parole in the custody of her husband.

Lowell Sherman overacts amusingly as the male crook, and Miss Shearer tries exceedingly hard to save her face.

But anyone who could possibly believe these wild goings-on would readily believe Hollywood to be a virgin forest.—M-G-M.

In Old Arizona

Outdoor Talkie Refreshing

IF WE may judge by first results, the microphone takes to the open air like a duck to water. In Old Arizona just talks all over the place.

By way of relief from listening to actors, we may turn a grateful ear to the braying of a donkey, the squealing of a pig, and other simple delights upon which the gods have set no great price. Nor is the small boy

the PASSING SHADOW SHOW

THERE is strong indication in various pictures reviewed here that our screen heroines are in no eminent danger of becoming pigeon-toed by walking the straight-and-narrow path. Possibly Hollywood's humane producers feel the boys have been running free in gangster byways quite long enough and that it is now high time the girls should know they need not keep off the grass.—Charles Darnton.

who still lurks under the vest of every man-jack of us denied that thrill which leaps to life at hearing the old stage coach held up, not merely seeing it, but catching the sharp command, the startled cries, and then the heavy thump of the box of gold.

Running through all this excitement is a racy story acted against picturesque and often impressively beautiful backgrounds. Warner Baxter is the best bandit since Holbrook Blinn gave us The Bad Man. Edmund Lowe is a very cocky soldier, out to "get" the bandit and $5,000. Dorothy Burgess, fresh from the stage, is a Spanish girl—and no lady. She slithers around until she expects to get the reward. But the bandit fixes it so that she gets shot. The moral, if any, seems to be that the wages of sin is not a $5,000 reward.

No doubt this picture will be successful—but not with the Epworth League.—Fox.

The Doctor's Secret

Now It Can Be Told

WHEN a talking picture is bad it is very, very bad. You are more than likely to reach this conclusion on hearing—and often trying to understand—The Doctor's Secret, long-drawn-out from J. M. Barrie's Half an Hour.

Ruth Chatterton is quite unintelligible in early scenes of the picture and even in her later moments never altogether easy on the ear. The same may be said of John Loder, who is even more uninteresting as a lover.

There is a general effect of stilted artificiality. Miss Chatterton wins no deep sympathy for the bitter heroine who leaves her insufferable husband only to find within half an hour that the young man with whom she was about to bolt has been killed in a street accident. It simply remains for her to parley with the doctor who happened along at the time and then comes to dinner at her house, knowing her secret. Naturally, he is professionally decent enough to keep the secret.

In playing the doctor Robert Edeson has the best of the long talking match, especially as H. B. Warner is hopelessly miscast as the boorish husband.

But nothing really matters, for it's all as flat as a proverbial bride's first pancake.

—Paramount.

My Man

Fannie Saved By Sound

WHENEVER the plot thickens on her in My Man Fannie Brice sings it off. Wise girl, for the words without music given her in this part-talkie could not possibly be called a great help.

Most of Fannie's songs are good—they always have been—and make good entertainment. She sings My Man twice, once sadly as she did in the Follies when her husband, Nicky Arnstein, was a federal guest in Atlanta and she could easily work on the sentimentality of the Broadway mob, and again joyously at having the man in the present case finally restored to her.

This particular gent is a muscular simp, played by Gwinn Williams, who is vamped away from Fannie by a naughty sister, but realizes his mistake when the poor working girl is transformed into a gaudy Broadway star.

It's all well enough for Miss Brice to have Second Hand Rose, but with a second-hand story she can't possibly hope to become the feminine Al Jolson of the screen. She'll just have to get along with her funny Yiddish songs and antics—and she does. —Warner Brothers.

The Case of Lena Smith

Militant Motherhood

HERE is an interesting, well-made and well-acted picture, but The Case of Lena Smith is so thoroughly continental in spirit that it doubtless will be more to the liking of Europeans than Americans.

In my opinion, it would be more true, and certainly more moving, if Lena were not married to the father of her child, for an aristocratic young army officer in the Vienna of 1895 would not be likely to make a Hungarian village girl his wife.

Nor can I believe the gay young officer would shoot himself after gambling away the money Lena let him have in the hope of his winning enough more to enable her to get her child out of a foundlings' home.

Lena's fight for her child is kept up against her professionally moral father-in-law, and neither a sentence to the workhouse nor the bleeding agony of climbing a high barbed-wire fence can stop her from regaining her own.

Esther Ralston gives an unfalteringly courageous performance of Lena. There is no hero, but James Hall makes the best of the debonair lieutenant.—Paramount.

His Captive Women

Her Catching Ways

IT'S PRETTY much all Dorothy Mackaill, and very pretty it is. With a face of rare photographic beauty, Miss Mackaill proves in His Captive Woman she is one of the most interesting of the younger screen actresses.

You see, Miss Mackaill embodies a jealous heroine wanted in New York for pumping lead into a Broadway rounder who picked her up one night when she was just a poor street walker with wet feet. So a supposedly woman-proof policeman, honestly acted by Milton Sills, is sent to bring her back from her place in the sun, and the two of them live on cocoanuts and romance when they are wrecked on one of those desert isles that come in handy for the movies.

Scenes made in Hawaii are really charming, and there's a thrilling one in which the kind-hearted murderess does a high dive and saves her surprised captor from an exceedingly businesslike shark. The tropical episodes are so picturesque and entertaining that they will make you enjoy this picture, provided you don't take murder seriously. Evidently the judge doesn't, for when the dear girl is tried and found guilty he gives her and the overjoyed cop a life sentence on their homey little island.—First National.

The Office Scandal

Sob Sisters At Work

THERE is still more murder in The Office Scandal and here again it is done by a woman. But Pathe has at least had sense enough to save its radiant star from doing it, keeping Phyllis Haver's skirts clean and letting Margaret Livingston do the dirty work.

The fair Phyllis is just the sort of girl reporter I've always wanted to see, but never have seen, in a newspaper office. Puffing a cigarette, she parks her feet on her desk and displays silk-stockinged legs of such disturbing beauty as would take the mind of even an old, near-sighted exchange editor off his work.

Otherwise, this newspaper office is quite real—that is, the copy desk and the rest of the furniture are convincing.

What causes the office scandal is the suspicion that the star reporter whom Jerry loves has killed a race track man whose wife had been trotting around with the innocent lad. All that Leslie Fenton has to do as the Lothario of the staff is keep his mouth shut. Miss Livingston obligingly keeps hers open. Really, Miss Haver has all the work to do, and she does it brightly and amusingly in her inimitable way.

This picture will never set Park Row on fire, but it may warm up a small neighborhood house.—Pathe.

LOVE is

That's what Bubbles Wilson, now Mary Nolan of the films, thinks about the popular ailment. And here's why.

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY

I'M IN LOVE!" cried Mary Nolan, tossing her corn-silk curls.

"I'm sincerely and desperately in love. Only one man in the world exists for me." She sat on her orchid-painted bed in her orchid-and-green room at the Ambassador, the violet cuffs of her green satin lounging pajamas falling back from her pretty arms, and she stole a side glance at the cabinet photograph in the frame beside her pillows.

"I believe everyone—the hardest-boiled man and the most commonplace woman—goes through life seeking for love. Whether they admit it to themselves or not, and no matter how much they scoff, in their secret hearts they are always expecting to meet the great love, the one perfect mate.

"All my life I've been in love—if not with an individual then with love itself.

"Oh, yes, I've been in love before, and love has gone. It is so fragile and elusive. You close your fingers on it and it is as if you closed them on a bubble. When love goes, it is not one's fault. Eternal constancy can not bring it back—and why should a bee hover over a flower after he has drawn all its honey?

"That is why I think marriage is cruel. I mean marriage as it exists today. I think that another five or six years will see great changes in our ideas about marriage. A freer and fairer code. Today, two people are tied together because, for a season, they are in love. The growth of one—usually the man—changes their relationship, but they must stay married unless one or the other provides a reason for divorce.

"So far as I have observed, married women rarely care for their husbands after they have been married five years, but they don't want any one else to have them. As for men, when a man has developed beyond his wife, he takes a paternal attitude toward her; she is a child and he must take care of her, although she bores him frightfully.

"I shall never, never marry."

Mary Nolan in the comforting arms of John Gilbert, in a scene from Thirst—a very satisfactory place to nestle and ponder the fragile bubble that is love.

a Bubble

Although she speaks so emphatically against marriage now, not so long ago Mary Nolan's one idea was to be a wife and mother.

Lina Basquette, Josephine Dunn, Betty Bronson and Mary—then known as Imogene Wilson—used to hold long, adolescent discussions on how to bring up children, how to hold husbands and what is the ideal man. Lina was then premiere danseuse of the Follies and the others were doing extra work in movies—Mary also dancing by night in Ziegfeld's chorus.

"We were all so wise then!" sighs Mary, from among her orchid pillows.

MARY ran away from the convent when she was fourteen and went to New York where Arthur William Brown, well known artist, seeing her pass on the street, was so impressed with her beauty that he urged her to pose for him. Fellow artists engaged her, and soon little Mary Imogene Robertson (the name on her birth certificate) looked out with wide-set blue eyes from covers of magazines circulating all over the world.

James Montgomery Flagg, the artist, discovering that his lovely model was studying dancing in her spare time, gave her a letter to Arthur Hammerstein, who placed her in a small part in his current production, from which she graduated into Ziegfeld's Follies, and as "Bubbles Wilson" began to be known on the Great White Way.

It was then that she worked as extra in the movies because she needed money. And it was then that she dreamed of romance and woke with a shock from that golden dream to find her world crashing around her.

Mary will not talk about this; she feels that she should be allowed to forget Frank Tinney and all the agony he caused her; and no two versions of the affair concur. It is agreed, however, that Bubbles had tried to put him out of her life and that it was because she refused to see him that he assaulted her. She brought suit but the suit was dismissed, and she fled from New York, where the whole town seemed made up of one mouth repeating her name, one pair of eyes staring at her. She cried until she was sick.

"But things can't hurt you unless you let them," said Mary, with the wisdom of bitterness, "that's what I've learned. When life is too terrible, you must laugh. Don't brood about the lies people tell, or the things people say. Just laugh! Don't wait for something to laugh at—laugh and presently nothing will seem so bad as it seemed before."

After the catastrophe, Mary was starred in Germany for more than two years. She made fourteen pictures and came to be called "The Lillian Gish of Germany."

"And now I suppose they call me a new Theda Bara," observed Mary, over the chocolate ice cream we were sharing on the orchid bed.

"Believe it or not, I don't flirt with men! I wouldn't know how. When I am in love, I am terribly sincere. I mean every word I say. Flirting is a sort of pretense—a kind of cheating, isn't it?

"I've watched women who were trying to vamp men. They sit with their legs crossed, so that their skirts are just a bit too high, and they look out through their eyelashes and smile, and they look so foolish that if I were a man I would run for my life—in the other direction!

Mary Nolan when, known as "Bubbles" Wilson, she was nightly proving a delight to critical Broadway eyes by appearing in the Follies.

"When I was a child, I loved to sit and dream all day; but now that I am grown up, now that I am a woman, I am interested in living, not dreaming; I want to get the best out of life."

Although the German people were very nice to the little blonde star and everyone she worked with seemed pleased

On the Sound Stage

RUTH M. TILDESLEY

visits Universal's enormous new sound stage to bring SCREEN SECRETS readers the absorbing story of Broadway's production.

A SHORT buzz from a muted bell.

"Interlock!" commands Hal Mohr, camera man for Universal's $1,000,000 production of Broadway. His two assistants wait a breathless second until the magic synchronization is made with the recording apparatus above before closing the door of the soundproof camera booth on themselves and their instrument.

"Quiet, children," admonishes the calm voice of Frank Reiter, assistant director.

Two more short buzzes.

"Quiet, please," Dr. Paul Fejos' slight foreign [illegible] is almost lost as the large, booming "QUIET!" [illegible] from the unseen "mixer" in the recorder's cage [illegible]g high above on the largest sound stage in the world.

The little group of players who have been standing rigid on the set swing immediately into action.

"One—two—three—four! A little more pep, girls. One—two—three—four!" Glenn Tryon, as the conceited young hoofer, kicks and steps in unison with the five comely cabaret girls, attired in brief work-out costumes, who languidly follow his rythmic commands.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., delighted at the progress on Broadway, his first big feature picture.

Broadway, taken from the famous stage hit of that name, is a swift-moving powerful story of night club life in New York City. Rather, the story of bootleggers, gunmen and entertainers whose activities are essential parts of night club life. Following the sensational murder of Scar Edwards by a rival bootlegger, the back stage rehearsal room of a typical Broadway cabaret is the setting for a variety of exciting episodes ranging from booze conferences to the brilliant climax with discovery of the murderer producing unusual results and settlement.

"This act ain't bad—it's lousy," commented Nick Verdis (Paul Porcasi) from his vantage point behind Glenn.

"Go fry an egg!" gloomily advised Pearl (Evelyn Brent).

A padding of soft furry paws and a plaintive "mew!" comes clearly just as the hoofer starts to pick up his cue.

"CUT!" the director's sharp order rings out.

Miss Tildesley, our correspondent, looks on at the shooting of the cabaret scene with Hal Mohr, cameraman. To the right of the camera booth, Mickey Flynn.

All action on the set ceases as a property boy hurriedly gathers up the feline interloper and scurries away with her.

"You see—that is what sound pictures mean. Trouble—always trouble!" Dr. Fejos rose from his director's chair and paced the floor while the tedious business of preparing the scene was once more going forward. "If it is not a cat who spoils it, some one coughs or sneezes or a grip drops a tool. Or perhaps a fly settles on one of the microphones. Do you know what that sounds like on the recorded film? A buzz saw—yes.

"Again it may be one of the actors in the scene. Yesterday, Miss Brent tried to add realism by chewing gum but the recorder phoned down that it sounded like a waterfall. Then Otis Harlan had to pound a desk with his fist; on the first take, they tell us it was like a cannon shot. All newspapers used have to be dampened as their crackle is more like bomb shells. We soled the dancers' shoes with rubber to prevent squeaks but when they turned quickly, the shoes made a squishy noise . . . yes, trouble—always there is trouble."

YET Carl Laemmle, Jr., is one wide, expansive smile over this, his first big production as associate producer.

"We paid $225,000 for the rights to Broadway. We built the biggest sound stage and engaged an expensive cast and director and—did you see our $35,000 camera crane?" eagerly inquired "Uncle Carl's" son and heir who has just attained his majority.

As a matter of fact, the day I talked to him he was so excited about his sister's wedding and the knowledge that he was to wear his first full dress suit that his associate producer's duties were relegated to second place. However, Edward T. Lowe, who wrote the silent script for the picture as well as the dialogue for the talking version, supplied the missing details.

"Mr. Laemmle and I worked everything out together before production began," explained Mr. Lowe, seizing a fleeting moment between sound shots. "The stage play runs two and a quarter hours. We could, of course, shoot it exactly as it was played but it wouldn't be a success. Monotony is not as apparent on the stage as it is in pictures so we must change the set. They say one picture is worth 10,000 words. The screen doesn't talk about it—it shows it. Also, we have a wider range than the stage.

"For our talkie version, we can use only fifty per cent of the play dialogue, so cutting it down and deciding what was most important was one of our hardest jobs. The silent script—"

He stopped abruptly as the magic word "Interlock!" reverberated throughout the stage. The electricians perched up in the flies settled themselves, carpenters ceased hammering, a group of actors huddled around a salamander stove paused in the middle of a hectic discussion, Otis Harlan (who plays Porky) tiptoed elaborately with his burden of hot soup and toast to a convenient chair.

On the stage, Pearl (Evelyn Brent) offered to buy the other girls a drink.

"My God, it can talk!" came sarcastically from Grace (Ruby McCoy).

"CUT!"

Mr. Lowe joined Dr. Fejos and Thryza Nelson, the capable script girl, for a brief conference before returning to explain this latest development.

"Another difference between the stage and screen—here we cannot use profanity. I tried to eliminate everything of the kind in my adaptions but a few escaped me. All our 'My Gods' are changed to 'gosh,' 'golly' or 'gee,' our 'damns' are 'darns' or 'the devils'

Bidding for

Richard Barthelmess remains loyal to films—Phyllis Haver squashes a myth—Dorothy Parker returns from Hollywood and John Gilbert—Lily Damita's tough stage luck—something new about Adolphe Menjou—William Powell speaks of himself and others—and other news from New York.

By ERNEST HAYNES
SCREEN SECRETS New York Correspondent.

FOR A few hectic moments it looked as though the East were to win an important battle over the West. Florenz Ziegfeld was on the war path for one of the favorites of the screen, Richard Barthelmess. And, considering the nature of the flattering offer, it's a wonder that Dick continues to be on the list of actors devoted to what was once jokingly referred to as the silent drama.

Ziggy has been a Barthelmess fan for some time, but when he witnessed a New York preview of Weary River, in which Dick sings two songs, Weary River and It's Up To You, he determined that he had found the star for his forthcoming musical production of Fay Bainter's erstwhile vehicle, East Is West. Immediately, he offered to buy Dick's contract from First National, convinced that sooner or later Barthelmess is sure to be a big success on the legitimate stage.

Remembering a conversation I had with Dick at a studio party opposite Carnegie Hall some time ago, a conversation which indicated conclusively that he talks, thinks and dreams movies, and that they are nothing if not a disease with him, I wasn't surprised at the final outcome of this first important conflict between the talking movies and the legitimate theatre.

Dick's formal answer went as follows: "I must decline with thanks and appreciation Mr. Ziegfeld's most generous offer to return to the stage. The offer I have received is most flattering and tempting, but I cannot play in opposition to myself on Broadway. Besides, I am under contract to First National Pictures, Inc. for two more years and the arrangement is a most happy one for me."

The stage has lost Al Jolson, George Jessel, Eddie Cantor and many another to the talking pictures, if only for a few months at a time. A matter of some conjecture to the gossiping New Yorker: who will be the first star to reveal his hitherto hidden talents to musical comedy producers by successful appearances in the speakies and singies? After all, it's just a great big game of give and talk.

Frolicsome Phyllis

AS FAR as I'm concerned, movie stars have entered the purple cow class. Considering the carefree manner in which news mongers marry them off by means of several ferocious pecks on the Corona, I certainly should rather see than be one.

It's a sort of fever for the New Yawk gentry. News comes over the wire that Bebe Daniels is going to marry

Barthelmess

Ben Lyon any moment, that Joan Crawford and Doug Fairbanks, Jr., have published the bans, that there are any number of impending splicings among the Hollywood wedlocksmiths. "No such news in New York? Horrible! Let's make up some!" In some such manner the story developed that Phyllis Haver was marrying none other than Bert Lytell, who's playing a dual role in the Broadway show, Brothers. One day, one of our Main Stem playboys published the news. A week later he announced that it was all over. He was quite right. By that time it was all over the country.

After a delightful luncheon with Phyllis Haver in her apartment at the Savoy Plaza, I came to the conclusion that the proof for the item is that Phyllis and Bert are both in the motion picture industry, and happen to be in New York at the same time.

She disposed of that matter briefly. "It's really very embarrassing," she said. "Of course, I've met Bert, but I scarcely know him at all."

The conversation soon turned to D. W. Griffith, whom Phyllis eulogized as one of the pillars of the movie industry. "The old-timers hold him in so much respect that they sit around the lot in dignified silence attentively waiting for orders. The young gang thinks a lot of him, too, but—well, I just wasn't used to such seriousness as existed on that lot when we started making The Battle of the Sexes. I tried sitting there in my chair with my hands folded on my lap looking like a good little girl. After a while I couldn't stand it any longer, so I went up to him and said, 'Mr. Griffith, would you mind awfully if I play?' 'Play?' he said. I told him: 'Yes. I can't do a thing unless I can play around and laugh and be natural. I wonder if you mind if I run over once in a while and bite you on the ear?'

"We became great friends and he used to be an entirely different person playing around the lot with me like a kid. One day, when we'd almost finished the picture, he said, 'This picture has been more fun than any I've ever made. You've killed every shred of dignity I ever had but I've enjoyed myself! And by the way, Phyllis,' he said, 'this afternoon we'll have a couple of hundred extras down there and—well, er—say, Phyl, I guess maybe you'd better not jump up on my lap and bite me on the ear this afternoon.'"

During her brief stay on Guzzler's Gulch, Phyllis got a big kick out of attending the annual brawl at Webster Hall for one hectic hour, another big party given in her honor, and a performance of that show that's got New Yorkers on their blase ears: Follow Through. "It's a honey," said Phyllis. "But gee, I don't think you ever relax in New York. I don't see how you stand it. Out home when we work on a picture from early morning 'till late at night it's impossible to do anything in the evening except sleep. In New York everybody stays up no matter how hard the work during the day." Right, Phyllis. New York's hymn is "Sleep no more, my lady."

Incidentally, it developed that Phyllis judges character and forms her likes and dislikes by a person's nostrils. No joke. The lucky gentleman who wins her will be able to boast to his grandchildren that he won the great matrimonial race by a nose. Heh, heh.

WHO'S IN

Marion Davies

Marion Davies

MARION DAVIES, born with the name of Douras, is plain American with a dash of Irish. She claims New York City as her native heath, and the date of her arrival as January 3, 1900. She was educated there and at the Sacred Heart Convent at Hastings. Her eager stage aspirations were fulfilled when she appeared in Chin Chin. At the same time she posed for prominent artists. Eventually she was discovered by Ziegfeld, and she remained with him for several seasons, singing and dancing. Her first screen appearance was in Runaway Romany, for which she wrote the scenario. Today she is the most popular girl in the motion picture colony.

Hobbies: All outdoor sports.

Harold Lloyd

Harold Lloyd

HAROLD LLOYD was born in Burchard, Nebraska, on April 20, 1893. He was educated in Omaha, Denver, and San Diego. The most remarkable trait in young Harold was his keen business acumen; for he was constantly hustling after the American Eagle by selling newspapers, peddling popcorn, and appearing in "amateur night" vaudeville. Finishing school, he headed for Hollywood, where five dollars a day as an extra looked like big money back in 1914. His small-time experience as an actor with various stock companies, in which he was adept at carrying the proverbial spear, helped him leap forward in films. His ambition was to become a character actor; and his first pictures, carried from one casting producer to another, outrivaled Lon Chaney's most astonishing efforts at disguise. Harold Lloyd is married to Mildred Davis, and is the proud father of small Gloria Lloyd.

Hobbies: His collection of Great Danes, handball, swimming and golf.

Gloria Swanson

Gloria Swanson

GLORIA SWANSON was born in Chicago, on March 27, 1898. Her father was an army agent, and Gloria's early education was gained in many scattered places, chiefly in Key West, Florida, and Porto Rico. When she was sixteen, she was enrolled in the Chicago Art Institute. It was at this time that Gloria, with an aunt, paid her first visit to the old Essanay studios, and promptly decided she would like to go into pictures. She was offered a job in the old Keystone Comedies, under Mack Sennett. It was shortly afterward that she married Wallace Beery, from whom she later obtained a divorce. An offer from the Triangle Company gave Miss Swanson an opportunity to transfer her art from comedy to drama, and a De Mille contract, followed by a Paramount contract, helped make her one of the leading dramatic stars of the screen. She is now married to the Marquis Henri de la Falaise de la Coudray.

Hobby: Sculpture.

Emil Jannings

ALTHOUGH Emil Jannings is hailed as the greatest German actor in America, he is an American by birth, having first seen the light of day in Brooklyn, New York, in 1886. However, when he was only a year old, he was taken to Germany, his parents' fatherland, where he lived until two years ago when he joined the Paramount ranks and made as his initial American picture The Way of All Flesh. Jannings received his education at the Gerlitz Gymnasium, but at the age of sixteen he joined a small theatrical troupe and began a career of one-night stands which lasted for twelve years. Visioning motion pictures as the coming expression of art, he played in Fromont, Jr., Riessler, Sr. This was the forerunner of many U. F. A. successes, including Passion with Pola Negri; Deception, Peter the Great, Quo Vadis, The Loves of Pharoah, Othello, The Last Laugh, Variety, and Faust. He himself directed The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari.

Hobbies: His prize collection of Chows and his pet parrot.

Phyllis Haver

DOUGLAS, KANSAS, got some high-powered publicity on January 6, 1899, when Phyllis was born with the good old Irish name of O'Haver. When she was at the pigtail age, she moved with her family to Los Angeles, where she received her education. On graduating from high school with no especial career in mind, she decided that as the motion picture studios were so near at hand she would try her luck as an actress. She was immediately accepted as an extra girl at the Sennett Studios. In a very short time her naturally comic tendencies were evident, and she was elevated to stardom. Tiring of comedies, she branched out into serious productions, the most notable of which was What Price Glory.

Hobbies: Raising pedigreed cats, swimming and dancing.

Charlie Chaplin

THE "King of Comics" was born in Paris, of English parents. His father is said to have been a music hall entertainer in France. Charlie Chaplin himself played in English music halls when still very young, and was finally engaged by Fred Karno to tour America with his vaudeville act, A Night in an English Music Hall. In this he played the part of a drunkard, and his many humorous antics and falls brought him to the attention of the motion picture producers when the act reached Los Angeles where it played at the Orpheum Theatre. He began work with the old Keystone Comedy Company under Mack Sennett. It is said that Mabel Normand was the first to recognize his natural humor, and to suggest that he be given a job in pictures. Starting as her leading man, Chaplin was soon starred. The Kid, which brought Jackie Coogan to the films, was his first great success. Chaplin has been married twice—to Mildred Harris, and to Lita Grey, both of whom divorced him.

Hobbies: Tennis, the violin and pipe organ.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SOUTH SEAS

~but when I started to play the lauqh was on them!

"Well, folks, I guess we'll have to lock up the piano and make faces at ourselves."

Helen Parker's party was starting out more like a funeral than a good time.

"Isn't Betty Knowles coming?" an anxious voice sang out.

"Unfortunately Betty is quite ill tonight and Chet Nichols is late as usual," replied Helen gloomily. "I wish Sis wasn't away at school and she'd make the keys talk for us."

"I know some brand new card tricks," volunteered Harry Walsh.

"Great!" said Helen. "I'll go and find some cards."

While she was gone I quietly stepped up to the piano bench, sat down, and started to fumble with the pedals underneath. Somebody spotted me. Then the wisecracks began.

They Poke Fun at Me

"Ha! Ha! Ted thinks that's a player-piano," chuckled one of the boys.

"This is going to be a real musical comedy," added one of the fair sex.

I was glad I gave them that impression. Their surprise would be all the greater. I kept fiddling around the pedals—making believe that I was hunting for the foot pumps.

"Come over to my house some night," said Harry. "I've got an electric player and you can play it to your heart's content. And I just bought a couple of new rolls. One is a melody of Victor Herbert's compositions—the other . . ."

Before he had a chance to finish I swung into the strains of the sentimental "Gypsy Love Song." The laughter and joking suddenly ceased. It was evident that I had taken them by surprise. What a treat it was to have people listening to me perform. I continued with "Kiss Me Again" and other popular selections of Victor Herbert. Soon I had the crowd singing and dancing to the tune of the latest syncopation.

Finally they started to bombard me with questions . . . "How? . . . When? . . . Where? . . . did you ever learn to play?" came from all sides.

I Taught Myself

Naturally, they didn't believe me when I told them I had learned to play at home and without a teacher. But I laughed myself when I first read about the U. S. School of Music and their unique method for learning music.

"Weren't you taking a big risk, Ted?" asked Helen.

"None at all," I replied. "For the very first thing I did was to send for a Free Demonstration Lesson. When it came and I saw how easy it was to learn without a teacher I sent for the complete Course. What pleased me so was the fact that I was playing simple tunes by note from the very start. For I found it easy as ABC to follow the clear print and picture instructions that came with each lesson. Now I play several classics by note and most all of the popular music. Believe me, there's a real thrill in being able to play a musical instrument."

* * * *

This story is typical. The amazing success of the men, women and children who take the U. S. School of Music course is largely due to a newly perfected method that makes reading and playing music—actually simple!

Even if you don't know one note from another now, you can easily grasp each clear, inspiring lesson of this surprising course. You can't go wrong. First you are told how a thing is done, then a picture shows you how, then you do it yourself and hear it.

Thus you actually teach yourself right in your own home, without any long hours of tedious practice. Without any dull or uninteresting scales you learn how to play real music from real notes.

Postal Pouch

The Postal Pouch Editor will answer your questions on this page. For a personal answer, enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

RUTH W.: Watch out for Jack Mulhall in Ritzy Rosie, opposite Alice White. He was born in Wappinger Falls, N. Y., October 7, 1898, is five feet, eleven and one-half inches tall, weighs one hundred and fifty-five, has brown hair, and blue eyes. Yes, married. He was on the stage for several years before going into pictures; and you may remember him as an actor in the original Biograph Company.

PEARL F.: Write my answer on paper, Pearl? Shure, and did you expect me to chisel it in stone? If you meant send a personal reply, you omitted one delicate detail—the stamped, self-addressed envelope. Here are some of the addresses you wanted, and the rest you'll find under H. N. D. and elsewhere in this department. Billie Dove, First National; Leatrice Joy and Greta Garbo, M-G-M; Laura La Plante and Reginald Denny, Universal Studios, Universal City; Rod La Rocque, De Mille, Culver City; Dolores Costello, Warner Brothers, Hollywood. It takes about four months for answers to appear in the Postal Pouch—but even this is shorter than most magazines! Oysters may be mum, but apparently Pearls are not.

MARY AUGUSTINE, I almost joined the choir when I saw your name! Clara Bow is five feet, three and one-half inches tall, weighs one hundred and ten, has red hair, and brown eyes, and was born in Brooklyn on July 29, 1905. Alice White is five feet, three inches, weighs one hundred and ten, is twenty-one years old, has blond hair, and dark eyes. Ramon Novarro is twenty-nine years old, weighs one hundred and sixty, and is five feet, ten inches tall. All are very much single. Your other questions appear elsewhere in this column. Bring that pretty name back and stay awhile, Mary Augustine!

J. G. W.: That was Barry Norton who was killed in What Price Glory and The Legion of the Condemned. No he doesn't have to die in all his pictures. He just gets jilted by the lady he loves in Mother Knows Best. Only I understand Fox is making the picture with two endings, one happy and the other sad. So Barry either gets his girl or he doesn't. She either dies as she does in the original Edna Ferber story, or lives happily ever after.

CATHERINE S.: Bless your generous little heart, I'm not requesting free-will offerings of a two-cent stamp with each letter, except when a personal answer is desired—and then it's got to be a self-addressed envelope. As you did not give your full name, I couldn't write you exclusively. See? Dolores Costello has blond hair, unbobbed. She is twenty-one years old, and married. Write for her picture at Warner Brothers, Hollywood, where she is under long-term contract.

STATION REDLIPS: Boy, and how, I'm tuning in with a loud speaker! You say it doesn't matter exactly who I am, as I'm just a machine to answer questions. Well, you'd be surprised what a well-cranked machine can do, Redlips! Leatrice Joy's little girl's name is Leatrice Joy II, and she is about three years old. Mary Brian was christened Louise Dantzler. Arthur Lake is a dear little bachelor aged nineteen. Don Alvarado is happily married, is twenty-four years old, and hails from Albuquerque. I don't happen to know his real name. That was Loretta Young with Chaney in Laugh, Clown, Laugh. Are you very, very sure it was only your cousin who lent you his hanky in the sad scenes? Gosh, I never realized before what a lucky brute a mere cousin could be!

—P. & A. Photo.

Jean Lorraine, Clara Bow, Alice Adair and Adrienne Dore make an attractive study in black and white in their costumes for Clara's picture, The Wild Party.

FRANK O.: Thomas Meighan is six feet tall. Write to Al Cooke at the Darmour-F. B. O. Productions, Hollywood. Billie Dove was born on May 14, 1903, and is five feet, five inches tall. Those were pretty capital letters in your note. Are you studying commercial art? If not, why not?

CHARLINE: Here's a new name for the Postal Pouch, and a pretty one, too. Write to Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell at Fox Films, Hollywood. William Haines, Nils Asther, and Ralph Forbes are at M-G-M, and Don Alvarado at United Artists, Hollywood. Thirty pictures of famous stars! That's quite a harem, Charline! Sorry, but we have no list of addresses; but if you'll just go through the Postal Pouch carefully, you'll find a lot each month; and besides, you can come as often as you like with your own questions. We especially like old friends in the Postal Pouch.

ANN C.: All the big stars have at least one secretary to read their fan mail. Clara Bow has three. The most interesting letters are sorted out for the stars to read personally, but the majority are answered by the secretaries. If you mean do the stars receive the gifts that are sent to them, most surely, yes. Also letters that are really personal, such as those from dear old friends. But letters asking for money, clothes, or what-not, or claiming spurious relationship, or endeavoring to sell something, are relegated to the wastepaper basket, where they belong.

DOROTHY ANN: Write to Jack Daugherty at Universal, Universal City, and to Gary Cooper at Paramount-Famous-Lasky, Hollywood. Well, I'd never guarantee that they'll write you personal letters. After all, they get hundreds of letters a day, and if they replied in person what would their secretaries do for a living? I'll bet you are attractive to the opposite sex. Me, I'm wild about "romantic babies" like you.

. . . The Book That Zealous Reformers Once Burned in Public!

At Last!

Censorship No Longer Denies You This Thrill of Thrills—

Tales from THE GREAT DECAMERON...

YOU'LL never know life until you've read this greatest of all forbidden books! You'll never know how utterly stark and vivid a picture of human passions can be painted in words until you've feasted on the most fascinating tales from the greatest of all true-to-life books — the immortal Decameron of Boccaccio!

Between its pages, the thrill of a lifetime of reading awaits you. Before your very eyes is unfolded the glittering pageantry of a golden age now vanished—an age when passion, intrigue and high-riding romance held full sway. Past you, in a breath-taking parade, sweep some of the most beautiful, yet unprincipled, women of all time—women whose intense fascination fired men's blood and even altered the fates of empires . . . Here you will find tales of scarlet days, when a robust world drank of life and love to its very dregs!

Few writers have ever dared to write so intimately of the frailties to which the flesh is heir. But the flaming pen of Giovanni Boccaccio knew no restraint. Sophisticated and fearless to the ultimate degree, his stories are not only brilliant fiction of the most gripping variety—but also the most illuminating record of life in fourteenth-century Italy ever penned. Hardly a detail of these stirring times escaped his watchful eye—and what he saw, he wrote, without hesitation nor fear!

These Great Writers Have Taken Plots From the Decameron

Shakespeare took parts of The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, All's Well That Ends Well and Romeo and Juliet from these stories. Lessing took the plot of Nathan der Weise, Chaucer the idea of his Canterbury Tales, Dryden, Keats, Longfellow and Tennyson wrote poems—all based on these great tales, which have outlived thousands of manuscripts written since their day.

Mystery No Longer Shrouds This Brilliant Masterpiece!

Perhaps no other book ever written has had such an amazing history. Written in so vigorous a style as to be actually startling, it has long been a storm center of fierce controversy and even persecution. Critics and the haute-monde have acclaimed it with unstinted praise for its sparkling vividness and subject matter—while prudish zealots and tyrannical reformers, aghast at the utter frankness with which Boccaccio exposed human life and love in the raw, resorted to every possible means to keep this masterpiece from general circulation. At one time they actually went so far as to gather all the available copies and have them publicly burned!

But all that was yesterday! To-day the thrill that awaits the reader within the glowing pages of Decameron Tales is no longer denied you. This is the age of reason—and the peerless word-artistry of genial old Boccaccio has come into its own at last! . . . Now, for a short time only, you can inspect these great examples of realistic writing in your own home for five days, without obligation!

A Literary Treasure-House

Rich in fascinating plot, tense with action and vibrant with human passion—the Decameron has furnished plots for the world's great masters of literature. Longfellow, Keats, Dryden, Chaucer, and even the great Shakespeare himself sought these immortal pages for inspiration. In no other volume are the morals and customs of Italy of the fourteenth century so graphically laid before you—the way people lived, the hovels and palaces they dwelt in, the fantastic pleasures they indulged in—all are told with both wit and pathos that are indescribable. Thus the stories not only amuse and entertain, but constitute a landmark of literature which must not be passed over if you would broaden your vision—make yourself truly cultured.

Ten Years Ago

Lon Chaney rode the rough ones—independent pictures got their start—the first batch of famous writers reached Hollywood—Eric Von Stroheim jumped from extra to director—directors and stars stemmed a flood.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Reid were announcing the arrival of their baby.

Priscilla Dean, at the height of her glory, and Wheeler Oakman, were honeymooning in San Francisco.

Cecil B. De Mille was celebrating his fifth anniversary in pictures by making The Squaw Man. The picture made Katherine McDonald a star, afforded Monte Blue a wee bit and gave Alice Terry work as an extra.

He followed this picture with Don't Change Your Husband and gave a girl whom he saw throw a custard pie in thirty feet of a Mack Sennett comedy, a break. Her name was Gloria Swanson.

Lew Cody was being pulled from obscurity to urbanity in the same picture.

The Lasky Studio was still a group of disconnected buildings on Vine Street with duck boards between them to keep the actors' feet out of the mud in the rainy season.

Lon Chaney was being raised from five dollars a day as an extra at Universal to twenty-five dollars a day as a rider of wild horses. Some few weeks later he was put on a salary of one hundred and twenty-five dollars a week in Nell Morgan's Girl because it seemed cheaper to his producer.

Eric Von Stroheim was stopping Carl Laemmle on the Universal lot and talking German with him. Von Stroheim was immediately transferred from a seven dollar a week extra to a director for The Devil's Pass Key. Which is said to be the exact time that producers started to worry about money.

Edward Sedgwick, today a director, was playing the fat boy in Lubin's comedies and getting seventy-five dollars a week for it.

Sergeant Major Buster Keaton was changing from his overseas uniform to overalls and starting work in Fatty Arbuckle's two-reelers.

King Vidor was directing his wife, Florence Vidor, in The Honor of His House. Eleanor Boardman was an unknown in New York City. William S. Hart and Snowey Baker were taking time off from the movies to give the first big rodeo at Newhall.

Bessie Barriscale was the big star. Janet Gaynor and Sue Carol were playing jacks together in front of their homes in Chicago; Anita Page was in the second grade; Joan Crawford was keeping care of kiddies in a boarding school in Kansas City to pay for her own education; Lois Moran was studying the ballet in children's classes in Paris.

Bebe Daniels and Harold Lloyd in the throes of one of the famous Lonesome Luke comedies, which did so much to establish them about a decade ago.

William Seiter made the first two-reel independent picture and released it through Sam Goldwyn. The birth of independents!

Gloria Swanson was between husbands, namely Wallace Beery and Herbert Sonneborn.

Jimmy Cruze was making the big change from acting to directing.

Sam Goldwyn was bringing the first carload of famous writers to Hollywood—among them were Joseph Hergesheimer, Blasco Ibanez and others. Before the year was up they had quit Hollywood.

William Seiter refused to buy a lot on Hollywood Boulevard for fifteen hundred dollars because it was too expensive!

Bill Hart was marrying Winifred Westover.

Bennie Seedman was starting the long line of free-lance press agents.

Tom Mix is the only movie star who has maintained that standing for ten years. He was first starred in Cupid's Round Up.

Fan Clubs

this club and the yearly dues are still 50c or $1.00 if you want a goodly supply of the special club stationery.

The Gary Cooper Fan Club

ANNOUNCING the birth of the Gary Cooper Fan Club! This club is a new one, although it already has quite a large number of members enrolled. It is a different club, too—it does not ask any member for any dues at all; just a self-addressed, stamped envelope every time you write, so that a prompt answer or news may be sent to you. Miss Helene A. Martin, of Chicago, is the founder and secretary of the club, and she writes: "If only the fans will write and tell us they want to join, and promise us that they will boost the name of Gary Cooper every chance they get, we will be only too glad to put their names on our club list, as well as on the list which will be sent to Mr. Cooper. All news and comments are very much appreciated and they will be sent on to our star."

This club is an independent one—Mr. Cooper, owing to his contract with Paramount, cannot sponsor a Fan Club or be the honorary president of one, but just the same, he appreciates all the good this club is doing him.

Valentino Memorial Guild

A VALENTINO Memorial Guild has been established at London, England and Miss Annine Okerman, of Minnesota, has been appointed the American representative. She writes that she will be glad to send all details of the Guild to anyone who writes her. And she says if they enclose a stamp their reply will be so much prompter.

About John Gilbert's Club

THE John Gilbert Club, run by Joseph Varhalak, now has a membership of three hundred and ten. Dues are 50c per year, and upon joining, the club members will receive a membership card, list of other members, and Mr. Gilbert will send them one of his latest, large, personally autographed photos. The club also has pins and the price of them is one dollar. They are especially fine looking and well worth the price. A club journal isn't issued yet, but they are planning to have a fine, large one in the very near future.

Boosting Louise and Doris

HAROLD E. NASH, JR., has started The Star's Friendship Club, and dues are 25c a year. This club boosts Louise Fazenda and Doris Kenyon, both of whom are much interested in it. Mr. Nash says there will be some attractive prizes for getting new members, which will be announced to members as soon as they join, and also to each member he will send a list of all other members.

"Delicate to discuss this,

yet smart women should know"

—Says a society leader concerning this phase of feminine hygiene

No longer need women fear offending others. Scientific deodorization* is a new feature of this modern sanitary pad, which excels in comfort and ease of disposability.

WHEREVER women meet the world, they are in danger of offending others at certain times. Learning this, they become unhappily self-conscious. Carefree pleasures are impossible. Now, a discovery of Kotex Laboratories makes worries of this sort unnecessary. Each sanitary pad is scientifically treated, by patented process,* to end all odor. The last problem in connection with sanitary pads is solved.

That "conspicuous" feeling

The other fear—the feeling of being conspicuous—is also eliminated. Corners of the Kotex pad are scientifically rounded and tapered so as to leave no evidence of sanitary protection when worn.

Yet every advantage remains

You can so easily adjust it to your needs. It is, as always, absorbent to an amazing degree. Cellucotton absorbent wadding takes up 16 times its weight in moisture—5 times more absorbent than cotton itself. The fact that you can so easily dispose of it makes a great difference to women. And a new treatment renders it softer, fluffier, than you thought possible.

Won't you try The Improved Kotex—buy a box this very day. It is 45c for a box of twelve, at any drug, dry goods or department store; also obtainable through vending cabinets in rest-rooms by West Disinfecting Co.

*Kotex is the only sanitary pad that deodorizes by patented process. (Patent No. 1,670,587.)

Use Super-size Kotex

Formerly 90c—Now 65c

Super-size Kotex offers the many advantages of the Kotex you always use plus the greater protection which comes with extra layers of Cellucotton absorbent wadding. Disposable in the same way. Doctors and nurses consider it quite indispensable the first day or two, when extra protection is essential. At the new low price, you can easily afford to buy Super-size Kotex. Buy one box of Super-size to every three boxes of regular size Kotex. Its added layers of filler mean added comfort.

GETTING PERSONAL

Intimate items about the stars not to be found elsewhere.

BILLIE DOVE'S dog, "Lassie," made her an anniversary present of puppies. Cary Wilson's Scotch Terrier was the father.

Clara Bow wore the shortest dress at the Mayfair party; Marion Nixon, the longest.

Mrs. George Fawcett gave a party for her dog the other day. One of the guests wrote him a piece of poetry and presented him with a doll. Blackie didn't seem to think so much of the verse, but he carries the doll in his mouth everywhere he goes.

Jean Arthur

Hollywood has developed a fad for live flowers as ornaments on gowns and coats. Baclanova wears red geraniums on black velvet, Mary Brian favors demure daisies on white organdie, Florence Vidor prefers a single chaste gardenia on her street costumes and Esther Ralston selects the docile sweet pea for afternoon.

Cecil B. De Mille is now using a safety razor. One of the last to discard the old strop-exercise.

Mary Duncan recently underwent an operation for appendicitis—and all the newspapers carried the story gratis.

Marion Davies received a package of red carnations from John A. Person, London horticulturist, recently. The trip, via Mauretania, air mail, special delivery, took eight days and the flowers were fresh on arrival!

Rowland Lee is the proud possessor of an Oxford dictionary that cost $455. His wife gave it to him for a birthday present. Now Rowland will know all the big words.

George Bancroft has promised himself one good close haircut during the coming year. He's getting tired, he says, of looking like a hair tonic ad.

Buddy Rogers plays the piano, trombone, trumpet, drums and saxophone, and has recently taken up polo as a pastime.

Esther Ralston has been seen lately carrying a large purse covered by a doll. The doll's hair is as blonde as Esther's and she affects the same mode of dress as her mistress.

Adolphe Menjou has a fine collection of pedigreed Sealyham dogs, which are his one hobby.

Greta Garbo completely ignores the existence of her double—or stand-in girl—on the set.

If anybody's looking for Rita Carewe and her handsome husband, Leroy Mason, he would do well to search the furniture shops first. This happy young pair have recently bought a new home in Hollywood and are having the time of their lives furnishing it.

Lois Wilson is planning to build a room on her house in Beverly Hills to take care of her new ping-pong set.

Dale Fuller is wearing a wide smile these days. She has a bumper crop on her orange grove near Covina.

Louise Fazenda is having her beach cottage at Malibu painted green.

Eddie Horton's two dogs, Pal and Bill, are suffering from the current malady, the flu.

Through the purchase of a magnificent home still in the course of construction, Colleen More became one of the first picture stars to have a residence equipped for the projection of talking motion pictures.

Anita Stewart's baby Angora kitten is a prize winner.

Clara Bow's hobby is photographing her constantly increasing family of pets—dogs, cats, birds, and most recent of all, a wombat or Australian honey bear.

Adolphe Menjou

George Fawcett is quite the sheik, sporting a fancy wrist watch.

Mr. and Mrs. Monte Blue are the proud parents of a young son who made his appearance this month. Richard Monte Blue is his name and his sister, Barbara Anne, calls him her baby.

Jean Arthur has a huge St. Bernard dog as a pet.

Jack Dempsey left recently to attend the whippet races in Florida. His wife, Estelle Taylor, did not accompany him since she is playing an important part in Lon Chaney's Where East Is East.

Who Killed William Desmond Taylor?

A sleuth reporter for a yellow newspaper got an inspiration that the murderer was Henry Peavey, the devoted colored valet. What happened was like the scene in the play The Front Page.

Henry was enticed into a fast automobile and kidnaped. They took him out to the cemetery, at the stilly hour of midnight and left him alone at Taylor's tomb. Then a figure in a white sheet gallivanted around making grewsome groans and saying to Henry: "You did it! You did it! Confess you did it!".

Everybody got goose flesh—except Henry. Henry only got bored and wanted to go home.

The fact that Sands stays out of sight of the police, a skulking fugitive, is not conclusive proof that he killed Taylor. A man with a deserter's record and facing state's prison for forgery and two burglaries is not anxious to meet up with the police.

Every detective on the case knows exactly who killed Taylor and why. Only no two of them agree.

They say:

That he was killed by a dope gang because he knew of their dealings with a wayward film star.

That he was killed by the bootleg gang.

That the soldier who hated him in the British army got him.

That the jealous admirers of either Mary Miles Minter or Mabel Normand wreaked vengeance.

You can take your choice.

One Method

WHEN you have a husband who just won't give you a divorce, announce your forthcoming marriage to someone else and that will bring him to time. That is about what happened in the case of Sue Carol, whom Allen Keefer of Chicago did not want to grant a divorce. Sue was in love with Nick Stuart anyhow, so she told the world that they were engaged, and friend husband, chagrined, has now stated that "divergent interests" have caused a break and he is suing for divorce.

Tested Romance Only

A LITTLE memo for those who are keeping a journal on Hollywood romances. Janet Gaynor has promised her mother that she will never, never marry anyone whom she has not known for at least a year. It will be just that length of time, come the first cherry blossoms, that she met Lydell Peck, the young San Franciscan.

If all rumors are to be believed, Janet and Lydell will indulge in a spring wedding.

ONE WOMAN TO ANOTHER

. . . THIS NEW MODE OF PERSONAL HYGIENE . . .

THE modern American woman is envied by the other women of the world today because of her independence. She knows how to take care of herself . . . to preserve far beyond the allotted years the bloom and buoyancy of youth. The modern American woman has learned that this depends largely upon a subject too often ignored . . . upon personal hygiene.

Heretofore, personal hygiene has been achieved at great discomfort. Seldom convenient . . . under some conditions it was impossible.

No Water - No Accessories

Now, however, through the use of a harmless antiseptic in tablet form, which requires no water or accessories, American women are fast learning the convenience of personal hygiene. Wherever smart women gather, you will hear enthusiastic recommendations of this antiseptic.

These tablets are known as Pariogen tablets. For a long time prescribed by the medical profession, Pariogen is not a poison, contains no carbolic acid, cresol or bichloride of mercury, yet destroys the most pernicious germs in a few seconds.

May Be Carried in a Purse

Pariogen tablets come twelve to the tube - a tube about the size of a fountain pen. The price at any drug store is $1.00. Pariogen tablets may be carried anywhere in a purse, making hygienic measures possible almost anywhere, no other accessories or water being required.

Sent Anywhere by Mail

If your druggist is unable to supply you, or if you prefer to send direct, the coupon below and a dollar bill will bring you a full size tube of Pariogen tablets together with full directions for their use.

TALKIE TALK

A monthly feature devoted to bringing our readers the latest, most authentic news of talkie personalities and developments.

Extras Not Doomed

IT WAS freely predicted in the beginning of the new era that the "talkies" would do away with the lowly extra, however there were four thousand extras used in the productions of The Wolf of Wall Street, Wolf Song and Tong War which were the first sound pictures using many extras. Since then, The Desert Song used a chorus of one hundred and fifty voices all the way through the production, and there were over five hundred extras used in the Fox picture In Old Arizona. During the month of January 1929, Warner Brothers Studio issued checks to six thousand extras used in all-sound productions. During the early part of February, two thousand extras were used in The Sap alone. Over eight hundred extras were called in Richard Barthelmess' first sound venture Weary River. So it would seem that the extra player is not altogether doomed as yet to be excluded from the ranks of motion picture actors.

Three in One

A COMPLETE new recording system has been achieved at last augmenting the several systems or channels already in use. The new unit is described as Channel Three. After months of research and hard work, engineers and electrical scientists have extended the range of photo-audio-frequency, preserving the natural overtones of music. Now full orchestras may play accompaniments for vocal solos, duets and choruses.

Hello Broadway

CECIL DE MILLE says that it will not be long before sounds in New York will be recorded on microphones in Hollywood, via electricity. In other words, if they build a set representing Broadway on the M-G-M lot they will be able to get the real sounds of Broadway 3,000 miles distant.

Differing Dialects

DIALOGUE writers of dialect are the latest to spring forth since the era of talking pictures. For those who wish to prepare themselves for this new field, the best medium for learning the art is to attend the "talkie" theatre when dialect pictures are shown. Among these making use of dialect are The Trial of Mary Dugan which contains a rich assortment of different dialects, The Last of Mrs. Cheyney and In Old Arizona are also good examples. Naturally the Octavus Roy Cohen stories being filmed cannot be beaten for their portrayal of negro dialect, Hot Stuff, the Alice White extravaganza, is quite rich in colorful American slang.

New Wrinkle

A NEW time-saving wrinkle has been introduced whereby dialogue can be recorded on three or more sets simultaneously on the one recording apparatus, though three or more cameras are required to shoot the corresponding action. The recording apparatus is built in the center of the stage with the various sets built in two and three story formation around it; then, the dialogue is writtten to follow each other so that it can be successfully placed in each production during the cutting of the film. Incidentally the new method makes for econòmy, too, since only one record and one operator is needed for the various units being synchronized.

Johnny Mack Brown listens to assorted pathetics from Mary Pickford, under the watchful eye of Director Sam Taylor—and the watchful ear of the microphone—for her next picture, Coquette.

Flea Market Set

AN ACCOUNT of the magnitude of the set used in Innocents of Paris, forty microphones are being placed in strategic positions, and constitute the largest hook-up so far in talkie production. The set is a reproduction of the Flea Market district of Paris and as all microphones are linked electrically, engineers term it the most complicated wiring installation made in the brief history of the "talkie."

The "IT" Shock

WHOOPEE."

This one word became an expression of sorrow at the Paramount Studio sound stage when it caused an electrical crew an hour's work, a large picture company an hour's delay and the company the price of a set of delicate sound tubes.

The joyous word was in Clara Bow's first line for her new all talking picture The Wild Party. When she turned the full force of the Bow personality on the microphones the damage resulted. The sensative electrical system could not stand the "IT" shock.

Force of Habit

NOW IT can be told. Alice White's first words into the microphone when her voice was being tested were: "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party."

She explains thus:

"Picture my confusion. There were all my nicely learned and carefully rehearsed lines for the test, when my mind suffered a flash back and I had to break out with my old stenographic exercises."

The test was a very good one anyhow.

ALICE WHITE is one star who refused to take vocal lessons.

"The public wants to hear my voice, not any rawther as spoken by some high-brow teacher."

LYDIA L.: Now we're beginning to get Camilla Horn fans—and no wonder! She's the cutest little pretzel in America. Born at Frankfort-on-Main in 1908; is five feet four inches tall, weighs 108, has beautiful golden hair, and big blue eyes. You might say she won by a leg when she went into pictures; for the understandings of most frauleins greatly resemble the Arc de Triumphe. But Camilla's—well, take your opera glasses, sit on the front row, and see what you can see!

A SUBSCRIBER: Oh, I know you! You're the one who keeps SCREEN SECRETS going! Just for that, I'll tell you all I know about James Hall. He was born in Dallas, Texas, on October 22, 1900. He is five feet eleven inches tall, weighs one hundred fifty-eight, has brown hair and eyes, and is still single—which, you may be sure, causes a panic in Hollywood. He spent most of his childhood running away from home to join travelling theatrical troupes, and he finally got himself a nice little part in a stock company. By 1915 he was in the Ziegfeld Follies, glorifying the American Man. Came the War, and Jimmie went to meet it. Back from "over there," he returned to revues until 1926, when he took a test for Paramount

P. K. E. Named for the chewing gum, P. K.? Colleen Moore and Ken Maynard are under contract to the First National Studios, Burbank. Ken was born in 1895, and is married. Colleen is twenty-six years old, ditto. Ken's latest picture is Cheyenne, and they say it's a humdinger. He has been in pictures four years. So you're crazy over Tarzan, his horse? Well, just don't make Ken jealous!

CARMON L.: No double for Rudolph Valentino has yet been found, and I think the idea has been pretty much abandoned; for who wants a substitute for one of the most beloved actors on the screen? Most people feel that nobody can ever replace him. Agnes Ayers divorced S. Manuel Reachi in June, 1927, and is now appearing in occasional pictures made for Technicolor, at the Tec-Art Studios, Hollywood. She is twenty-seven years old.

NORMA L. K.: Oh, that was Marie Prevost in The Racket—and maybe you don't think she's a popular young lady! How do you like her new blonde hair? Cute, yes? She ran rings around The Godless Girl. Sorry, but I didn't see Evelyn Brent in The Dragnet, so I can't tell you much about her hat. It was probably three hats, not just one trick bonnet. Aw, say, Girlie, this isn't a fashion department! The nearest I come to a lady's chapeau is when my wife and seven oldest daughters send me the monthly milliner's bill . . .

Mammy!

He became very ill. His father brought him home. Almost too soon, Asa fully recovered and joined Al Reeve's burlesque show. A little while later he had persuaded his brother to join him, along with a mutual acquaintance. The three appeared in vaudeville as Jolson, Palmer and Jolson.

Asa Yoleson had become Al Jolson. But this attempt was by no means a success. Salaries were very low, Al had not yet discovered the advantages of black face, and the troup barely got by.

AL GETS a big kick out of the recollection of how he first came to black up. Although he couldn't afford a regular dresser, he occasionally had an old Southern darky to assist him. Al had always had a fondness for darkies and had often imitated their talk. One night, this old dresser came to him while the troup was playing in Brooklyn.

"Boss," he said, "if your skin's black, they always laugh."

"I got some burnt cork," says Al, "and blackened up. I rehearsed before the old negro and when I'd finished he chuckled and said, 'Mister Jolson, you's just as funny as me.'"

It is to that darky's suggestion that Al Jolson owes his success. Up to that time he had been one of the many second-raters. Now, for the first time, he had discovered the touchstone which would lead him to great popularity. Al Jolson in blackface became an overnight hit.

That was exactly twenty years ago. He joined Lew Dockstader's Minstrels as end man and olio artist.

Two years later, during the performance of the minstrels, J. J. Shubert was in the audience. The Winter Garden had just been opened, and Shubert was seeking talent.

Al Jolson was hired for the Winter Garden revues, Bow Sing and La Belle Paree!

In 1913, Al was co-featured was Gaby Deslys in The Honeymoon Express. In 1914 he was featured alone in Dancin' Around. In 1916 he was starred for the first time in Robinson Crusoe, Jr. Followed stardom Sinbad, Bombo, and others.

Al Jolson had proven the truth of the modern version: "The voice with the sob wins!"

BUT Al Jolson's success had not yet reached its apex, nor has it, probably, today. Warner Brothers were yet to take him and make him one of the leading figures in the field of the talking movie. The Jazz Singer was the biggest box office success of the year. The story didn't matter to the public. They wanted to hear the famous mammy singer to their hearts' content. Al Jolson's first movie satisfied that demand perfectly.

A fine singer of popular songs, a man who knows better than anyone else how to put a song over big. But an actor?

Just before The Singing Fool appeared, I talked to Al Jolson about the relative merits of the two pictures. We were all anxiously awaiting the opening night of the new film, for which Al had come East especially. Al Jolson expressed his opinion frankly.

"In The Jazz Singer," he said, "I was stiff. I walked through half the scenes. I didn't know what it meant to really put myself into a scene and make something of it. It was all too new to me. That show was a box office wow, and maybe my producers were satisfied with it. But I wasn't. I thought I was terrible.

"Everybody was wondering whether The Singing Fool would live up to the record of my first. I found myself in that film. I'd had time to learn something about the movies, about how to put a scene over. I was natural. I knew what I was doing. And, if I say so myself, I had learned how to act."

EVERYONE who has ever seen Jolson is looking forward eagerly to his next picture which is to be called Mammy, founded on the song which he made so popular. The story is now in the process of construction. After his honeymoon in Waikiki Beach, he returned to Hollywood, then took a flying trip to New York to see the opening of Johnny Spielt Auf, the German jazz opera at the Metropolitan Opera House which features a negro jazz singer in the leading role. Now Al Jolson has returned to Hollwood to settle down to hectic activity on Mammy.

This man who has worked his way up to the biggest box office success in pictures, who has been received by presidents and senators, kings and dictators, including Mussolini, who has been lavishly entertained at Palm Beach and at Asheville, who has quelled a strike riot in Montana, who has had theaters, night-clubs, and babies named after him, this man appears untouched by fame. He takes more joy in the warm glow that friendship and comradship give him than in all the adulation that man can give. He is the highest paid actor in the business. He has increased his fortune by investing in the stock of his own producer. He lacks nothing that money can buy him. But until he recently undertook his third marriage, Al Jolson was a man who went his way alone, hungry for the little human touches which are the wealth of poor men. The human equation matters more to him than all the riches that can be gained by popularity and success.

Given the comradeship he so earnestly longs for and so richly deserves, love will conquer the loneliness of Al Jolson, the great jazz singer.

Alice White's Diary

Alice White is subjected to hostile stares in a scene from Naughty Baby, but with a figure like hers one need never be embarrassed.

Feb. 3. Dick wants to make a long flight. I can't let him do that. What if he should have engine trouble? Or fall? No, I can't let him go. Never to hear his voice again! Oh, no.

Feb. 14. What a thrill to go sky-riding with a lover! Better than all the joy rides in the world.

Feb. 26. Dick and I went to a bridge party. At last I'm getting to be a good bridge player.

Feb. 27. Took test at M-G-M for a grand part. At night went to a Harold Teen party at the Grove. Dick was rather annoyed at my not taking him with me. Maybe I should have. Was I just being ornery?

Feb. 28. Supposed to go to the Wampas Ball, but didn't.

March 8. This can't be me, promising to give up all my boy friends for Dick. But that's just what I did. Gosh, how jealous he is. And I of him. I surely am surprised to find myself giving up my other men friends for any man. Can this be love?

March 30. If this is love, it's torture. First a scrap and then we make up. That's not bad. Then another scrap and more making up. They say true love never runs smooth. This must be a sample of it. Oh, but he's really a darling.

May 11. No entry for a month. Blame it on Dick. I haven't had time to write. Went to a very lovely dinner party with First National officials. They told me I was going to be starred. Starred! Imagine. Oh, gosh! It's almost too good to believe. I sure am thrilled. I saw Dick later and we had a quarrel. This must not be the beginning of the end. But these quarrels—they wear one out. They destroy me.

May 12. Everything is nice and placid again. We went over to Pauline Garon's house and played cards. Oh, can't it always be this way?

May 13. Had a grand time today. Went airplaning with Dick. We flew to Riverside and had dinner at the Mission Inn. It was rather romantic. Rather!

May 14. Took lots of pictures at the studio. Went to a preview of Harold Teen. Was very disappointed when I found that they had cut me out of the picture a lot.

May 23. Well, I'm a star now. And I don't feel any different. Started to work on Show Girl with Al Santell directing. I hope it's a good picture. It means so much. Have been taking dancing lessons. Will do a mean tango in the picture. I hope they leave enough of it in the picture to make it interesting.

July 25. Been working like a dog in my picture. It's got to be good. It's nearly finished. The rest of my time has been Dick's.

July 28. It is hard to write this. Dick and I have decided not to see each other any more. He is leaving to visit his family for a couple of months. We will see if absence does make the heart grow fonder. We've had beautiful times together, very beautiful, and I shall never forget them, but I feel I am a bit too selfish to devote my whole self to one man.

Aug. 24. Went to preview my first starring picture. It is very good. I was thrilled at the reception given me after the picture. Crowds waited for me and asked me to autograph books and things.

Sept. 5. Started Ritzy Rosie with Mervyn LeRoy directing. I know this is going to be a very happy picture, as Mervyn really knows me and understands me, and I am sure he will get the best work out of me. Jack Mulhall is to be my leading man.

Sept. 30. The man who forecast my future was right. No marriage for a long time. I'll go dancing, dancing on. Sometimes—but, gosh! Why get sentimental? Love is all right as long as you don't take it too seriously. I'm a star now. That should occupy my time. And Molly O'Day's birthday party is tonight. The London boy friend will soon be calling for me. . . .

Dec. 27. Haven't done right by you, Diary. Months without a single entry. I've been barging around, going to a lot of whoopee palaces, parties, shows and what-not. My third picture, Hot Stuff, is sizzling along. Mervyn LeRoy is directing, and that means a lot. Now that Christmas is over, I'll try and do better.

Dec. 28. Lots of hoopla. The Georgia Tech boys are here to play at the Rose Bowl game on New Year's Day. And I'm going to be their mascot. Isn't that gr-r-rand? Some awfully nice fellows with fatal southern drawls. One is particularly attractive—a young doctor, black-haired, who slays all his "r's." The kids told me I was solid with the south. Democratic of them, no foolin'. Heh, heh!

Jan. 1, 1929. Never had such a grand time. Went to the game. Sat right down on the field with the Georgia boys and wore one of their sweaters. Had lots of pictures taken and then talked over the radio. Graham McNamee was the official announcer. He was quite surprised when I made up my own little chatter instead of reading the speech prepared for me. Party that night at the Aroyo Seco Hotel in Pasadena. Danced a "robber's dance" and I nearly had my dress torn off. Had to leave early because I had a six o'clock location call in the morning.

Jan. 2. The studio gave me a New Year's gift. Can you feature it? They gave me a Conscience Clause to attach to my contract. Talk about ready-made resolutions. It's all signed, sealed and sworn to by Hermann Starr, president of First National Productions Corporation, and Alice White. It remains to be sworn at, now. Diary, did you know I had a Better Self? Me and Elsie Dinsmore. Yes, sir! Mine is white with pink edging, washable, non-shrinkable and fireproof. No foolin', my conscience is my stride from now on. Part of the clause reads "Artist shall not commit any act or conduct herself in a manner that shall substantially offend against public decency or morality or shall hold her up or tend to subject her to public ridicule, hatred, scorn or contempt . . ." Wonder if I can chew gum in public? And, too, it says "She will constantly consult and take counsel with her conscience and will in good faith and to the best of her ability follow the dictates of her conscience and better self both in her private and personal and public and professional life and conduct." Not only that, if I succumb to one of those weaker moments, there's a penalty. If "she may have done anything or committed any act in violation of the dictates of her conscience," for instance, I've got to run and tell my producer and then "take such steps as may be prescribed by producer to

FOOT PAINS ENDED in 10 minutes or costs you nothing

1 Trouble starts in weakened muscles. Tiny bones of forward arch are displaced. Pain follows.

2 A super-elastic band assists and strengthens weakened muscles, replaces bones. Pain stops instantly.

Burning, aching, tired feeling in the feet and legs—cramps in toes, foot callases, pains in toes, instep, ball or heel—dull ache in the ankle, calf or knee—shooting pains from back of toes, spreading of the feet, or that broken-down feeling—all can now be quickly ended

SCIENCE says 94% of all foot pains result from weakened muscles that permit the foot bones to become displaced and press against sensitive nerves and blood vessels. Now a way is discovered to strengthen these muscles while holding the bones in position. Pains stop in 10 minutes when this amazing band, the Jung Arch Brace, is used. Stand, walk, or dance for hours—you just don't get tired. Just slips on—results are almost immediate. One of the secrets is in the tension and stretch. It is highly elastic and amazingly light and thin, yet strong and durable. An exceedingly soft sponge rubber lift is provided and urgently advised for severe cases. Worn with any style footwear. There is nothing stiff to further weaken muscles or cause discomfort.

Pain stops like magic. Soon band may be discarded and feet are well to stay. Nearly 2,000,000 now in use. Specialists, amazed at results, urge it widely.

Wear it 10 days; if not delighted, your money returned. Go to druggist, shoe store or chiropodist. If they can't supply you use coupon below and pay postman. Write for free book on foot troubles.

cure said default and re-establish artist in good standing with her conscience and at peace with her better self." Can you imagine my chagrin?

Jan. 4. Worked hard today in Hot Stuff. Billy Bakewell is playing opposite me. He is cute and very collegiate. Charlie Delaney came over on the set and kidded me about my Conscience Clause. Said it was the 1929 version of the morality clause in players' contracts. Charlie said after he signed his morality contract, he blushed every time he kissed his wife. Well, I don't mind a blush now and then.

Jan. 7. Worked at U. S. C. campus all day. Met a lot of cute boys. Some of them tried to date me. Mervyn kidded me. "Don't forget your Conscience, Alice!" I think a conscience is entirely a matter of the individual. Some consciences are better developed than others. Everyone has a certain amount of conscience, even if it is warped. Mine has always been plenty husky.

Jan. 9. Quite a thrill. An admirer sent me a beautiful embroidered Chinese robe. He's an engineer in the Army and saw Show Girl in some little out-of-the-way native theatre in a town on the equator. Just think of little me being seen 'way down there! He also sent me some views of Panama as he was passing through the Canal.

Jan. 10. Lots of work on Hot Stuff. Met Louise Fazenda. She is a grand person. Nothing artificial about her. I like her immensely.

Jan. 11. Flocks of flowers arrived this morning with a blank card. Very mysterious. Wonder who they are from. F. didn't like it. He was waiting to take me to the studio when they came, and glowered, faintly, when I opened the box.

Jan. 12. More flowers—gardenias. More mystery. Worked at the studio all day. Went to The Front Page with Ivan Kahn at night. My Better Self sure had a terrific wrestle with those rowdy words. It's an intense play, though, and I loved it.

Jan. 14. Discovered the flowers were from a rather adorable boy. Well, well. At the studio today doing some cute scenes. C. called several times before I reached home. Asked me to dinner. Haven't seen him since he was married. I asked him if it was going to be a threesome. He said no and I certainly justified my Conscience Clause that time. C. said it was too bad my Better Self was so relentless.

Jan. 17. Wonder what the studio would do if I violated that Clause just a little? What sort of penance would they impose?

Jan. 18. Decided that old Bill Shakespeare knew his chatter. Been reading that stuff from Hamlet "to thine own self be true, and it must follow, as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man." Aren't I getting high-brow? But that's about what the Conscience Clause amounts to. And isn't that enough? I ask you!

THE END.

Love is a Bubble

Mary Nolan, whose wistful beauty won for her the title of "The Lillian Gish of Germany."

at her success, Mary was desperately homesick, so homesick indeed that she thought she would die.

"I had cried too much—and then not enough," she explained, "I was bleeding inside and frozen outside, I was so ill that the doctors in the hospital where they had taken me thought there was no hope of my recovery."

But while Mary lay wishing for death on her hospital cot, Joseph Schenck, in his New York office, picked up a magazine, saw her photograph and cabled his Berlin representative:

"Understand Imogene Robertson is an American. See if she will consider Hollywood contract."

Mary had made up her mind never to set foot again in her homeland, but the chance to come back set her to trembling with eagerness. Miraculously, she got well.

Herbert Brenon cast her as Molly in Sorrell and Son. He also gave her her name. "Imogene Robertson is too long," he contended. "Mary is your real name—you look Irish—how about Nolan?" And Nolan it became.

Universal bought her contract from United Artists, but save for parts opposite Norman Kerry and Reginald Denny, they have not used her on the lot, preferring to loan her to other companies who eagerly seek her services. She has played with Lon Chaney, Nils Asther and Jack Gilbert.

"A flirtation with a leading man would be impossible to me," declared Mary. "Outside he is a different person, in whom I may have no interest."

She sighed and then smiled, and stole another glance at the photograph beside her bed. It was the likeness of a good-looking man whose dark eyes looked out challengingly. It was not a photograph of Jack Gilbert.

"Oh, I'm in love!" she laughed, and blew a kiss to the picture.

Helping Hollywood Heavenward

grateful when it flashes into our lives even momentarily. I don't know Greta Garbo, but in one of her pictures she did something to me that no one had ever done before. When I saw her in A Woman of Affairs she threw over me such a spell that it lasted for an hour after I had left the theater. No, I don't know what it was, I can't explain it. Perhaps it was her vital force, or it may have been something in her soul too deep for the eye to see. But she is such a gallant creature on the screen that she cannot fail to rouse my admiration."

OBVIOUSLY a gallant creature herself, Angel admires the woman who, right or wrong, puts up a fight. But more than anything else she apparently hates commonplace mortals.

"I can understand big faults and big virtues," she said, more to herself than to me, "but I have no sympathy with little faults and little virtues. I despise pettiness."

"Did you come here because you believed Hollywood to be a wicked place?" I asked.

Angel flashed a look at me that made me feel I had been struck by lightning, then gave me to understand:

"If Hollywood is more wicked than other cities, then it's the place for me."

I hastened to add that I thought so, too, and that undoubtedly she would do it a lot of good. This seemed to help matters, for Angel proceeded to go into further detail. Listen:

"Hollywood today is like California in the days of the gold rush. It has the same excitement, the same extravagance, the same profligacy. This is only natural. Hollywood has a great cosmopolitan crowd, and the magnet which has drawn that crowd is gold. To be in Hollywood is to be a gambler, and so the people here are gamblers all. They are all waiting for the big chance. But this is true of theatrical people everywhere, for their whole existence is a gamble. Being a gambler myself, a gambler of life and opportunity, I can sympathize with them. As for the rest it should be taken with a pinch of salt. I mean Hollywood as it may seem to the outside world. Any place which has the spotlight forever turned on it is likely to look wicked. All the black spots stand out. But I like looking for the white spots, and there are quite as many white spots in Hollywood as I have found in other cities."

Angel put a punch into her opinion, then backed it up with:

"I think Hollywood charming, fascinating. I feel that anything could happen here, and that when it did happen it would be interesting. Hollywood is a city of dreams, and everybody is waiting for those dreams to come true. You can see this in the faces of the people, faces alive with the spirit of adventure, expectant, hopeful faces. But most of all, Hollywood is the city of youth."

I WAS interested to know what Angel thought of the hordes of young girls who flock to Hollywood. Her face drew down gravely—a striking characteristic of this girl-woman—as she said:

"It is a terrible thing. I see so many girls without work, without even the chance of work. This is the tragedy of Hollywood. There is no knowing to what end it may lead. For one thing, a girl is easily lost in Hollywood. If she happens to be so inclined, or let us say that poverty, perhaps other misfortune, drives her too hard, she may hide herself away where those who really love her cannot find her. Here, away from her home and family, she finds a lessening of restrictions which she may not be strong enough to withstand. This is the great danger."

Again the blonde head went down in heavy thought, but a moment later it bobbed up lightly, and Angel, once more bright-eyed, alert, enthusiastically declared:

"I'm tremendously interested in girls! And this is a wonderful field for me! I'm very impulsive myself, so it is not hard for me to understand girls who impulsively come to Hollywood. For that matter girls generally today are drunk with freedom. But they will regain their equilibrium. The pendulum always swings back. We simply happen to be living in an age given to the accenting of sex. It is a stage of adolescence which will pass just as it passed with the French.

HOLLYWOOD is full of girls," she reminded me, "and it is this fact which makes me hopeful of building my Cinema Cathedral. At present it is, of course, only a dream, but I hope to make it a realization within two years. My plan is to have a six-story building that would be both a home and a community center for extra girls of the movies, together with other business girls just getting a start. It would be possible to provide a girl with room, breakfast and dinner for eight dollars a week. It can be done, for it has already been done by the Salvation Army. On certain nights of the week the church could be turned into a theatre, where extra girls would have the opportunity of appearing in plays. In this way they could be seen by studio executives and helped, according to their ability, to get positions in pictures. In short, the Cathedral would be a clearing house as well as a home—without the stigma of charity."

A youthful rival of Aimee McPherson seemed to be showing her blonde head over the Hollywood horizon, and as I took my hat to go I inquired whether her plans included any walking tours through the desert. Like a flash, Angel came back with:

"I wear high-heeled shoes."

And so at the door we both laughed that off.

Africa Invades Hollywood

"Come to Jesus!" "Git offen dat train, quick!" "De Debbil don't make no moah stops! Brudder, sister, ain't you gwine repent now?"

They came to him en masse, filling the "mourner's bench" ten kneeling rows deep. He had imaged the instant alternative of Hell or Heaven so terrifically that there was no denying of him. Amid the hallelujas and hosannas and "Praise Gods!" of triumph, a priestess on the platform started singing—

"Glory to God, I'm free at last!"

and the children and grandchildren of slaves, their sin-wrestling forgotten in their victory over the "Sperit" of Evil that has immemorially pursued their race, unanimously joined in the paean, giving a 100 per cent score of achievement to young Zeke, the "woods preacher."

HONEST, students of SCREEN SECRETS, the above aren't old tales out of books or Broadway-and-Forty-second-street dramatization of the negro, but rather instances of the new riches that the sound device is bringing to the motion picture.

One of its most striking results is the colored invasion of Hollywood. The blacks have come, and they're a problem. Equally so for the white actors who have survived the "foreign" irruption from overseas, and for the masters of the game.

Nina May McKenney at the mature age of sixteen finds herself a leading lady of Hollywood. Lightsome as a feather, pretty, with expressive eyes, almost every pose as graceful as a fawn's, she could make most any of the famed "yellow gals" of New Orleans envious of her charms. Nina has high hopes.

"I was instructed," she told me, "by Lou Leslie, who brought out Florence Mills and made her famous here and abroad—"

"Chance for you in Paris after you finish this speakie?"

"Perhaps," she laughed. "I'm trying for the top, anyway. You see, at sixteen I haven't much to tell of what has happened excepting that I was a chorus girl in Blackbirds of 1928 at the Eltinge and sang contralto in Leonard Harper's revue at the Lafayette. My father went to New York from Lancaster, S. C., a good many years ago. He's one of the big men of Harlem's night life—Mack McKenney his name is—and I've never had anything to do but sing and dance."

Who wouldn't want to put the glorious "spirituals" of the colored race into filmed melodies?

That's the real reason for Hearts In Dixie, a big feature in Movietone, from which Nellie Bly and Zeke Saw de Wheel have been quoted.

And who more inevitably than King Vidor would sense the possibilities of negro life told in song and dialect as well as pictured?

The purpose of Hallelujah (of which I have roughly transcribed the camp meeting scene) is to reveal the heart of the race in a sort of rural Peer Gynt.

Trailing behind these come the burlesquers and comedians. The Melancholy Dame is the first of a series of Paramount all-ebon comedies in which Mr. Christie gives colored players the chance to embody the characterizations of Octavus Roy Cohen. Soon everybody in Hollywood will be doing it—the colored drama, I mean—unless the public puts its foot down and says "No!" to African pictures-and-music. About two thousand dusky actors are now finding employment—regular or occasional—in Hollywood.

YOU can't help being interested in these people," remarks Paul Sloane, making Hearts in Dixie, and who learned his anthropology at New York University and thinks from an international background. "One day we had a negro wedding ceremony in the picture, and that night, the couple, to attest their sincerity, went out and got married in real life!

"On location Thanksgiving Day, we provided a turkey dinner 'n everything, and you ought to have seen the response! A preacher up from Los Angeles to exhort and pray—singing that brought the tears to my eyes—speeches the wit and fervor of which would delight anybody. I tell you, Mac, they live in their emotions, with the art to express them.

"This picture wouldn't be anything at all without the voice," he confided. "It's just a bit of musical impressionism of the Old South, no plot complications or dominating love romance, merely a simple theme of a cottonpicker's parental love that ties the threads together. It is what they will hear as well as see—especially the twenty-seven grand spirituals and chanteys, some of which have passed into classics and others that are but dimly remembered from the Fisk Singers—that will, I am firmly convinced, endear Hearts In Dixie to the hearts of the public."

ACROSS the hills from Fox Movietone—in the "bottoms" of the M-G-M lot, in sound-proofs and on location—King Vidor is completing a different kind of job in Hallelujah. For Vidor is a realist, and his principal interest is the reaction of environment and character. For hero he has chosen a preacher type that can rise to the heights and sink to the depths, is unwittingly involved in racial tragedies, and mightily torn betwixt the passion of a gay yaller gal and the serious affection of a fine home wench.

Daniel Haynes, the fine singer of the stage production of Show Boat, was chosen for the role of the roving preacher, with the frolicsome Nina May McKenney as Chick, the yellow

EARLE LIEDERMAN — The Muscle Builder
Author of "Muscle Building," "Science of Wrestling," "Secrets of Strength," "Here's Health," "Endurance," etc.

HOW STRONG ARE YOU?

Can You Do These Things?

Lift 200 lbs. or more overhead with one arm? bend and break a horseshoe; tear two decks of playing cards; bend spikes; chin yourself with one hand?

CAN you do any of them? I can and many of my pupils can. It is remarkable the things a man really can do if he will make up his mind to be strong. I have taken men who were ridiculed because of their frail make-up and developed them into the strongest men of their locality.

I WANT YOU FOR 90 DAYS

These are the days that call for speed. In olden days it took years to develop a strong, healthy body. I can completely transform you in 90 days. Yes, make a complete change in your entire physical make-up. In 30 days I guarantee to increase your biceps one full inch. I also guarantee to increase your chest two inches. But I don't quit there. I don't stop till you're a finished athlete—a real strong man. I will broaden your shoulders, deepen your chest, strengthen your neck. I will give you the arms and legs of a Hercules. I will put an armor plate of muscle over your entire body. But with it come the strong, powerful lungs which enrich the blood, putting new life into your entire being. You will be bubbling over with strength, pep and vitality.

A DOCTOR WHO TAKES HIS OWN MEDICINE

Many say that any form of exercise is good, but this is not true. I have seen men working in the factories and mills who literally killed themselves with exercise. They ruined their hearts or other vital organs, ruptured themselves or killed off what little vitality they possessed.

I was a frail weakling myself in search of health and strength. I spent years in study and research, analyzing my own defects to find what I needed. After many tests and experiments, I discovered a secret of progressive exercising. I increased my own arms over six and a half inches, my neck three inches, and other parts of my body in proportion. I decided to become a public benefactor and impart this knowledge to others. Physicians and the highest authorities on physical culture have tested my system and pronounced it to be the surest means of acquiring perfect manhood. Do you crave a strong, well-proportioned body and the abundance of health that goes with it? Are you true to yourself? If so, spend a pleasant half-hour in learning how to attain it. The knowledge is yours for the asking.

charmer, and Victoria Spivey as the sedate Missy Rose.

Chick "gets religion" at the camp meeting and a chance to hug her baptizer wildly during immersion in the creek. She stows away in the gospel box car which, next day, is bearing her pastor to pastures new, with the result that they flee to a stolen honeymoon in a sawmill clearing where Zeke, forgetting his call to preach, works valiantly as a mill hand.

The climax comes when a negro "sporting man" (who had tricked Zeke before and slain his younger brother in a fight) reappears and the fickle Chick tries to sneak off with him. After tragedy and convict camp the story ends with Zeke's great deed on the Mississippi flood levee and the homecoming of the black Peer Gynt.

On talking with the polished Mr. Haynes I was interested to discover that he is more than half Red Indian, a Choctaw and a Cherokee strain combining with his negroid heritage. He received his education from universities in Atlanta and Chicago, has been in more than a dozen various "white collar" occupations from insurance agency to music publishing and from boss printer to the ordained ministry. His show career was started in The Bottom of the Cup, after which he played the leading role of Rang Tang at the Royal Theatre.

"I am too good to be a preacher," he replied in answer to my query as to why he left the ministry. "In making that statement," he continued, "I am not patting my back as having extraordinary talents, but simply saying that I am too morally good to go in for the religious sensationalism that seems required to make an outstanding success in pulpiteering." Haynes is deeply religious.

An hour's talk with this tall, slim, erect Illinois chief of mime and song opens up many novel viewpoints. Proud of his dark blood, he has specialized at college and later in negro history and anthropology. He contends that negroes are "just folks," with all the virtues, vices, weaknesses, capacities of other kinds of folks. "All they require is a chance, and they're getting it now."

Right next to him the vociferous Mammy of the production who had just gyrated like a dervish as she led the congregational singing—

"Gib me de old-time Religion,
Gib me de old-time Religion!
'Twas good enough for de Hebrew chilluns
An' it's good enough for me!"

turned out to be Fannie Belle de Knight, ex-seventh grade teacher of Public School 89, New York City. Curious, isn't it, how the "cullud" professors and professoresses, and their bright pupils, too, are flocking to the boards!

With proper guidance in Hollywood, and granted almost certain hearty acceptance by the public, Africa's invasion of the movies may well net the world stirring and novel treasures in song and story.

He Cheated—

BUT SHE KNOWS IT!

Yes, Now she knows—because the first glimpses of his handwriting revealed his real character as she had never understood it before. She saw at once he was faintless and deceitful, and she realized his charming manner and impassioned words were only a cloak for his infidelity and hypocrisy.

Would You Have Known?

Or would you have loved him and suffered agonizingly in consequence. Learn to read a person's true character in his handwriting and you will see the minds and true characters of people spread like an open book to your gaze.

Find them out before it is too late!

The Thief,
The Liar,
The Unfaithful,
The Heartless,
The Vain.

They cannot hide from the Graphologist. Their handwriting cannot be disguised, try as they may.

Bidding for Barthelmess

harbors a gentleman who was seen often with her in New York. That little boy was John Gilbert. But it was not to be. (Hearts and Flowers, Adolphe). Dorothy, she of the fountain pen last name, couldn't agree with her co-workers in the creation of a certain film to be called Dynamite, the only report from which is that the theme song was to be called Dynamite, I Love You. It was a bit too much for Dorothy, according to a columnist's account, and now she's back amongst us in time to have new stories told about her and to pay five berries couvert at The Rendezvous to see the ridiculous but uproarious antics of the inimitable Clayton, Jackson, and Durante, who have also been hitting it up as Keith headliners.

Stage Stuff

EVEN Syd Perelman, who does the cuckoo drawings and stories for the fun-making Judge, claims that he won't pay that much even to see those three hellions whom he considers the funniest men in the world. Maybe it's because he's saving up for the big event next fall. He's engaged to be married to Laura West. Instead of seeing his pals, Durante and gang, he drops in on his friends, the Marx Brothers, Groucho in particular. Groucho is the gent who got Walter Winchell back stage for a performance of Animal Crackers by dressing him up as an old something or other. It seems that Walter is strenuously banned from all Shubert productions because of some disparaging remarks he made in his Evening Graphic criticisms. But there's very little that Walter Winchell can't get in on if he puts his mind to it. He once remarked that it didn't really matter if the Shuberts kept him out of their theatres to see their shows open, because he could wait three days and see them close. It's a snappy street, this here now Great Wit Way.

Painting The Lily

LILY DAMITA has been making personal appearances at the Rialto theatre here in connection with her performance with Ronald Colman in The Rescue. Lily does the temperament act. singing "Madelon" to try to kid us out of our assurance that she's German. Quite a contrast. In the show, she's sedate, prepossessing, poised. In her personal appearance she goes hoyden on us by giving an imitation of a cyclone. She announces in what seems to be a Teutonic girl's impression of what an American audience thinks a French accent ought to be: "I have come to New York to make whoopee," and waits for a laugh. Lovely girl, and it's a shame that some press agent in the midst of his bull throwing gave her a bum steer.

Lily has also just appeared in another film on Broadway—Forbidden Love—in Whazzat!

HERE'S a weird bit about Adolphe Menjou who's just appearing in Marquis Preferred at the Paramount. It seems that two farmers up in Rhinebeck, New York, claim that Adolphe used to work on their farms up there before he hit the movie racket. He was fired from both farms. Maybe it was there that he first learned how to play the part of a rake. Don't shoot.

Bill Powell Comments

WILLIAM POWELL hit the town the other day in his most suave and matter-of-fact manner. I dropped in to see him at the Ambassador, where Richard Barthelmess slums in an apartment de luxe, poor fellow, when he comes east. William Powell, after a ten-minute conversation, becomes Bill. Bill is fast on repartee, up to the minute on books, plays, and ideas, and sports a copy of the American Merk. He's just finished work on Four Feathers and the part of Philo Vance in The Canary Murder Case. He says that there's a possibility that he may continue with S. S. Van Dine's popular series of detecka-tiff stories. Believe it or not, fans, but Bill sat at ease in a light blue kimona-smoking coat and delivered a panegyric on a fellow star. Richard Arlen, it seems, is a swell fellow, and he and his wife Jobyna Ralston are one of the most charming couples in Hollywood. Jobyna makes her own furniture now and Dick shows it off proudly to visitors.

Bill Powell's reason for being in town is to look around for possible plays. His rave of the moment is Street Scene, which is generally considered one of Papa Knickerbocker's best stage offerings of the season. However, Bill seems to have no designs on the play for a production of his own. Perhaps Lon Chaney will take it and portray the part of a street. Everybody could step on him then.

One thing is certain, says Bill. He is now to be exploited in sympathetic roles, the first being that of Philip Voaze in Interference. His villian days are over. No more curling of moustachios or insidious exhaling of cigarette smoke through distended nostrils.

Jottings

TEXAS GUINAN who's up in court on charges of maintaining a nuisance after the squelching of the conspiracy charge is still down on the movie industry . . . Jane Winton was in town and gave a lunch at which she greeted all visitors by their correct names whether she'd met them before or not... Carlotta King playing a lead in The Desert Song sang for us up at the Dover Apartments with her hubby at the piano . . . special morning pre-view of George Jessel's Lucky Boy shows him walking along the Al Jolson road.

Hidden ills are the most to be feared

Foes to our health stalk everywhere, yet alert men and women need not fear those ills that give warning, for modern science has perfected many a safeguard.

At the first warning of pain, do not be satisfied with superficial remedies! Gastric pains, dizziness, lack of energy, and indigestion, may be the danger signals of active stomach ulcers—one of the most dangerous of ailments because it is hidden.

For more than a generation, Dr. H. H. Warner, with his chemists and medical staff, have been perfecting a remedy for this disease, and now Dr. Warner's Stu-Mak Remedy is accepted everywhere as a harmless, healing panacea for this all too common trouble. If you suspect the presence of this ill, which may so easily become malignant, send for a trial box. The price is $2.00, or three boxes for $5.00.

Our Modern Maidens

Suddenly she threw her arms about Gil's neck and cried gaily, "I want a last fling as one of 'Miss Stern's Select Young Ladies'!"

'nough—and don't go wasting your ammunition, or you'll be just a little unplucked rose in No Man's Land!"

"Hold fire until you see the whites of their eyes," cried Billie, "and then aim low!"

Now Reg topped the hilarity by leaning amorously over Kentucky and playing shrilly on his piccolo, "Mamma loves papa, papa loves mama."

Kentucky struggled to keep back the angry tears that persisted in filling her eyes. This was the first time Gil had ever seemed even to notice her—and he was laughing!

Billie must have suspected that their good-natured banter had touched a sensitive spot in Kentucky, for she threw her arm protectingly around her shoulder and commanded, "Now lay off the Baby. She'll make the grade if we give her time . . . come on, kids, it's my turn again to roll the bones!"

BILLIE found a moment to glance at Kentucky when the others were once more absorbed in the game. The girl caught Billie's hand and pressed it ardently.

"Oh, Billie, you're just marvelous. I wish I could be a little like you!"

But sweet, romantic little Kentucky could never hope to possess the magnetism, spontaneity, and carefree clutch on life that imbued Billie Brown.

The train was just pulling away from a station after a brief stop when a young man jumped from a taxi and ran forward. He reached the tracks as the B. Bickering Brown car rolled by. By a scant hairsbreadth he managed to leap onto the step. A moment later he was banging peremptorily at the locked door.

An astonished porter appeared. "Sorry, Suh, but dis am a private car—"

"I'm passing through it!" announced the stranger with finality; and as he was a man of athletic build, with muscles obviously of steel, Sam did not press his objections.

The youngsters were about to toss off a second round of drinks, when Billie was suddenly aware of the intruder. Coolly, disinterestedly, disdainfully aloof, she stared at him. To her discomfiture, he stared as indifferently back at her. She was not used to that! Billie even wondered uncomfortably if his eyes were not cynically amused.

Now a draft from the open window blew some of her winnings to the floor. Silently the stranger gathered them up and held them for a moment as he looked questioningly into the sea of flippant young faces about him.

"Mine!" said Billie, coldly.

Without a word he gave them to her, his glance fixed on her extravagantly jeweled, beautifully useless white hands. His own were strong, muscular, clean, but not fastidiously manicured; hands that were accustomed to work—to fight, if they must.

"Thanks," murmured Billie haughtily.

As the man passed on—amused, contemptuous, and by no means overpowered by the snobbishness of her crowd—Billie struggled to recall where she had seen him before. He had already passed into the car ahead when she remembered his photograph in the latest Vanity Fair, with the paragraph:

"We nominate to the Hall of Fame: Glenn Abbott—Because he fought his way from the muck to a place of political power; because, though scandal dogged his steps, it never caught up; because he flung everything away to live in primitive lands; because, though he has returned at his party's call, no one knows whether he will remain; finally, because he is an enigma, nicknamed 'Dynamite.'"

Billie's quick brain was working. Here was a man she should tackle—for Gil's sake . . . a power in the political world! . . . That intriguing hint of scandal suggested that he was clever, too—a worthy match even for her! Besides, his arrogance had met her own without flinching. Here indeed was a man worth conquering!

In sudden determination, she abandoned the game of craps, sweeping aside the protests of the others. Feeling deftly of her hair, and twitching at her rumpled skirt, she sauntered after Abbott.

"Billie's out stalking new prey!" remarked Blondie venomously. "Some day she's going to fly so damned high there's going to be a mighty crash—and don't I long to see that day!"

"Aw, quit razzing her!" growled Reg. "We're getting near the end of the long trail. Better gather up your lip-stick and roller skates and get ready to get off the train."

"All right, Boy Scout. Here, fix my shoulder strap, won't you—I've broken it."

KENTUCKY watched the repair of Blondie's lingerie intently, enviously. How casual they all were, even about—such things. If only she could be like them.

"Mr. Johns," she called shyly.

Gil turned toward her, smiling. Now that Billie was no longer in view, he could see that Kentucky was really a very pretty, sweet youngster.

"Will you—my wrist watch has come unfastened—could you fix it for me?"

"Sure—if you'll call me Gil."

"All right—Gil," she replied in happy confusion.

"Here you are," he remarked. "Gosh, you're a funny kid!"

Reg had finished anchoring the shoulder strap. Now Blondie pulled his lips to her shoulder.

"Thanks, old darlink."

And Reg kissed her shoulder dutifully.

Kentucky was all athrill. She wished Gil would do that to her; but he released her hand without any demonstration. Reluctant to miss any of the little nuances of the others' love-making, she pressed the palm of her hand almost to his lips.

"Thanks, old dar-link," she said, imitating Blondie to the best of her ability.

Gil, amazed, took her palm in his hand and kissed it gallantly, before turning away. Kentucky felt as if the world had suddenly become clothed in rainbows. Slyly she pressed the kissed palm close to her, as if afraid she might lose one atom of its thrill. Gil, noticing this naive little gesture, was amused; but he was interested, too. For what man is not flattered by a pretty girl's adoration?

BILLIE had no idea how she was to force another meeting between herself and Abbott. Certainly she had not made an impression on him that would induce him to seek her again!

Lurching accidentally against a door, she got an idea. She could simply stumble into every compartment until she found him!

Her first two efforts were fruitless. But as she approached a third door the train shot unexpectedly around a curve and threw her violently into the room. Abbott leaped to her side, solicitously inquiring if she had hurt herself.

"My head—oh! Nasty crack!" she replied ruefully, rubbing it tenderly.

"Sit down a moment, till you get over the shock," he urged.

"No, I'm really all right, thank you—Mr. Abbott."

He looked at her in surprise, wondering if they had ever been introduced. It wouldn't be like him to forget a face—and figure—like hers!

"Oh, I know you!" Billie laughed, opening the magazine she had brought with her, and displaying his picture. Abbott glanced at it casually. Vanity was not his weak point.

The train lurched again, throwing Billie forward. As Abbott caught her with one hand, she felt as if she were caught in a steel vise.

"I guess," she remarked, "that I may as well sit down as be thrown down." But, unwilling to let him suspect that she was intentionally making a social call on him, she perched on the arm of the seat, as if she were but pausing a moment.

"Please don't stand," she told him. Reluctantly he released her. As he sat on the seat opposite her, she swung an expensively shod foot and pretty leg into the seat near him, apparently to help maintain her balance more easily. Wise in the ways of sex, she knew that he was completely conscious of her seductive young body.

"You many as well know who has dropped in on you!" she said importantly. "I'm B. Bickering Brown's daughter."

Abbott smiled politely, no slightest hint of reverence for that magic name betrayed in his face, or in his casual reply, "I met him before I went to the Andes. Even there one reads about him constantly."

Billie threw back her pretty head and laughed impudently. "Well, if you didn't, his whole publicity staff would get the axe. His slogan is B. B. B.—the same in all languages!"

Abbott laughed at her audacity. What a girl she was! He remembered the money piled on the table, the dice, the drinks . . . Yes, what a girl! . . . And what kind of a girl was she, anyhow? His very inability to catalogue her according to types he had met before intrigued him.

"Well, I've got to toddle along," she remarked a moment later. She held out her hand with a frank young smile. Abbott took it in his own, conscious of how small and soft it was—how nice to hold. He retained it much longer than was necessary.

"Of course, as you know Dad, you must come to my birthday party," she said, looking into his eyes and flashing all the well-known sex-appeal in her possession. "I'm a Fourth of July baby —which gives a little class to that day!"

Abbott, staring down at her with full realization of her alluring young presence, shook his head slowly.

"What? You won't come?" she demanded, unable to believe his silent refusal.

"I may be unscrupulous," he answered slowly, coolly, "but I'd be a lamb led to the slaughter among you youngsters!"

Billie did not know how to take this. She was spared the necessity of repartee by a porter, who entered to announce, "Your station next, Mr. Abbott."

"Why, it's my station, too!" cried Billie triumphantly. "Resign yourself to Fate! You simply can't escape!" Then, with a quick little pressure on his fingers, she drew her hand away, and ran from his compartment.

Abbott stood looking after her uncertainly. Why had she talked to him? Why had she asked him to her party? Was she just a young modern who liked his looks, and had gone after him? Or had she some kind of an axe to grind? As he recalled his past, he remembered that he had never known a woman who had not played him for a sucker. Most of them wanted money, jewels, cars, luxury; but Billie Brown had wealth and enviable position. Why did she seem interested in him . . . why?

As he turned to assemble his luggage, trying deliberately to erase the memory of her, Billie—impudent, alluring, inviting—seemed to be always before his eyes. He had refused to see her again; and yet, she was the most desirable girl he had ever known!

(To be continued)

Billie, engaged to young Gil Johns, decided to play Glenn Abbott for a diplomatic position for her sweetheart. Abbott, accustomed to being worked by women, and scorning their petty gold-digging, believed Billie a desirable, frank, young modern. What would be his reaction when he learned the truth? Don't miss the next installment of this whirlwind romance in the May issue of Screen Secrets, on sale April 10.

So This Is Hollywood

Doug wants to see London, so we are going to compromise and go to both places—but not at the same time."

For Better Transportation

NILS ASTHER met an acquaintance who appeared to have been imbibing a little too much.

"You should not do this," Nils warned his friend. "You should take a ride on the—er——what is it in English?"

The friend scowled.

"Do you mean a street car?" he asked.

"No, no. You know what I mean. This big thing that goes down the street making a swish—swish—swish—noise."

The friend thought a minute and then smiled.

"You mean the water wagon?"

"Yah, that is et," replied Asther.

Arthur Lake Explains

HAROLD TEEN'S fans will certainly remember that during one part of his career in the funny papers he had a colored chauffeur driving Leaping Lena to pay off a loan for a gambling debt. Hollywood's Harold Teen, Arthur Lake, has been seen in Hollywood with a chauffeur driving his coupe. It did look kind of silly at first and Arthur was made the subject of much joke, but he was forgiven when he explained that it is kind of maddening driving home after a hard day's work at the studios.

The Plot

WILLIAM HAINES was observed one afternoon playing with his new bulldog on the front lawn of his home. He was shaking an old boot at the dog and using it as a tug of war.

"What are you doing?" one of his friends asked.

"Teaching him to bite directors," was Bill's tart reply.

He Wanted Practice

MAURICE CHEVALIER, known as the Al Jolson of France and who is making a Paramount talking picture, The Innocents of Paris, certainly is a lucky guy. He had a scene in the picture where he had to be kissed by the entire chorus of a smart Parisian revue as a reward for his triumph in his debut as a singer. Chevalier wanted to rehearse the scene a number of times. Richard Wallace the director, turned thumbs down.

Nancy Would be Naughty

Nancy Carroll's flame-colored velvet robe trimmed in white marabou enhances her childish beauty, but, alas, fails to make her look naughty.

the husband of a supposed-to-be jealous woman. I thought to myself, 'Aha, Nancy, now you're out of the saccharine class,' but instead of smashing the statue of liberty over my head she invited me to dinner because I was so sweet!

"I've never been arrested for speeding. I'd like to be. I think it would be fun. I tried it once. I saw a copper and I stepped on the gas and shot past him. He chased me for a few blocks and ran me into the curb. Gee, I was excited! But did that officer give me a ride in the patrol wagon? Not on your life. He took one look at me and said, 'Hurry home, little girl. It's getting late.'

"Gosh, I was so disappointed I couldn't keep my chin from quivering. I said, 'But aren't you going to arrest me?' He looked at me so surprised and then said, 'Just who do you think you are? A Bebe Daniels? Now step on it. Your mother will be worried.'"

SHE'D like to go gay—she says so. She envies the whoopee girls. She'd like to be a Clara Bow, an Alice White or a Joan Crawford, but she always winds up by being just Nancy Carroll.

Even when she was a Glorified Chorus Girl in a Shubert Show, the baby face cheated her out of headlines. She and Joan Crawford were in the same show but it was Joan and not she who caused all the racket. Just a case of Sugar and Spice with Nancy furnishing the flavor and Joan, the savor.

Joan came from Kansas City and Nancy, from Tenth Avenue. They both made the front line and the front page—but how differently!

"I always envied Joan her sensational publicity. Why, if that girl was late for rehearsal they had it in Broadway Brevities. I guess it's partly my own fault. I didn't bother with any stage door Johnnies. I just went with Jack. When I saw his hungry eyes waiting for me after the show my chorus girl appetite shrank to normal and we just ran over to my uncle's—Billy La Hiff's—for a bite to eat. Jack was a cub reporter then and he used to tell me about his plans and I used to listen. I thought he was just wonderful and I still think so and all his plans came true.

"Then I came to Hollywood with a show. Now show girls aren't supposed to be gullible but I was. A studio official saw me and gave me a screen test and a promise—the screen test came out O. K. After a dozen screen tests and a hundred promises, I decided there wasn't any Santa Claus and was all ready to go back to New York. But Hollywood, it seems, just delights in breaking little hearts for the sheer joy of mending them. It got out adhesive tape and stuck my heart together with a contract for twelve pictures—I've already made nine. I made two at Fox—the rest here.

"I think screen tests are cruel. They pick out someone for a part and then test everyone else for it, knowing all the time that only that one has any chance. I know that now, but I didn't then. Every time I had a test I nearly died waiting for the outcome. Why, when I first came out here all I did was to sit by the telephone and wait for a call to come down and be starred. I was on salary but I wanted to work. Work, it seemed, consisted of nothing but publicity stills. I was photographed in every position imaginable, both pos-

Is Tobacco Harmful?

Dr. L. P. Clark states: "Tobacco's effect upon the heart and blood vessels is that of an active poison, is responsible for arterial degeneration, interferes with functions of both heart and lungs, finally paralyzing the nerve centers." Scores of other medical authorities are quoted in our booklet—all physicians will tell you that tobacco is a poison.

What Physicians Say

Medical authorities generally agree with this statement of Dr. D. H. Kress: "Tobacco is a deadly poison. It kills its user slowly. Some may live to old age in spite of its use, but none because of its use."

"Your treatment best, quickest, surest" say users

It is the only safe, reliable treatment, physicians will tell, that has been thoroughly tested for over half a century. It seldom fails to stop the tobacco habit. That is why we guarantee satisfactory results or money back. You are the judge, no one else, and no strings are tied to this guarantee.

sible and impossible. Every costume in the wardrobe was draped on me. Every mayor, diplomat or pineapple king who visited Hollywood was snapped with me.

"Just about the time I had my mind all made up that movies were stills they called for action! And I've been acting every day since. I've often heard that stars over-acted but this is a case of where they over-acted a star! Well, I struggled along, learned to put action into my face instead of my feet and finally learned that when the director told me to register 'anger' he wanted me to look daggers instead of stamping my feet—and then they sprang the talkies on me.

NOW TAKING talkies differs from taking silent pictures. In fact, it should be reversed. The silent drama is a noisy business. The scenes are taken with hammers pounding, orchestras playing, electricians screaming and directors bellowing. If they want you to laugh they play something lively and you feel like dancing and singing and laughing; if they want you to weep they play something sad and the flood starts. I had a terrible time crying for a talkie. I tried to think of everything that was sad—I thought of my mother, my childhood, my Broadway experience. None of it was sad enough to make me cry—in fact, much of it was laughable. Then I thought of the telephone I sat by when I first came to Hollywood and all the promises and the screen tests and I made that scene look as though the Pacific had suddenly backed up."

"Well, what do you think of the talkies looking at them from the inside?" I asked.

"I never will forget my first one. I stood shaking and quaking, waiting for the lights to change. They flashed, I took a deep breath and stepped up to the mike; 'Oh, Jimmy—' 'OH, JIMMY' my voice bounced back at me like a bolt of thunder. I forgot my lines entirely and said, 'Oh, my God! Was that my voice?'"

"And then,"—I thought I knew all the rest of it—"I suppose the director forgot all about the colored lights and expounded a little of his choice vocabulary on you?"

"No, he didn't. He certainly made it plain that it was my voice, but he used only the nicest words in saying so."

Of course he did. In fact, no one is ever nasty to Nancy. She doesn't know what struggle or hardship or harsh words are. Even her husband kisses her rosebud mouth and calls her "Baby." She gets even by shaking her little red head and saying, "He's such a nice boy." And he is a nice boy, and he isn't Mr. Nancy Carroll, either. He's Mr. Jack Kirkland, the playwright! And Nancy is proud of him and he's proud of Nancy and Hollywood is proud of them both. And we don't actually give a darn if they do get along like a pair of love birds—we'll always have our gossip about them, anyway.

Chaplin's New Cinderella

one who remarks on the likeness, both here and all through Hollywood."

"Hollywood certainly is interested in you. I suppose that you've been going around a lot, meeting all the people you used to watch on the screen?"

"Yes, and it thrills me frightfully. Being introduced to Gloria Swanson was one of the big days of my life, and I don't think there's anyone quite like Bebe Daniels. I spend a lot of time at her beach home. I always was crazy about moving pictures in Chicago. I used to go to them all the time. I read all the magazines like SCREEN SECRETS, and whenever anyone would ask me what I would like to do, I'd say a picture-show. Oh, I was a dyed-in-the-wool fan! And now, just a few months later, I'm meeting all the stars, face to face in real life!"

"I had no intention of going into pictures when I came out here from Chicago. I merely was on a visit to my best friend, Sue Carol. We had gone to school together at Kemper Hall, in Kenosha, Wisconsin. My marriage had turned out unhappily, and I decided to take a trip out to the Coast to see Sue. I intended to stay six weeks, and here I am—I hope for good!"

BY AN odd coincidence, her case strangely parallels that of her friend. Sue Carol also came to Hollywood on a short visit from Chicago, was discovered by a comedian (Douglas MacLean), and remained to take up a screen career. Both girls come of good families in the Windy City, both have had unfortunate marriages—and both have admired Charlie Chaplin since they were schoolchildren.

"It seems so odd to be working for this man whom I've always so admired. Sue came out to California on a trip when she was at Kemper Hall, and was introduced to Charlie. She came back with a snap shot of him holding her by the hand—she reached almost to his waist—and wouldn't deign to notice the rest of us girls for weeks. We envied her until we were green! And now I'm playing opposite him!"

"How is he to work with?"

"Simply wonderful. When I took the first tests, I was scared half to death. He has such a reputation as a genius, and I had never appeared in anything theatrical in all my life. But he was so kind and patient, that there wasn't the slightest reason for nervousness or fear. He's the most considerate of men, always taking things so easily and naturally that it doesn't seem like acting at all. I imagine that with a more brusque director, I wouldn't have been able to go through a single scene. But with Charlie, it really seems that everything will be all right."

Everything will be all right! The Cinderella war-cry! But how could it be anything else? I recall that in City Lights she plays something of a Cinderella role, a blind waif of the streets. It is an intensely sympathetic part, to which the soft, rounded curves of her face should lend themselves admirably. It would be unfortunate, however, to lose the spectacle of her eyes. I asked her if the script required that she keep them closed.

"No, I keep them open—just as Mary Pickford did when she played a blind girl in one of her earlier pictures. She gave me a good deal of training on how to get the best effects. You see, I had to go back to Chicago to ask my mother if I might accept the contract which Mr. Chaplin offered me after the test. Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks were on the train coming back, and all the way out she helped me. She was busy with all the problems of Coquette then, but not so much so that she didn't have me in to her drawing room every day to explain screen acting to me. The Fairbanks and Charlie have been very kind to me."

"You like Hollywood?"

"Oh, yes!" she answered quickly. "It is so much nicer, so much more informal, than Chicago. In a city like that it's almost impossible to have a home; hotels and apartments are a general rule. But out here everyone has a house and is able to entertain so much better. One gets tired so easily of going to hotels and cafes to see friends. It's much pleasanter at private houses. Through Sue and Charlie I've been to those of most of the picture people, and I think that their owners are among the best hosts in the world. I guess they get a lot of practice," she smiled, "living where things close up at twelve o'clock!"

Her smile is a charming, delightful affair, the smile of a girl who is thoroughly enjoying all that life is so lavishly pouring into her outstretched hands. And yet behind it there is a wisdom beyond her years, a mental poise indicated by the splendid proportions of her forehead.

Unlike the usual Cinderella, however, if she fails in City Lights her golden coach will be switched to no pumpkin. She merely will return to her former role as the daughter of Mrs. B. W. Cherrill, the Chicago social circles in which she formerly moved, and the Drake and the Blackstone as places of entertainment rather than the homes of movie stars. But if she wins . . . !

Who can tell what Prince Charming will fit upon her foot the slipper of continued good fortune?

John Gilbert Gets His Wish

John Gilbert as Jim Apperson in The Big Parade, the sort of role he will seek in the future.

great talking pictures that will lift the art to heights undreamed of at present."

Of the many players I've cross-questioned on this talkie subject, Gilbert is the first to view it purely from the angle of the film's great adventure. It is characteristic of him that he is courageous for the new, without a qualifying thought regarding personal fortunes. Will the speakies make him or break him? For that, apparently, Jack Gilbert cares not a fig. Very likely, he argues that the talking pictures will better the business and thus bring him his long coveted opportunity as producer-director. Or does he? Very calmly, almost indifferently, he told me that he had had some speaking tests made, but had never appeared in a speaking picture.

"Did the Brothers Schenck—Joseph and Nicholas—battle over you like the Brothers Barnabas in Methusalem?"

It was my final shot, for an office boy plopped in and called: "Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Mayer is waiting for you in your office!" and another, a red-headed messenger, brought the fateful words: "Mr. Thalberg asks you to join a story conference of Redemption!"

GILBERT didn't bat an eye. The days of quick-moving program star were done and gone forever! He hadn't been "sold up the river," and he was proud of it. Placidly he answered me:

"Not at all! Who ever heard of Joe and Nick battling—they couldn't and didn't. But I might as well lay the cards on the table and show how I arrived at the present fortunate position:

"You see, last summer Joseph P. Kennedy signed a contract to star me in First National pictures, to take effect at the end of my current arrangement with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer which expires next May. But the directors, who had certain other differences with Mr. Kennedy, refused to ratify his plans, and his resignation as First National's business advisor ended our understanding.

"On hearing of this Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Samuel Goldwyn and other friends in United Artists approached me and wished me to be with them in the role of a unit producer. The change would have enabled me to carry out my own ideas of production to the fullest, unhampered by studio requirements and demands. A form of contract to that effect, agreed to by all the United Artists board here, was placed before Joseph Schenck who was then in Europe.

"At this time the Association of Motion Picture Producers intervened with the plea that it was unethical to tie up a contracted star of one organization (M-G-M) with another before the end of the agreement and without giving the first organization an opportunity to make tenders. Joe Schenck finally declared: 'If M-G-M does not tie him up before December 31, we will!'

"Thus it came about that Nick Schenck, president of M-G-M, came out to the Coast and arranged for an entirely new contract with me whereby most of my ambitions for proper conditions are satisfied. The contract is between Irving Thalberg and myself, and is for two pictures a year for the term of three years after next May when my two remaining program pictures will have been completed.

"This goal of fewer and better pictures is one to which I have steadily been aspiring since the immortal Big Parade, and I have great confidence in Mr. Thalberg's wisdom, resource, and desire fully to co-operate."

Then he went, leaving me to ponder the extraordinary artistic ambitions of this popular idol, as well as his extraordinary success in realizing them.

Senorita Cyclone

Lupe Velez being dressed for her first stage appearance, in which she proved to be the overnight sensation of gay Mexico City.

to the Mother and I cry and I cry! I just make the tears, and I say, "Oh, please. I be good. I promise, if you don't do this to me." She cannot stand to see Lupe cry so I just have to write a thousand times more, "I must be good!" The girls all run up and say, "How it feels to run away?" They are too dumb to try it, but they want to know all about it when someone else almost goes to the reform school to do it.

I GUESS it is lucky for Lupe that soon after this my mother sends for us. My father is gone for six months. He is missing. They do not know if he is killed or what is happened. Mexico is very bad. We take a train which is shot at all the way to our home. My sister, Josephine, is to take care of me. One day she cannot find me. For three hours she go through the train sobbing and crying, "Has anyone seen my baby sister, Lupe?" No one has seen me; no one can find me. I am up in the front driving the big machine. I crawl up over all the coal and I say to the machine mans, "Can I get in your machine?" He say, "No! Girls cannot come here." Then I act like a little girl and I cry and wrinkles my eyes at him and say, "Why not?" like I am a baby.

He laughs and pulls me in beside him and I help drive the machine for him. I flirts with him like I flirts with all mens and he wants me to stay up there with him. The bullets come all around us but they never hit Lupe. I am not afraid. I live with the bullets since I am a baby. The wind blows and we go fast and I forget I am living. I like that. I like to go fast, especially when I have a nice mans with me. When I get tired I crawls back and finds the whole train hunting for me. I laugh. It is so funny. I am all black with the coal but they cannot see it is funny. It is so hard for some peoples to see what is funny.

When we get home there is no more money. My mother is crying. Everybody cries but Lupe. They are going to sell the piano. I say, "If every tear was gold then I cry all day long. But why cry when tears are only salt water?"

MY FAMILY have always been lazy. They do not know how to work. They do not want to know how to work. I know somebody have to do something so I ask my mother to introduce me to some mens who own the theatre.

While we are away at school my mother have moved to Mexico City, so it is easy to meet the mens that take me to the Principal Theatre. The boss says, "She is pretty. Show us what you can do." I never have no lessons, but I jump up and I dance the hula and the shimmy like I dance in the school for the girls and I sing all the songs the boys have sing when they come to serenade us. I sing Charlie, My Boy, Poppa Loves Momma and I Wonder What Becomes of Sally. There is a big show from Paris and the boss say he gives me a little part in the chorus. I scream at him, "No! I don't care about the chorus. I want to be a big star. I want my name the biggest on the front of the theatre. I want you to tell all the newspapers about me."

He say he do it!

Everybody else in that theatre is mad. Marie Contesa, who is the star, make fun at me. She say it is all right to fool the boss but I cannot fool the public. My mother thinks on the first night I will be frightened. She tell me not to see the people.

They do so well what I tell them and write so many wonderful things about me that every seat in the theatre is sold on that night I opens. My knees shake when I stand outside waiting to go in but I look at Marie Contesa and I stick out my tongue at her and I run on the stage and throw out my arms and say, "Hello, everybody! How is you?" Then I jump into my dance and I let myself go wild in the hula and the shimmy and I sing Charlie, My Boy and the other songs for them.

Do they like me? They go crazy. They throw their hats on the stage. They yell; they shout; they whistle; they call, "Hurrah for Lupe."

But the actresses, they are all jealous and say many mean things like a cat that I have to get even with them. I put on acts and I imitate all the other actresses in Mexico City. That is the way I get really famous—my imitations! But it does not make me all happy.

The mans I love, he does not like to have Lupe kick her legs in front of the public. He say I must choose between him and the theatre. It break my heart. It is what makes over the life-story of Lupe. It is what sends me to Hollywood. But I shall talk about that next time—no?

Faced with this bitter choice, which does Lupe take? Don't fail to read the next installment of her gripping life story, in which she describes this heart-breaking decision and the rush of events that swept her to Hollywood and a future beset with uncertainty.

The Letter That Saved Bob Johnson's Job

—and paved the way for a better one!

It was written to his employer by the International Correspondence Schools. It told how "Robert Johnson had enrolled for a course of home-study and had received a mark of 94 for his first lesson."

Bob answered the summons to the Chief's office with just a little fear and trembling, for a lot of men were being dropped—a lot more were having their pay reduced.

But as Bob came in, his employer did a surprising thing. He rose from his desk and grasped Bob by the hand.

"I want to congratulate you, young man, on the marks you are making with the I. C. S. I am glad to see that you are training yourself not only for your present job, but for the job ahead.

"We're cutting the pay-roll. Until I received this letter, I had you in mind as one of the men to be dropped. But not now. Keep on studying—keep your eyes open—and pretty soon there'll be a still better job for you around here."

Won't you let the I. C. S. help you too? Won't you trade a few hours of your spare time for a good job, a good salary and the comforts that go with it? Then mark the work you like best in the coupon and mail it to Scranton today. That doesn't obligate you in the least, but it will be your first step toward success.

On The Sound Stage

(for some reason, 'devil' is permissible), and 'hells' are changed to 'hecks'."

Once more the scene began but had scarcely progressed beyond Ruby McCoy's expurgated "Gee, it can talk!" before the recorder phoned down that Ruby's tones were not tough enough for a cabaret chorus girl.

"Oh, come, Miss McCoy, don't be so coy with your voice!" wheedled Dr. Fejos, jocosely. "Shriek, scream, yell—anything so I may hear the voice."

THE young Hungarian director is very popular with all the members of his large cast. Between set-ups, he invariably gravitates toward the piano to play duets with the studio pianist while Glenn Tryon seizes the cello and demands a lesson from the obliging cellist. (Everyone thought the day of the set musicians was at an end with the advent of sound pictures since they cannot play for scenes, but now they are more in demand than ever to pep up the company between shots.)

Paul Porcasi, who played in the New York production of Broadway, speaks feelingly of the difference between the stage and talkies.

"There is only a certain small range for the voice; I find myself continually repressed," he complained. "On the stage, one can let go; in anger scenes, one's voice can boom out to its full extent, but not so in the talkies. If the voice goes up too high or down too low, it does not register."

At this moment, Hal Mohr came over to invite me to watch a scene from the inside of the camera booth. This was very exciting as he assured me that I was the first scribe to be so honored. Inside the "butcher's ice box," as it is affectionately called, the two assistant cameramen—Stanley Cortez (brother to the actor Ricardo) and Willie Cline—stood on both sides of the camera; a small three-legged stool was wedged in back of Mr. Cortez for me.

After the signal of interlock, Mr. Mohr shut the heavy door upon us. Not a sound penetrated. All I could hear was the steady whirring of the camera as it automatically ground out the scene. Through the narrow, glass window in the front I could watch Maizie (Betty Francisco) at the telephone struggling to get "Pennsylvania 5000" and see the other girls at the bar ordering their drinks, but not a word could I hear . . .

Emerging once more on the set, we heard the welcome call for luncheon hour.

ANOTHER day—a week later—I approached the now familiar sound stage once more. Frank Reiter suggested that I take a look at the $35,000 camera crane invented by Dr. Fejos and used for the first time in Broadway. This was designed to take the place of makeshift wooden platforms from four to forty feet high on which cameras have been mounted heretofore in filming big scenes. The apparatus consists of three units: a set of motor generators furnishing electricity by which the crane is operated, a truck upon which the crane with its forty-foot boom is mounted and the crane itself.

Back on the set, we found a rehearsal in order. Steve Crandall and Dolph had just killed Scar Edwards and were dragging his body to the door when Billie and the young hoofer come out on the stair landing above. Billie gives a startled cry and her partner demands to know the trouble. Steve explains that it's only a drunk they're helping out. The hoofer laughs and the murderers continue their nefarious way.

The director watched the scene critically.

"I think it would be more natural if you two men murmur together just as Glenn asks what's the trouble. And then, Glenn, you and Merna talk coming down stairs. Remember, I don't want to hear what you say—just the sound of the voices."

This was tried out with sound equipment but the unseen recorder's voice came in a sonorous objection.

"Better let them be understood, Dr. Fejos. This way it sounds as if the equipment is out of order."

More rehearsals. Another test with sound. Then the buzzes, interlock and succession of "Quiet, pleases." Halfway through the scene "CUT!" . . . an airplane was winging its way far above us but the drone of its engines spoiled the take.

Patiently the actors began again. The first take was successful but the second was ruined by an inopportune sneeze from Marian Lord.

A deep sigh of relief echoed throughout the length and breadth of the stage as the final "CUT!" released us from our long, cramped silence.

"No more sound today!" cried the distracted director. "Trouble—always there is trouble!"

how the most spectacular and costly Sound picture ever made took Los Angeles by storm at Carthay Circle World Premiere!

"Carthay Circle had its innings last night. The magnus opus of the year from the First National studios. A superfilm ranking with the red-letter products of the industry. All Los Angeles flanked the scene with popping eyes. The most ambitious effort of Frank Lloyd since his memorable 'The Sea Hawk.' Excels that picture in spectacular elements. One of the best examples of the new art of synchronization. The massing of the fleets, the carnage of battle, contain some remarkable direction and photography. Rare beauty."

—Los Angeles Evening Press.

"One of the most picturesque films of the year. No set has been more artistically designed or photographed. Battle is truly sensational in its scope. Has the most impressive finish of any film of recent months. I consider this effect one of the finest ever devised. Star's performance ranks with her best. Miss Griffith sings several songs and very prettily."

—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

"If Lady Hamilton were half as lovely as Corinne Griffith you couldn't blame Lord Nelson for being willing to sacrifice fame, wife and all else for her. Victor Varconi a fascinating Lord Nelson. Corinne Griffith furnishes a series of lovely portraits. Frank Lloyd gets into his old directorial stride. He directs it with his former skill."

—Los Angeles Examiner.

"Lovely beyond compare in its embellishments of setting and costume. The spectacular sea fights lend bigness to its glamorous aspects."—Los Angeles Times.

"LOOK.... he's imitating a pianist!"

.....someone shouted Then a queer thing happened

JACK had strummed some "Blues" for us on his uke and Nan had just finished her screamingly funny burlesque on the "Kinkajou." We were all set for dancing, when—the radio refused to work!

No amount of jiggling brought it to life, either. In spite of our best efforts, all we could get from that confounded radio were such desolate howls that the girls begged us to leave the poor old thing alone.

Someone made a half-hearted suggestion of bridge. But Tom had a better plan. Pulling Joe on his feet—good old "sit-in-the-corner" Joe, whom everyone liked to pick on—he cried in a loud voice.

"Just a minute, folks! The party is saved! Joe, here, has kindly offered to enliven the proceedings with a piano solo . . ."

Loud cheering drowned out the rest. This promised to be good—for, as we all knew, Joe couldn't play a note. Naturally, we expected him to clown. . . .

Just as he sat down at the piano, Tom called out.

"Play 'The Varsity Drag'—that's a hot dance number!"

I couldn't help smiling at the thought of Joe—who had always taken a back seat at our parties—playing "hot" music. Excited whispers came from all parts of the room. "Wonder what he's going to do!"—"He doesn't know one note from another!" Suddenly someone shouted.

"Get this! Look—he's imitating a pianist!"

A Queer Thing Happens

Raising his hand melodramatically, Joe waited a moment to command silence. Then, without any more preliminaries, and to the complete amazement of us all, he struck the first bars of—"The Varsity Drag!"

And how! With all the verve and expression of a professional! No wonder Tom's eyes almost popped out of his head! This wasn't the clowning he had expected Joe to do!

Unable to resist the tantalizing music, couple after couple glided around the floor. When Joe stopped playing the applause could have been heard around the block—only to be instantly followed by requests for more numbers.

All evening they kept Joe busy at the piano—playing jazz, popular songs, sentimental ballads, even classical stuff—everything the crowd asked for, and they asked for plenty!

How that lad could play! I was dumbfounded. Why, it was incredible! Joe had always seemed to be a "born wallflower"—he had never displayed any talent for entertaining—yet now . . . I determined to solve the puzzle. On the way home that night I drew Joe aside and demanded,

"How on earth did you do it?"

He laughed. "Why, it was very easy!" I simply took that home-study course in music your cousin told us about. . . ."

"You don't mean that course that was supposed to show you how to play without a teacher, do you?" I interrupted.

"That's it! Say, it's a great course, all right!" he enthused. "There wasn't any expensive private teacher to pay—and since the lessons came by mail, I didn't have to set aside valuable hours for study. In fact, I practiced only in my spare time, a few minutes a day. And the course is thorough! Why, almost before I knew it, I was playing simple pieces by note, and . . ."

"I guess you don't have to tell me how thorough it is," I broke in. "Your performance tonight was a knockout! And you used to say you had no 'talent'!"

"I haven't," he insisted. "Anybody can learn to play the U. S. School of Music way!"

You needn't know a thing about music to take this pleasant, rapid course

This story is typical. The amazing success of the men and women who take the U. S. School of Music course is largely due to a newly perfected method that makes reading and playing music as simple as A-B-C.

Even if you don't know one note from another now, you can easily grasp each clear, inspiring lesson of this surprising course. You simply can't go wrong. First, you are told how a thing is done, then a picture shows you how, then you do it yourself and hear it.

Thus you actually teach yourself to become an accomplished musician right in your own home. Without any long hours of practice—dull or uninteresting scales—from real notes.

YOU STEP UP TO A BIG JOB WHEN YOU MAIL THIS COUPON

(C) 1929 by C. W. V. D. M.

A monthly feature devoted to bringing our readers the latest, most authentic news of talkie personalities and developments.

WHAT with musical shows and vaudeville acts coming to the screen there is every good reason that the language of the footlights should also come to Hollywood. It has, too, and in a big way. The studio workers never before have been bothered so much by a different lingo.

Whereas, in the past, it was difficult to keep track of "broads," "gobos," and "turtles," purely movie expressions, now they wonder what is meant by "grouch bags," "snakes," "cake money" and "hoofers."

The picture player will tell you that a "broad" is a large light throwing broadside beams, or that a "gobo" is a heavy black cardboard set up to cut off light from a certain section of the set, or that "turtles" are squat boxes covering connections for electrical cables, but they can't tell you that a "grouch bag" is the thing in which the trouper carries his savings or that a "snake" is a contortionist or that "hoofers" are dancers or that a "humpty-dumpty" is an unintelligent being, etc.

An Actor of Polish

HOLLYWOOD has a unique academy for picture acting. It has one regular student, and yet it boasts a faculty of some of the greatest names and minds in the film industry. The academy is a shoe shining stand at Paramount and the student is Oscar Smith, negro bootblack. Oscar now has a contract. He won his spurs when called on to do a bit in The Canary Murder Case; he stuttered so well and did the bit so well he was given a contract. Yes, he is still shining shoes on the side, too.

Speaking of Contracts

WITH the advent of sound pictures, musical instruments have come into their own.

M-G-M has signed a contract with a real Stradivarius violin made in 1722, which belongs to Henry J. Von Pragg. And its owner is to be allowed to play it. Reminds us of the dog contracts of silent days when the master was allowed to supervise the canine behavior at a salary which would have—but why try to estimate movie salaries!

Incidentally the pedigree of the violin was all properly recorded in the contract just like the pedigree of Rin Tin Tin, Flash or dog-what-have-you.

SCREEN SECRETS offers five dollars each month for the best letter by a reader giving a frank opinion of the talkies. Here is this month's winner:

Dear "Talkie" Editor:

Please don't let them hang the baby before he cuts his teeth! He may live to be President if he gets the chance. That's the way I feel about these poor, much abused talkies. People seem to have expected this rather premature child to arrive as well developed as the older members of the same family. When I pause to recall what the first motion picture I witnessed looked like!

The effect at the present time is felt more among the actors than the public at large. A pretty face and figure no longer suffice. This new thing is putting them all on their toes.

Then the question arises, which shall it be now, the really silent drama, or talkies? Why not both? In time the sound features will grow to seem indispensable and what a boon to music lovers! Won't it be great when they revive some of those good old musical comedies? Let's go!

HELEN FIELDER LOPEZ.
4013 Clifton Street, El Paso, Texas.

Cecil B. De Mille, seated in front of the camera booth containing Peverell Marley, cinematographer, directs his first talkie, Dynamite.

Ladies Worst

RECENT experiments have disclosed the fact that the feminine speech is the most difficult to interpret due to the fact that they have only one half as many tones as a man and the majority of these are of nasal resonance. Special training and watchfulness, however, may develop the throat muscles so that this handicap is partially overcome.

Two New Ones

TALKING pictures create a new language. "Bungalow" and "garage" now have become a part of the chatter on the sound stages.

A bungalow in this language is a sound proof cover which fits over the movie camera, while a garage is the nearby housing for the motors which drive the cameras.

Shut Up, Shirt!

SHIRTS that talk back ruined some perfectly good scenes on the sound stage at United Artists, where Bulldog Drummond is being made with Ronald Colman. The stiff glazed bosoms of the shirts worn by the men proved to be sounding boards and this was found to be the cause of disturbance in the microphone. New shirts were obtained immediately.

Welcome Home!

TALKING pictures are doing strange things in the movie industry. A hurried check the other day revealed that at least four feminine stars of the early days are making their return. Florence Turner, doing a bit in Universal's Broadway, was once known as the "Vitagraph Girl." Barbara Tennant, once the beauty of the Eclair and World companies, also in Broadway. Eugenie Besserer, another of the former Vitagraph stars, is in Madame X at M-G-M, while Ann Schaefer, who showed Corinne Griffith how to don her make-up for the first time when Corinne was a scared kid, is playing Corinne's chaperon in the star's latest at First National.

Now You Can Reduce 2 to 4 Lbs. in a Night

Eat what you please

Do what you please
Take no risky medicine

Send the Coupon for your first three Fayro Baths

Thousands of smart women have found this easy way to take off 2 to 4 pounds once or twice a week. These women take refreshing Fayro Baths in the privacy of their own homes.

Fayro is the concentrate of the same natural mineral salts that make effective the waters of twenty-two hot springs of America, England and Continental Europe. For years the spas and hot springs bathing resorts have been the retreat of fair women and well-groomed men.

Excess weight has been removed, skins have been made more lovely, bodies more shapely and minds brighter.

The Hot Springs are now Brought to You

A study of the analyses of the active ingredients of the waters from twenty-two of the most famous springs have taught us the secret of their effectiveness. You can now have all these benefits in your own bath. Merely put Fayro into your hot bath. It dissolves rapidly. You will notice and enjoy the pungent fragrance of its balsam, oils and clean salts.

Then, Fayro, by opening your pores and stimulating perspiration forces lazy body cells to sweat out surplus fat and bodily poisons. Add Fayro to your bath at night and immediately you will lose from 2 to 4 pounds in an easy, refreshing and absolutely harmless manner.

Your physician will tell you that Fayro is certain to do the work and that it is absolutely harmless.

Fayro will refresh you and help your body throw off worn out fat and bodily poisons. Your skin will be clearer and smoother. You will sleep better after your Fayro bath and awaken feeling as though you had enjoyed a week's vacation.

Lose Weight Where You Most Want to

Fayro reduces weight generally but you can also concentrate its effects on abdomen, hip, legs, ankles, chin or any part of the body you may wish.

Results Are Immediate

Weigh yourself before and after your Fayro bath. You will find you have lost from 2 to 4 pounds. And a few nights later when you again add Fayro to your bath, you will once more reduce your weight. Soon you will be the correct weight for your height. No need to deny yourself food you really want. No need for violent exercise. No need for drugs or medicines. Merely a refreshing Fayro bath in the privacy of your own home.

I Sell Records a Queer Way

So people tell me, because I will gladly send to any person who sends me his name and address, a selection of ten records absolutely ON TRIAL, entirely at my risk. Choose any records you want.

Furthermore, I positively insist that you return the records to me at once, if they are in any way inferior to records that sell for three or four times as much. Don't be "sorry" for me, but shoot the records back, and let me stand the postage expense both ways, unless the records are better, clearer and richer in tone than any records you have ever before had, at any price.

I have built a million-dollar business in records on just these "queer" methods, trusting absolutely in the honesty of my customers, and making them the sole judge of whether or not the records will cost them even one cent.

I've built these records to give you pleasure, enjoyment and some real honest good times for months and years to come. I've tried to study the wishes and tastes of the great music-loving public and I've collected in this list below, the very CREAM of my entire catalog. All the records are electrically recorded—and nearly all of them have been done within the last few months, and are in the very latest and best style of the present day. They are all in the standard ten-inch size with music on both sides and play on any phonograph, just like 75-cent records. They include the most recent hits, as well as famous old favorites, and I'm willing to stake my last dollar that they are GOOD.

Choose any ten records you want and simply write their catalog number on coupon below. Send no money. See terms on coupon and see how fully I protect you in every way.

WANT HAIR? SAY WHERE!

If I Can't Give It to You....
I don't want your money

By Alois Merke

To Those Afflicted with Thinning Hair, Dandruff, Itchy Scalp

YOU want HAIR . . . plus quick relief from scalp troubles! And in seeking both these things, you demand:

Reasonable assurance that you won't be fooled out of your money or take chances on injury to your scalp!

Oh, I know what you're up against. For years I've been in touch with thousands of scalp patients. They all said the same thing: "We don't want rosy promises; all we ask is reasonable assurance of scalp safety and new hair."

Now, follow me closely! I give you infinitely more than reasonable assurance. I give you this iron-bound guarantee—

New Hair On Your Head in 30 Days . . . . Or You Keep Your Money

And I give you this guarantee in writing! Besides, I positively assure safety to your scalp.

I leave it to your good judgment. You're fairminded. Think for a moment: How could I make such a guarantee if I didn't have absolute confidence in my treatment? Why, I'd be out of business in a week! I'd lose my reputation. I'd ruin the professional standing of the Merke Institute, Fifth Avenue, New York, a scalp research bureau established 13 years ago and known from Coast to Coast.

But I can safely guarantee new hair . . . or no cost. For patient research showed me what others either purposely ignore or just don't know:

Falling hair cannot be stopped by ordinary surface treatments!

Leading dermatologists agree with me on that. Years of investigation taught us all that scalp troubles originate below the scalp!

Simple as A . . B . . C

Here's what happens. Modern habits rob the hair of normal nourishment. Dandruff appears, itching begins. Soon roots weaken and hair falls out. But in countless cases those roots, far from being dead, are only temporarily inactive. Surface treatments can't reach them. A carload of so-called "cures," ordinary tonics and oils won't make sleeping roots wake up. But my treatment, the essence of scientific research, wakes these sleeping roots to active life. I get down BELOW THE SCALP, stimulating little blood vessels; rushing nourishment to the roots themselves. That's why I can safely GUARANTEE NEW HAIR . . . OR NO COST! So could you if you had done my research.

Don't Buy a "Pig in a Bag!"

What a shame it seems that so many dollars and hours are wasted on useless surface treatments. Not only that, but hair is actually removed and scalps injured by doubtful salves and tonics. If a man came up to you in the street and said, "Here's a tonic that'll grow hair!" . . . would you buy it? Of course not. You wouldn't know the maker, the ingredients, nor would you have any redress in case of injury.

In other words, when you buy ordinary "hair-growers," you buy "a pig in a bag." You GAMBLE! Not only with scalp health, but with your hard-earned money. And you take a chance on discouraging for all time, your efforts to regain new hair.

Thousands Know Me

My treatment is based on scientific facts . . . facts that you can check up with your family physician or medical reference books. My treatment is backed by years of research, and the gratitude of thousands who invested a mere few minutes a day in my effective treatment.

Very important, too, I have the Merke Institute behind me, an ethical institution known everywhere for its accomplishments in growing hair. And last of all, I say in the strongest way I can, I DON'T WANT A PENNY OF YOUR MONEY IF I FAIL TO GROW NEW HAIR! Quite a difference, isn't it! I assume the burden of proof, not you!

Before It's Too Late

Run your fingers through those thin spots on your head. Then reflect: What will happen if you let yourself become actually bald . . . changed appearance, lost prestige, years older-looking. Is indifference worth the price you eventually pay? No! Decide now that you're going to act! Tear out the coupon and MAIL IT TODAY for my free booklet filled with complete details of my treatment, and scientific facts. FACTS, mind you. Not theories—but convincing, guaranteed statements backed by leading dermatologists. Send for the booklet NOW! It's yours by return mail. The Editor's Opinion

Hollywood Revisited

Captain Roscoe Fawcett
Editor

THE writer has just returned from a two-months' trip to sunny Hollywood to escape the blustering spring breezes of the Northland. My visit has convinced me beyond all doubt that in a few years we shall be referring to silent pictures with the tolerant complacency with which we now look back on the crude horse operas of an earlier era, as a necessary step in the evolution of the drama of the screen.

I predict that within two years every town and hamlet will be wired for the showing of sound and talking pictures. All-talking pictures will probably never come to occupy the attention of movie producers entirely. But many pictures will have bits of dialogue interspersed at effective moments and all pictures will have sound effects.

Hear Ye!

DURING my rounds of the studios I had a very pleasant chat with Douglas Fairbanks over at United Artists where he had recently finished The Iron Mask. There I learned news that will be a joyous surprise to every fan. Doug and Mary definitely have decided to make their next picture together and, according to present plans, it is going to be a picture version of Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew.

They say out there that Mary's next release, Coquette, in which she plays the part of a wily flapper, quite different from anything she has essayed before, is destined to be one of the sensations of the year in pictures. Mary not only has a charming voice, but does a remarkable piece of emotional acting as well.

Whoopee Velez and White

OVER at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio, recently acquired by William Fox, ye editor spent thirty or forty minutes chinning with Lon Chaney and Lupe Velez who were just completing a Polynesian picture together, Where East is East.

Keep your eye on Lupe Velez. This young lady hails from Mexico where they print earthquakes and revolutions on their menus like lutefisk and soup. She is the pet and joy of Hollywood and is going to furnish us with some of the best acting in the history of the screen. You need only to see Lupe in Lady of the Pavements to realize her possibilities. I suspect that most of the comedy business of that picture was of her own invention.

Lupe's secret is in being natural before the camera—even if not so much so off the lot. It is plain in her every move that she never had anyone to curb her high spirits—to impose upon her the artificialities of our civilization. She is, therefore, delightfully human and appealing, and not a punishment to the eyes, either on the screen or in person.

At First National is another youngster of great promise—the vivacious Alice White. She is off to a great start, with everyone of her recent pictures a hit at the box-office. She has beauty of the saucy, wise, but wide-eyed type which is in such vogue today.

"Uncle Carl's" Luck

AT UNIVERSAL the writer met a young executive who puts the wonders of fiction to shame. He is Carl Laemmle, Jr., son of the famous "Uncle Carl" Laemmle, who has slipped off to New York leaving the whole works in the capable hands of his son. Although not yet twenty-one, young Laemmle has already been intrusted with the expenditure of over a million dollars. When I called, he was supervising production of Universal's super-production of the year, Broadway. There is nothing of the officiousness in Carl, Junior, that you would expect to find in a young fellow elevated to such a position at his age. He has an extremely pleasing personality and is as likeable as he is efficient.

Hospitable Hollywood

I FOUND Hollywood the same, delightful, hospitable place as ever, at heart. I am deeply indebted to Billie Dove and her husband, Irvin Willat and to Madge Bellamy, Claire Windsor, Mildred and Harold Lloyd, Dolores Del Rio, Betty and Ham Beall, Jane Winton, Don and Ann Alvarado, and many others for their hospitality. Here they make a visitor feel at home.

Outwardly, however, I found Hollywood a changed town. The influx of the new talent pouring into Hollywood from Broadway has done it. Hollywood Boulevard which formerly rang with a midwestern twang, has adopted a Broadway accent. Night clubs are springing up like mushrooms. Apartment houses are rearing their heads against the brown hills along the quiet streets of bungalows and palms. It is a busier, more bustling city, with a more metropolitan air. But it is still Hollywood at heart.

Roscoe Fawcett

RONALD COLMAN is the sort of man who speaks for himself. His voice will be heard on the screen for the first time shortly in the talking picture version of the famous stage play, Bulldog Drummond.—Samuel Goldwyn.

NANCY CARROLL and Buddy Rogers are two worthy representatives of the younger generation on the screen. They will be seen and heard together soon in Close Harmony, an all-talking picture.—Paramount.

They're Funny

Hollywood celebrities' assorted whims, oddities, and eccentricities give dash and surprise to movie existence—here's who does what and why!

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

Carmel Myers simply must have her first name embroidered on all her undies and what-nots.

ECCENTRICITIES? Dearie, you haven't heard the half of it.

There are those who like 'em hot and those who like 'em cold. There are those who like 'em young and those who like 'em old. And then there are those who prefer it with ginger ale, heaven forbid.

Eccentricities? My dear, we reek of them. Hollywood does. But then, aren't we all? Doesn't each one of us verge a little, just a very little, from the plane that is prescribed as normal? Eccentricities? They jump from behind doors and waggle their fingers. They pop up at the most unexpected moments. They prance in glee on every occasion. No social gathering is complete without them. Neither is a housewarming, nor a week-end. Dr. Sigmund Freud should know. Oh! And so should Dr. Adler. Food for psychiatrists. Throwbacks to atavism. Reversions to type. Childhood fears. Complexes. Behaviorism. Food for thought. Fun for all.

DID you know that Charles "Buddy" Rogers never sits down to his morning toast and coffee without first bending to the piano to play Liszt's Liebestraum, which, translated for only you and me, spells "Dream of Love"? And sometimes he varies the procedure by tooting it forth on his saxophone. And that Norma Talmadge prefers satin sheets, or crepe de chine? And that Ronald Colman refuses to have the interior of his home photographed, stating flatly, in that good old English way, that he is entitled to one hundred and forty square feet of privacy, and, by God, he's going to have it?

Did you know, for instance, that Dolores Del Rio carried a waffle iron all over Europe and waffled here and there, with coffee, as the urge commanded? She waffled in Paris and pancaked in Berlin. And that she even introduced waffles to Dr. Karl Voellmoeller, he who wrote The Miracle, and he pronounced them, too, as such? And that Mary Pickford saves her old hankies and makes things—like aprons—of them?

Eccentric? Of course we are, but don't be silly, who isn't? Didn't Elagabalus, the boy emperor of Rome, invite the seven fattest men in all the ancient city to dinner, and didn't he tempt them with hors d'oeuvres, with sausages, pea-hens' eggs, olive and dormice with honey and poppy seeds? And didn't all the delicacies turn out to be glass and ivory and marble? And didn't the seven fat fellows clumsily arrange themselves on huge, and deceptively comfortable, cushions, and didn't 'Gaby, the little devil, order the air immediately removed, and the seven fat fellows find themselves wallowing, like so many whales, on the marble floor? Didn't he? Well, don't look at me that way. I wasn't there. Ask Morris Bishop.

Edward Everett Horton cannot pass a piece of driftwood—that's his weakness now.

And wasn't it Edward Wortley Montagu, Jr., who had wigs made of iron and wigs made of twisted wire, and collected snuff boxes by the hundreds? And wasn't it the Duchess Mazarin who put ink in the holy water and fenced, in her nightie, with Lady Sussex?

That Way!

Eccentricities? Well, you can't tell Hollywood anything about them.

CAMILLA HORN must have her feet rubbed five hundred times every night —two hundred and fifty strokes to each precious extremity; and collects moonstones along the Palisades Del Rey beach and has them polished and made into trinkets. Gilbert Roland started a fad by using red tennis balls, because they are easier on the eyes. And Alice White doesn't wear stockings, which is hard to bear. And pity the poor silk worms.

Richard Barthelmess will never wear dinner clothes unless he has a gardenia for his buttonhole, and Corinne Griffith must give balance to her missives. When she stamps an envelope she always uses two green one-cent stamps instead of the orthodox red two-center that honors the Papa of this rugged land. Milton Sills will not tolerate jazz on his set and prefers a phonograph record of a classic to all the goshdarned gilded derby bands in the country. Bebe Daniels will never read a review or a criticism unless her mother reads it first and prepares her for any derogatory comments. And Clara Bow won't wear a hat.

Estelle Taylor has a yen for white orchids, loathing their usual lavender hue, and every time Felt, the florist, receives a shipment he has a standing order to send her a corsage. Baclanova never made a stage appearance without having, somewhere on her person, a slip of paper on which are written encouraging words by Vladimir Nyemirovich-Dantchenko, of the Moscow Art Theatre, with whom she studied. And Clive Brook has a penchant for buying hats which he never wears. He has fifteen, unworn.

And did you know, while we are getting personal and papa and the cat are out, that for lunch Lon Chaney has his daily iron in the shape of a raw spinach sandwich on graham? And that, despite everything, Edward Everett Horton cannot resist a piece of stray firewood in the road? And that Carmel Myers has her first name embroidered on every single piece of lingerie she owns? But, of course, there are some things you couldn't expect to know. And that John Holland writes love letters weekly to his mother? And so is your old Oedipus.

Al St. John, so rumor has it, has a collection of twenty bicycles and rides at least one of them every day for fifteen or twenty minutes to keep in practice. And Bill Powell's middle name is Horatio, which he prefers to keep a dark secret. And Adolphe Menjou hates big houses and has his built on a hillside with groups of rooms on different levels to give the effect of compactness. And John Ford, the director, chews his handkerchiefs to shreds when directing a scene.

EVELYN BRENT will never permit a gown of her own to be photographed; and Anna Q. Nilsson, instead of flicking her cigarette ashes into a tray, as you and I, prefers to purse her lips and blow them into thin air. Wally Berry goes to bed at nine each night and arises promptly at six—the next morning—a very eccentric thing, indeed. And Victor McLaglen has an Arab valet whom he addresses in his native Arabic. And the valet understands.

Alice White's stockings do not choose to run because she eschews them altogether.

When it comes to chasing fires, Grant Withers would rather do that than sleep, eat or what will you? And when it comes to sleeping he pays a bell boy at the Hollywood Athletic Club to awaken him by shaking him, because the sound of a bell in the morning ruins his day. And Jose Crespo of Madrid, who is the first actor of Spain, and you should know, has his own bottier and never wears ready-made shoes. And that Dorothy Dwan cannot get to sleep at night unless a glass of sparkling water is at her bedside, to which she resorts occasionally during the long hours of the night.

George Bancroft and Al Santell are not happy unless they are living by the water's edge, separately, of course, with their respective families, and George Fitzmaurice has a penchant for colored pencils. Red for one mood, blue for another, black for still another, and you can fit them to your own moments. He always has four or five stacked before him when working on a script. Ken Maynard refuses to be photographed without his broad-brimmed hat, because it's his trade mark; and Lila Lee, the sweet child, will not sleep in the dark. There must be a low light blinking at her bedside.

Life is not complete to Bela Lugosi, the Hungarian actor, unless he has his daily walk in the hills; and William Cowen, the RKO director loses his appetite if every course of his dinner appears on the same service. Lenore Coffee, his wife, has solved the problem (and it is difficult, isn't it?) by serving the entree on Venetian glassware, the salad on flowered china and the main course on gold-banded china.

Claire Windsor will not open a letter without using a small dagger-shaped paper cutter, treasured for sentimental reasons; and Jacqueline Logan, believe it or not, saves all her pennies and buys, not bonds, but postage stamps. She also keeps a troublesome appendix, now divorced, afloat in a bottle of alcohol

Dolores Del Rio's breakfast diet is simply waffle. Whether traveling in Europe or working on location she can't be without them.

For seven or eight years Harold Lloyd has kept on his person a roll of money held together by a rubber band, and Harold would rather walk home than break into that "lucky wad." Colleen Moore has an old pair of soft kid dancing shoes that she wouldn't part with for all the downy slippers given her by John McCormick; and Georgia Fawcett, daughter of George Fawcett, declares her father's greatest eccentricity is never leading trumps in bridge. But that depends entirely on your Work or Whiteside.

Sam Hardy's clothes are all on the square. He can play checkers on his coat, pants or vest, any time, anywhere.

JIMMY WALKER, Mayor of New York, now that we are getting into personalities, always makes his own cup of White Rose tea in the bright morns; and a member of his party carried his own feather bed with him when he visited Hollywood. Louise Fazenda dotes on driving, on Saturday night, to the huge produce market in downtown Los Angeles, and filling her car with succulent vegetables; while Ruth Taylor is the kind of girl who always hangs her clothes on hooks, with precision, no matter how late the party has been.

Jim Cruze's eccentricities of dress—soft cap and softer collar, and Conway Tearle's premiere garb of golf sweater and knickers are well known; but did you know that Sam Hardy's wardrobe contains the loudest checks in Hollywood and once, in a Writer's Club playlet in which he did not appear, he was given program credit for the loan of one of his passionate bennies? And that Walter Byron's chief eccentricity is driving on the left hand side of the road, as we do in merrie olde England? And why not? He has had six smash-ups from that trick.

When it comes to doing things in the manner of other people, Vilma Banky is obdurate, whether it be peeping through a tennis racket for a still or doing a bit of business in a picture. First there is an argument which Vilma starts with, "Everybody does that. Ve do it some other way, yes?" And Lily Damita has her dressing room plastered with mirrors before which she spends plenty of time a day, posing in this way and that, to advantage.

Did you know, now that we are really getting into the spirit of the thing, that James Gleason cannot write at the studio but must pound the keys at home, adjacent to a picture of his wife; and that Mona Rico's fondness for bright colored scarves has become almost an obsession, so her momma says? And that Lupe Velez cannot enter a room in which a picture hangs awry without walking to it and straightening it? And that Ernst Lubitsch cannot work without a good black cigar in his face and plenty more in his pocket; and that his good friend, Emil Jannings, becomes all bothered when coffee which has careened over onto the saucer, is served him? And I don't blame him.

REGINALD DENNY detests the modern fad for colored hankies and always uses plain white linens. Lloyd Hughes drives his own motor, which he insists is an eccentricity in chauffeur-ridden Hollywood; and Evelyn Camilla Horn must have her dainty tootsies massaged five hundred times every night before she can relax. Dr. Geoffrey Grace has the job now. Who wants to be his successor?

Brent, whom we again mention, refuses to have her chauffeur dressed in puttees and knickers. It is much too servile, she explains, democratically, and orders long-trousered uniforms instead. Jetta Goudal wears white wash kid gloves which she launders herself; and Robert Ellis' cuffs are held together by different links. A time ago, one link broke and he was forced to wear another of different pattern. He liked the effect. And that's that.

Al Jolson hates being alone. He likes to be surrounded by three or four cronies who can be called upon, frequently, to indulge in a game of hearts; and Lois Wilson cannot stand the sight of imprisoned birds and gave away a parrot, once, because she could not tolerate its being

Talk's Not Cheap

Talking and sound pictures have sent production costs soaring—here's what costs and how much.

By HENRY MACMAHON

YOU'VE often heard that two or three minutes of a multi-millionaire's office chat are worth as many thousand dollars, and you no doubt know of folk who talk to distant correspondents by radio or cable at rates of five to ten dollars a word—

Yet the golden words in the picture studios today are more costly than any other vocables in the world, even more so than the coloratura diva's high C in the Metropolitan Opera House or the famed lyrical hero warbling Oh Promise Me! into the horn of the phonograph.

Love pleas at $100 or even $50 a word are awfully expensive! Seems like a rich defendant's breach-of-promise case brought to trial. But it isn't. The "sound" actors make 'em, and no doubt if they had to pay for 'em, would gladly return to dumb show. Even a Scottish couple, if obliged to voice their feelings, could hardly get by on less than $100—$50 for the love and $50 more for the "Yes" or "No".

It's got so far that you must study the script with a stop watch, time the enunciation of each word.

Conversationalists can't say more than a thousand or twelve hundred words in an eleven-minute reel. Figure six reels to the picture. The outside limit of talking has got to be 6,000 or 7,000 words.

From the modest talking "cheapie" costing $60,000, where the hero and heroine bill and coo at a "sawbuck" per coo, the rates ascend dizzily through the expensive courtroom and mystery stories to the great singing spectacles like The Desert Song or The Broadway Melody, on which $500,000 or better is spent, and each beautifully cadenced word costs the management around $100 to fixate it on sound track or disc.

You can't—simply can't—squeeze the pennies in talkies. Some producers brag they make the talking versions for an added amount equivalent to one-third to one-half the

Madge Bellamy Tells the PAINFUL TRUTH

Bobbing her hair was a symptom that the real Madge Bellamy was coming to the surface after a bitter struggle—a struggle described candidly

To HARRY CARR

IF FRANKNESS is good for the soul, I must have done a lot for the soul of Madge Bellamy the other day. I was frank; she was frank.

We learned a lot about each other—presumably to the great benefit of our souls.

We were sitting in the huge baronial hall which is her living room. Under the influence of a big open fire with eucalyptus logs that purred and sputtered, and many cigarettes, we grew to a genial warmth where we began asking each other disagreeable things.

"Madge," I said, "you are a very strange girl. You are so beautiful that you get me all mixed up when you look at me."

Miss Bellamy purred.

"But you used to be so insincere that I wanted to slap you; I wish I had."

Miss Bellamy looked shocked.

"There wasn't one sincere thing about you. When they gave you a part to play and put you out on the set, you never gave a thought to the part. All you thought about was: 'I wonder if I am now looking beautiful.'"

Miss Bellamy looked more shocked; then she giggled.

"Then," I added, judiciously, "you suddenly became sincere. In Mother Knows Best, you were sincere; you were real."

ARE you sure you are not flattering me too much?" asked Miss Bellamy, sarcastically.

"Quien sabe?" I said. "But anyhow, I am not through.

"I have always felt, when I talked to you, as though I were not talking to the real Madge Bellamy. I always felt that behind the very lovely and entirely insincere young lady in front of me was a real Madge Bellamy somewhere. I always wondered what she might be like. In Mother Knows Best, I found out."

Madge Bellamy representing (almost) the naked truth which she tells in this story.

"Well," said Madge, "and then . . . ."

"Happy to meet you," I said. "The real Madge Bellamy."

"How do you like her—now you know her?"

"I am not sure; I haven't found out."

"I am not sure that I have, either."

"Something must have changed her suddenly."

"Not so suddenly as you think."

"In all probability it was bobbing her hair. I think when she cut off her hair, the barber must have snipped right down to the real Madge Bellamy."

"You are wrong—you are wrong so many times. The bobbing of the hair was not the cause of the change in the Madge Bellamy you used to know. That was only a symptom."

"Then you admit it?"

"I admit it."

"Good; tell me about it."

IF I HAD taken Miss Bellamy's breath away, she got revenge. She took my breath away.

"I don't mind; I'll tell you the whole truth about it," she said.

"You were right—for once. I was insincere; that is to say, I gave the effect of insincerity. You were also right when you say that I was not thinking about my parts; that I was thinking about how to be beautiful. That is just exactly what I was thinking about."

"How come?"

"When I was a little girl, I lived in Texas, I had a great hanker to be an actress. I persuaded my people to let me go to New York and try to break in. The first break I got was getting into the chorus. I was then fifteen years old.

"I only tra-la-laed about two weeks. With some girls I was in an act at a theatrical benefit. There I happened to meet Daniel Frohman. He was a lovely old man. Incidentally—although this has noth-

Madge Bellamy, who—believe it or not—once spent some time worrying about whether she was beautiful enough! All because this lovely creature happened to be equipped with a sensitive, artistic, but over-critical faculty for self-analysis. The world has decided an emphatic "Yea!" regarding her beauty.

So This Is

Raquel Torres, Fay Webb, Mary Doran and Blanche Le Clair are tuning up their roller skates and getting ready for spring at the M-G-M studio.

A TYPICAL American scene serves as the locale for the new Borzage-Gaynor-Farrell picture, as yet untitled.

A bit of New England spread over one entire stage. Two shacks snuggled in far corners with a big hill between them. Grass, shrubs, mountains, real trees in the foreground and in the distance. A waterfall gurgling its way down the hillside behind Charlie's house; an old oaken pump which really works before Janet's.

And the houses—real ones with three rooms each. The work bench where Charlie salvages junk in his; a staircase which carries Janet to her sanctuary under the eaves in the other. The stoves, the old clocks—and outside, the chickens and the cows wandering in perfect freedom behind their picket-fence enclosures.

No wonder location trips are getting less and less frequent. Why go to New England when you can bring New England to Hollywood?

Charlie Farrell is climbing telephone poles in spiked shoes to prepare for his part as a linesman. And learning to wheel himself up and down hillsides in a wheelchair for that part of the picture where he is a victim of paralysis.

Janet Gaynor is practising with her chickens so they will know her and come to her when she feeds them in the picture.

Bessie Love spends three hours daily on dancing lessons.

ANITA PAGE, the Wampas baby star, who usually goes to bed at nine o'clock every evening after she has helped mother wash the supper dishes, is being seen going places with Harry Crocker, the millionaire play boy of Charlie Chaplin. Of course, the next step will be a rumored engagement.

Radio-do-deo-do

ALICE WHITE gave a short talk on the radio when she was mascot at a recent football game, whereupon four idle gentlemen lounging in a club at Harvard hurriedly sat up, gasping, and made a concentrated dash for the telephone and placed a long distance call for Hollywood.

Getting, after the usual time limit, Miss White, they invited her to be their guest of honor at a June rowing regatta or whatever you call those shell games in which they compete with a rival college.

That is the best tribute to a Vitaphone personality that has yet been told.

TOM BARRY, a clever playwright, as Courage, now on Broadway, will testify to, has been several months on the Fox lot writing stories and dialogue.

John Gilbert enjoying a moment of relaxation with his Chow dog in a secluded corner of his Beverly Hills estate before starting work on his next picture.

Tom was in Raoul Walsh's office and a headline in a local paper intimated that Wall Street was getting after William Fox due to his many merger schemes.

Tom read the article and said:

"They better lay off Bill Fox. The first thing they know he will get sore on Wall Street and go down there and buy the street and put up a few more theatres."

June Speaks Up

DEMURE June Collyer is the last girl one would suspect of wisecracking, yet she pulled a nifty one morning recently.

On the set they were discussing the newspaper reports of Lindbergh crashing his plane and injuring himself and his fiancee, Miss Morrow.

"Lindy," crooned June, "seems to have forgotten that one needs two arms to drive an airplane as well as a car."

Speed

WE HAVE companies out here who make quickies. But this is the fastest producer I ever heard of.

They began work on the picture at nine in the morning. At noon the producer walked up to the director and asked:

"How many scenes did you get?"

"Nine," was the reply.

"Well, you got to do better than that. We are three days behind shooting schedule now."

On the Cuff

I HAD a nice speech written on my cuff," said Eddie Nugent over the radio at the Broadway Melody opening. "But they sent my shirt to the laundry. Next time I'll have it tattooed."

Another Mix-up

SINCE Lupe Velez deserted Tom Mix for Gary Cooper, Tom has been doing a bit of free lancing. Clara Bow one night; Dorothy Dwan another, sometimes, appearing places with both ladies. But now, well, Gwen Lee doesn't brook interference, so you may see Miss Lee and Mr. Mix alone at the Ambassador, the Montmartre and all the other places dedicated to Hollywood celebrities.

Prim and Prop Her

MAYBE you've heard it and maybe you haven't. Anyway, Hollywood is chuckling over the latest antic of its favorite flamboyant charmer. It seems a prim and proper interviewer from Boston went to chat with the girl and found her in scanties and a certain form-containing garment worn on a lady's upper extremities. The reporter was considerably shocked.

"I am sorry, I cannot interview you in a brassiere," she said firmly.

"Ah, that is what you think, too! And it is too blamed tight. I take it off!"

And with a valiant gesture, off it came.

The lady from Boston made a hurried exit.

A Suitable Suitor for Sue

NICK STUART rushed down from Santa Barbara where he is making a picture and escorted Sue Carol to the courtroom each day, while she was appearing as a defendant in a suit brought by Douglas McLean over her contract. Nick lost considerable sleep over his cavalier act as he had to rush back to Santa Barbara to his location daily. Sue won the suit.

Tears in Arrears

SPEAKING of Nick and Sue, they were working all night. At five o'clock one morning they were taking exteriors on Western avenue. They were supposed to cry. It was so cold that tears just wouldn't come. Even onions could not help the situation. The company had to quit—to return at nine o'clock the next morning. And yet people sometimes think these people do not earn their thousand-a-week salaries!

Simply Killing

THEY say, so they say, that exceeding difficulty was met in finding a suitable theme song for Norma Talmadge's Woman Disputed, and it was only after supreme convolutions of whatever convolutes in a song-writer's bosom that Woman Disputed, I Love You, was brought to light.

What, is what I want to know, are they going to do when the time comes, and the cherry blossoms bloom, and Baclanova's Woman Who Needed Killing needs its tender theme song? There is not even a Chopin alive to write a funeral march.

But, tut! Let Mr. Zukor worry about that.

A Host of Good Cheer

JOBYNA RALSTON and friend husband, Mr. Dick Arlen, are becoming famous for their informal entertaining. And when I say informal, I mean it. It doesn't make any difference whether they're home or not. Their guests just find notes to order their food from the attendants. And if they are home, and busy—they go right on with their work and say, "There's the tennis court and there's where you go swimming. Tell the cook when you're hungry!" They've even fixed up a guest room always ready with pajamas in one cupboard and nighties in another.

Dorothy Sebastian keeps a good-looking eye on the weather, and shows why scrubbing the deck has become a popular pastime on this ship.

"That's because I lost so much sleep driving guests home in the evening!" Dick told us. They have their menage at Toluca Lake, twelve miles from Hollywood.

Gobs of Fun

WILLIAM HAINES, who learned to play football, baseball and other sports for his pictures, is now learning to keep his mouth open while guns roar. He's busy these days, firing a cannon on a destroyer, in his new picture, The Gob.

"You have to keep your mouth open when you fire," he says, "so the explosion won't hurt your ears."

Accents Beguiled

JESSE LASKY called Baclanova in recently and demanded that she fire her English instructor. Baclanova fans have written that they are entranced by her accent. Instead of being a drawback, it is proving one of her greatest assets. Lasky has also instructed Maurice Chevalier to safeguard his speech and keep it unadulterated by American influences that surround him.

She Faw Down

LOUISE FAZENDA dressed herself up in her newest ensemble and drove out to the old Vitagraph Studio to call on friends who were working on one of the stages there. The company were sunning themselves outside as she drove grandly up. Louise stepped out of her car and into a manhole—disappearing completely!

Every Lydell Helps

SPEAKING about the romance between Lydell Peck the wealthy young San Franciscan, and Janet Gaynor, it seems that young Peck was halted in traffic while driving his car on one of San Francisco's main streets.

A newspaper woman was halted alongside of him and being quick on the trigger she took advantage of the momentary lull to yell at Peck:

"Is it true you are going to marry Janet Gaynor?"

The traffic bell sounded just then and as both cars moved forward Peck answered the girl:

"I may!"

The next day the girl crashed the front page of her paper with a story which told that the young couple were to be married in May.

Voice Insurance

IT WON'T do for Laura La Plante to attend many ball games or prize fights. Not if she cheers, at any rate. Universal has just insured her voice for $200,000; they are preserving a movietone test of her voice "as is" so that in case of injury, the test would show to what degree her voice had changed.

Joan Crawford and Doug Fairbanks, Jr., Hollywood's popular lovers, also were at The Broadway Melody opening.

Mary Brian goes in training with the punch pillows for her role in The Man I Love, a story of the prize ring

Just the Place for Spoons

THE mess hall, pardon me — the commissary — at M-G-M is becoming a popular place for spooning. Lupe Velez and Gary Cooper, Joan Crawford and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Vilma Banky and Rod La Rocque, have all been working there in pictures and advertising their deep affection by public noon-time demonstrations. Well, these folk are used to performing for their public. We can't blame them for a few luncheon-time kisses and caresses.

Modesty is the Vest Policy

MODESTY, like a mantle, is cloaking Lupe Velez—to a certain extent—and all that Hollywood can suspect is that love and Gary Cooper are, in their own quiet ways, working wonders.

The other day, for instance, Lon Chaney in a paternal manner put his hands on Lupe's shoulders. She was wearing a flimsy trifle for a scene in Where East Is East. Lupe turned abruptly.

"Meestair Chan-ey, do not do that. I moost ask you to keep your hands off my personal appearance."

Hollywood's Four Hundred

ONE thousand guests were invited to the Ruth Roland-Ben Bard wedding which took place on a day dedicated to lovers, so it remains for one Hollywood wisecracker to titter forth with, "Yes, I am one of the Four Hundred . . . one of the four hundred who was not invited to the tying."

Billie Dove and Gwen Lee are twins for the day dressed in these novel outing costumes for a day at the beach.

Merrily She Rolls Along

BETTY COMPSON is heralded as one of the wealthiest women in pictures. No wonder! This girl has an eye for business. She has two Rolls-Royces—one of which she rents out for pictures. Last year it netted her nine thousand dollars. A hundred dollars a day for regular work and more for special action! And there's scarcely a day when it isn't being used.

Hide and Sneak

YES, these stars do really try to have one place where they can go into seclusion. More and more of them are buying camp sites, ranches, or what have you —where the public and fan writers cannot reach them.

Wallace Beery has a hideaway cabin on Silver Lake, high up in the Nevadas.

Merna Kennedy and Glenn Tryon are trying out a few new steps between the scenes of Broadway.

Clara Bow has a cottage at Malibou beach reached only by special invitation.

Harold Lloyd has eighty acres in the Santa Monica mountains with a mere shack upon it. He prides himself that no one can reach him without the minutest instructions.

Evelyn Brent has a hide-out in Kern county which she discovered on a location trip three years ago.

John Barrymore uses his yacht and his honeymoon trip in Mexican waters was uncharted.

Sweden's Greta Attractions

GRETA GARBO seems to have knocked her usually phlegmatic home-town for a row of Swedish anchovies.

In a cartoon in a Stockholm paper, street cars were depicted running wildly through the sides of buildings, skyscrapers bending over and the whole pop-eyed population in hysterics as the imperturbable Garbo strolls down the avenue. It was captioned.

"Greta passes by!"

Joyce Murray is marking the toe—the toe which helped her make the leap to fame. She is filmdom's newest find.

What Was the Name?

MARIE PREVOST was working at the Columbia studios. One day she was late for work. A whole fifteen minutes. The assistant director felt it was his duty to do the reprimanding.

"Miss Prevost, when we give a nine o'clock call that don't mean nine-fifteen!"

"I've never met you," said Miss Prevost, "and I never talk to men whom I've never met."

Ways and Means

IT WAS the lunch hour and the long counter at one of the eateries hard by the Fox Studios had every seat occupied.

A pair of late arrivals were Joe Egli, casting director at Fox, and Eddie Grainger.

"Let's go some place else," suggested Grainger.

"I'll get a pair of seats in just a minute," argued Egli.

He whispered something in Grainger's ear, Grainger nodded that he understood, and then in a loud voice, Grainger said:

"Did Jack Ford get those three blond girls?"

"No," said Egli, "my assistant, Dave Todd, is searching everywhere for four blonds."

In less than two minutes there were four vacant seats previously occupied by four extra girls—blonds.

Valentino's Hidden

Rudolph Valentino, the greatest lover the screen has ever known, in his role as The Sheik, which made him beloved of women the world over.

Loves Revealed!

Some of the great lover's most touching affairs revealed for the first time by an anonymous friend of the dead actor in an effort to explain the real Valentino and his life long quest.

THE complete story of the loves of Rudolph Valentino will probably never be told.

He was, so to speak, always in love. Valentino himself could hardly have said where one love left off and another began. As the warmth of the sun's rays caress and envelop each tender flower, so with Valentino's affections.

Since his death, however, fact has emerged from rumor. New loves have been revealed and new light cast on those loves which have been the talk of the world with eager gossipers making up in fancy for deficiencies of fact.

Many are the women who could truthfully say that they were loved by Valentino. Not all of them are known. Not all of them will ever be known. Yet with all of them the statement could be only an idle boast, for Valentino's life was a tragic quest for the perfect love which he never found.

Near the end of his life he confided in an old Italian woman that his quest had been hopeless, that he had never found his ideal . . . the devotion of a beloved wife who would bear him children and give him a home.

Having known but little of women in his youth, and endowed with an almost abject reverence for femininity, Valentino always returned the slightest appreciation shown him with a deep, if transitory, affection.

COMING as a boy to a country famous for luscious and fascinating women, Valentino appears to have lost no time. He fell in love coming over on the boat, with a young American girl, a dancer. Her name was Marion Hennion. He does not appear to have made much impression upon her heart; but she used up the spare time between deck tennis and shuffle board teaching him to dance, thus laying the foundation for the greatest of all screen careers.

Jean Acker, Valentino's first wife, who was also one of his greatest loves.

Shortly after his arrival in New York, Valentino was plunged into the maelstrom of a hectic affair which, although it left a lasting imprint of unhappiness on his life, remained enshrined in his heart as one of his closest approaches to elusive perfection. Her name was Bianca. Valentino met her in a cabaret where he had obtained a job as a dancer.

Rudolph, with Natacha Rambova, his second wife, on a trip to Europe. It was her name that he mentioned most frequently on his deathbed.

She was a South American—cultured, well educated, charming. Whether or not she was moved by the ardent Italian boy, it wasn't for long. She married a famous athlete, Jack Desaulles. Their marriage was very unhappy and she appealed to Rudolph to help her win a divorce.

His chivalry resulted in one of the most dismal chapters of Valentino's life. The enraged husband had the house where Rudolph lived raided by the police. He was arrested on a groundless charge. When freed, he was refused admission to his club and was cut—and to the heart—by many of his best friends.

That was why he turned to Hollywood—the Hollywood that was to make his fortune.

After he left, the lovely Bianca—driven to desperation—shot Jack Desaulles; was absolved by the jury and went abroad to live. In time she married a worthy gentleman and presumably lived happily forever after. On his last visit abroad, Valentino tried to telephone to her; but she gently hung up the receiver of the phone. Later he entrusted to a friend a message to her in South America; but the message was never answered.

Valentino always referred reverently to this affair as "the purest love of my life."

Before he got into the films, he spent a good many hungry days in Hollywood, looking for dancing engagements or anything else that would mean a square meal.

During these days he worshiped from afar the scintillating stars of the screen. He would appear at Gloria Swanson's house with armfuls of flowers, it is said, but never gained an audience with her. He fell in love with the golden head of Mary Miles Minter and carried on a

Society in Cinemaland

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY
SCREEN SECRETS' SOCIETY EDITOR

A group of Hollywood celebrities at a luncheon given by Mrs. W. H. Fawcett and Mrs. Roscoe Fawcett at the Montmartre. Those in the picture are: (Last row) Pat Rooney III, Helen Starr, Doris Dawson, Anne Alvarado, Mrs. Finis Fox, Sharon Lynn, Jetta Goudal, Claire Windsor, Bebe Daniels, Polly Young, Helen Twelvetrees, Sally Blane, Mrs. Hammond Beall, Belle Bennett, Jackie Saunders, Priscilla Dean, Daphne Marquette, Mrs. A. J. Rough. (Second row) Camilla Horn, Grace Simpson, Capt. Roscoe Fawcett, Lily Damita, Rita Carewe, Jane Winton, Mrs. W. H. Fawcett. (On floor) Mrs. Roscoe Fawcett, Billy Joy, Doris Arbuckle, Ona Brown, W. H. Fawcett, Mrs. Geo. Stewart, Mrs. De Tarr, and LeRoy Mason.

TWO hours before the celebrities arrived for the first annual Actors' Equity Ball and midnight revue, the long corridors of the Biltmore Hotel were packed with people waiting to glimpse their favorites.

The ball was a huge success. Taylor Holmes acted as master of ceremonies during the midnight follies, and members of the various committees were Lionel Barrymore, Warner Baxter, Reginald Denny, Conrad Nagel, James Gleason, Robert Armstrong, George Fawcett, Ben Lyon, Lois Wilson, May McAvoy and Belle Bennett.

Marion Davies, representing the Spirit of Equity, was trundled out in a large gold frame and declared it was her most embarrassing moment as she expected momentarily to flop out of the frame. Applause greeted John Boles' rendition of the Equity song.

Among those who reserved boxes were Estelle Taylor, Irene Rich, Louise Dresser, Mary Duncan, Ronald Colman, Ernest Torrence and Frank Keenan.

JACK GILBERT made his debut as master of ceremonies at the premiere of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's The Broadway Melody at the Chinese Theatre. Jack's snappy "Let me present Bessie Love" or Harry Beaumont or Charles King made an instantaneous hit.

It was Bessie Love's big night. Prolonged and sustained applause was accorded little Bessie when Jack brought her on the stage. A touching scene occurred in the lobby afterwards when Blanche Sweet and Carmel Myers wept for sheer joy as they hugged Bessie. The three actresses were chums at the old Fine Arts Studio with D. W. Griffith and have remained friends ever since. Utterly oblivious of the throngs around them, the tears fell as Bessie sobbed: "You girls being so happy over my success means more to me than anything else!"

Lovely Anita Page, who also scored a hit, was accompanied by her beaming parents and Harry Crocker. Charles King was host to a group.

Virginia Cherrill was escorted by Jack Gilbert. Lily Damita was a member of Max Reinhardt's party. Lupe Velez and Gary Cooper, who are staging a "Joan and Doug," were prominent during the intermission (Gary looks as if a puff of wind would blow him away). Quiet Fay Wray and her devoted spouse. Dorothy Dwan and Matty Kemp. Ruth Roland and Ben Bard. The James Gleasons and Robert Armstrongs. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Jackson chaperoning a crowd of the younger set—their daughter, Ethel, wide-eyed Nancy Drexel, Billy Bakewell, John Darrow, Cecil Revey and Charles Eaton.

ONE of the successful affairs of the winter was the luncheon given recently at the Montmartre by Mrs. William Fawcett and Mrs. Roscoe Fawcett in honor of Mrs. Ona Wilson Brown. The affair, which was held in the French room of the cafe, is the first of a series of parties planned in compliment to Mrs. Brown who is leaving for Europe soon. An atmosphere of spring was created in the floral decorations of jonquils, narcissus and maidenhair fern, which formed a centerpiece of the U-shaped table, the decorations being repeated in garlands of the same flowers arranged at each end. Bidden were: Mesdames Charles Kenyon (Jane Winton), Hal Willis (Louise Fazenda), Don Alvarado, Finis Fox, J. Ward Cohen (Jacqueline Saunders), William Mann (Daphne Marquette), Doris Dean Arbuckle, Leroy Mason (Rita Carewe), Leslie Arnold (Priscilla Dean), Fred Windemere (Belle Bennett), Irvin Willat (Billie Dove), John McCormick (Colleen Moore), William Seiter (Laura La Plante), Douglas Fairbanks (Mary Pickford), Harry Hammond Beall; Misses Claire Windsor, Mary Brian, Lily Damita, Camilla Horn, Grace Kingsley, Helen Twelvetrees, Loretta Young, Sally Blane, Sharon Lynn, Jetta Goudal, Bebe Daniels, Phyllis Haver, Louella Parsons, Marion Davies and Helen Starr.

PRISCILLA DEAN was as excited as a child at her first birthday party on the occasion of the housewarming given her by Peggy Hamilton. Priscilla, as you know, recently married Leslie Arnold, naval aviator, and the charming apartment on North Vine Street is their first real home since their marriage.

Peggy Hamilton is an accomplished hostess. While waiting for the rest of the hundred invited guests to arrive, she set us all to puzzling out a clever auto game. Ruth Clifford distinguished herself by burlesquing her answers. Doris Dean Arbuckle and Mary Ford won the prizes while Louise Fazenda mournfully declared that any questionnaire made her realize that she properly belonged in a home for half-wits as she could never answer more than one-tenth of the questions.

Three singers from the concert stage flooded Priscilla's living-room with beautiful song. Little Sharon Lynn's eyes shone. "I'm so thrilled," she whispered, "I just discovered that I have a voice. I sing in Fox's new Follies and the director said that my voice was quite remarkable so now I'm having it cultivated."

After a delicious tea, we all sat in a circle around Priscilla while she opened her house-warming gifts. Her delighted shrieks of appreciation warmed the hearts of the givers; never once did she run out of enthusiasm. The chief present was a full set of Titian ware from a group of her closest friends. Many of them gave individual gifts.

Vera Reynolds, whose marriage to Bob Ellis in 1926, was just announced, agreed with Pauline Starke that secret marriages weren't so good after all. Lila Lee told her not to think another thing about it—she'd give a shower for Vera this very month.

Others who enjoyed Miss Hamilton's hospitality were: Laura La Plante, Evelyn Brent, Leatrice Joy, Betty Compson, Margaret Livingston, Kathlyn Williams, Lois Wilson, Phyllis Haver, Jackie Saunders, Ruth Taylor, Grace Gordon and Mary McAllister.

MISS EDITH RYAN entertained a few of her many friends at her home this month. Mrs. Dorothy Reid and Walter Lang, one of filmland's perennially engaged couples; genial Harry Gribbon who said his wife had been so long publicised as an excellent cook that even he had come to believe it; E. Mason Hopper, popular director, who knows he's a good cook; Dale Fuller with absorbing tales of her orange and walnut groves; Louise Fazenda carefully counting her calories, and Mr. and Mrs. George Fawcett.

A SUCCESSION of birthday parties formed a bright chain of gaieties. There was the surprise affair planned by Mrs. Fred Niblo (Enid Bennett) in honor of her consort. Afternoon tennis was followed by an informal buffet supper with bridge and billiards forming the evening's entertainment.

The Niblos' many friends gathered to do the popular director honor—Messrs. and Mesdames Irving Thalberg (Norma Shearer), Walter Morosco (Corinne Griffith), Conrad Nagel, Antonio Moreno, Louis B. Mayer, with their daughters; Harry Rapf and Sydney Franklin; Misses Lois Wilson and Catherine Bennett; Messrs. Ronald Colman, Alec Bennett and Fred Niblo, Jr.

The Eugene and John Fords, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sollars, Bebe Daniels and Dorothy Dwan, formed a select group to surprise Tom Mix on his natal anniversary. The birthday cake they brought bore less than forty candles and in its center rode a cowboy made of caramel on a chocolate pony.

Spring Style

Nancy Carroll presents something very nice in undies. Just a simple creation of lace over satin.

Doris Dawson has chosen for every-day-wear this lovely dress of three-quarter-length foulard piped in white.

SPRINGTIME . . . warm sun . . . blue skies . . . all nature decked out in new gowns . . . and thousands of SCREEN SECRETS readers lamenting, "But I haven't a thing to wear!" The winter furs and heavy wools must be laid away; for it is time to plan the summertime outfits you want to buy or make.

The outstanding characteristic of the new French models is their essential femininity. Gone are the extremely boyish sports outfits and the severe tailleurs. Gowns are more formal and less sporty than before, while tailoring in its true sense has definitely returned. Clothes this season must be decorative, chic, of beautiful, soft material, luscious shades, and charmingly trimmed in fine lace, perky bows, or sparkling rhinestone ornaments.

Fortunately, the simplicity of the newest costumes makes it possible for the girl who is even the least bit clever with the needle to make her complete spring wardrobe with the help of any reliable pattern and, perhaps, a willing friend to aid in those little necessary adjustments in the fitting.

Paris and Hollywood have both enthusiastically chosen the three-piece ensemble as the most practical and flattering outfit of the season. Of the new sheer woolens or light-weight tweed mixtures, or of the still-very-good jersey, it is the ideal costume for "from nine to five." The jacket, which may be removed, gives that extra warmth that is so necessary in the early morning or evening. This jacket may be of hip length, or of the now popular three-quarter length—whichever you prefer. Many of the most attractive ensembles display the new three-color combinations—for example, a navy suit trimmed with bands of beige and red, or a costume composed of three shades of green or blue. If your trimming is placed diagonally, you will be right up-to-the minute; for zigzags, tucks, and all appliqued bands are smartest when following this new line. Pleats, particularly small ones, are even more popular than before; while many of the newest skirts have a fold of goods falling from the side to several inches below the hemline.

SPEAKING of hems, in spite of all efforts to lengthen skirts, they remain short—in spots. Evening gowns are perhaps longer than ever, while many of the most delightful new models display little trains! Sometimes these are really only a trailing end of ribbon from the swanky big bow at the hip, or a casual drape. The bow effect is particularly smart for the young girl who does not want to look sophisticated, yet wants to cater to the newest fashion note. Most of the long bouffant skirts are transparent from the knees down—which is the one certain way of eating your cake and having it! The long-in-back line continues to be a favorite, not only for strictly formal wear, but on all costumes except the sport. Those of you who want to remodel last-summer's dance frock might give the skirt a quarter turn so that the long part is at the side. Yes, this is quite the latest style! Many skirts are up to the knee on one side, but touch the floor on the other! Incidentally, the bouffant skirts are even wider than those of previous seasons, if you can imagine such a thing!

The most eccentric novelty in the new styles is the tuck-in blouse. If you want to be as smartly dressed as your favorite movie star, don't wear a "hippy" slip-on!

Love Lingo of

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Joan Crawford, two hearts that drink as one.

Doug, Jr., and Joan Crawford are the eavesdroppers' despair with their own private language, but here's how it's done—translate for yourself!

By RUTH M. TILDESLEY

WHOPAT wopill yopou hopave, Roputh? Opi mopust opeat lopight opand Dodo mopust hopave hopash," said Joan Crawford, as she slipped into the seat beside mine in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's studio cafe.

"Dopid yopou sopay hopash, doparloping?" murmured her ever-faithful swain, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., bending over her for one of these fade-out osculations before seating himself. "Opi lopove yopou."

Just like that. As clear as mud.

The much publicized lovers beamed upon me and burst forth again with a torrent of this strange jargon. No one else on the sun porch of the cafe turned a head—the directors around the long table continued to shake dice to determine which should pay for lunch and the small groups of actors and writers went on with the business of eating or ordering. Only the waitress smiled and whispered to me, "Ain't love grand?"

"Shopall wop-e topell hop-er whopat wop-e sopaid, Dodo?" queried Joan, cuddling his hand in hers.

Doug's reply was another long kiss which ceased only at the arrival of the waitress with our orders.

For the next few minutes, Joan was maternally busy preparing her "baby's" food. "Mamma junk it for baby?" she murmured lovingly, as she deftly removed Doug's chicken and potato hash from the service dish to his plate and poured his glass of certified milk. "Opi lopove yopou," yearned Doug.

NO THEY hadn't gone mad. They were merely engaging in their famous love language.

From time immemorial lovers have longed to be alone. Months ago when Joan and Dougie fell into Cupid's trap, they experienced this special need. Motion picture sets are crowded places at best and everyone, from director to the lowliest prop boy seemed all eyes and ears when the dazzled young lover slipped in for a few words with his adored one.

Worn out with constant whispering, exhausted from weeks of searching for secluded nooks, the harried sweethearts decided that something had to be done about it. They would have to learn to say "I love you" without being forced to listen to the nearest cameraman's foolish snicker or see the significant smiles of their fellow actors.

So they put their loving heads together and evolved the language of "op." The principle of it being the use of Joan and Doug, Jr.

Joan Crawford and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., present the most important words in their private love language ("I love you"); below are others, with translations.

Opi lopong topo kopiss yopou, doparloping. (I long to kiss you, darling.)

Dopid yopou sopay hopash? (Did you say hash?)

Shopall wope topell hoper whopat wope sopaid, Dodo? (Shall we tell her what we said, Dodo?)

Opi wopill bope bopack opin opa mopinopute. (I will be back in a minute.)

"op" in every pronounced syllable with a few natural exceptions. Thus: "I long to kiss you, darling," was completely hidden behind the voluminous "Opi lopong topo kopiss yopou, doparopling," and they could casually say, "Opi lopove yopou" (I love you) without causing the usual sly chuckles.

"Of course at first we had to speak it very, very slowly to be able to understand one another," explained Doug, earnestly. "Didn't we, mamma?"

"Yes, baby," Joan stopped toying with her pineapple salad and they melted into each other's arms . . . .

Calmly, she smoothed her ruffled hair and patted on fresh make-up.

"We had to study awfully hard but it was worth it. Now nobody can understand us!" she announced, triumphantly, her blue eyes sparkling. "Adrian, the costume designer, did manage to discover the root of the language but he can join in only when we speak slowly."

"Not that we care—it doesn't matter who knows it now!" put in Doug, taking the mayonnaise dressing away from his beloved with a firm, "No, no, sweetheart, it makes you thin!"

Joan looked up at him, poutingly, with a child's hurt eyes.

"A cigarette, then!" she demanded.

Young Doug assumed a grown-up air and consulted his wrist watch. "All right. Just one. But no more for two hours."

Carefully he selected a cigarette from an onyx and platinum case with its inscription, "My Sweetheart, I love you. Joan." beneath her tinted likeness (Joan's latest gift).

"Joan's lost seven or eight pounds lately and it just won't do," worried Doug. "She has so much dancing to do in this Our Modern Maidens. It's her first starring picture and it's our first together, too. I wish she'd eat more!"

The Mystery of the

The gruesome murder of Eddie Diggins in a setting of hilarious gaiety is described as the second of a series of famous Hollywood murder mysteries.

By HARRY CARR

THE lights went off.

Sounds of scuffling feet.

A woman's scream in the thick darkness.

The lights flashed on again.

There lay Eddie Diggins. He was bleeding to death. On the left side of his dress shirt was a ragged hole edged with red. From this little hole the blood was pumping with a soft horrible regularity—with a little plop, plop, plop sound as it pumped.

It was a final irony that he was dying in the arms of a man whose business in life was to make the world scream with laughter. He was dying in the arms of Lloyd Hamilton.

They begged him to speak; to tell what had happened to him. But he only moaned and the light faded out of his eyes. And so to this day, no one knows to a certainty who killed Eddie Diggins—or why. Only here and there have come vague hints. As, for instance, that woman's voice over the telephone. . .

It remains and probably always will remain one of Hollywood's strangest murder mysteries.

EVERYBODY in Hollywood knew Eddie. Yet no one really knew him. As is the way of Hollywood—a city of glaring publicity—yet a city of mysteries.

Lloyd Hamilton, jovial comedian who faded from the screen shortly after the Diggins tragedy and is just now staging a comeback.

Eddie Diggins, the murdered actor, with Bull Montana, famous heavy. The photo was taken shortly before Diggins met his death under circumstances which have baffled Los Angeles police.

Eddie's real name was Edward Ayer Diggins. He was born in San Francisco about twenty-four years ago. He was one of those little Irish tads born "south of the slot," in the Mission district.

That district breeds prize fighters as a country road breeds jimson weeds. Eddie Hanlon, Abe Attel, Jimmie Britt, Jim Corbett and a hundred more famous boxers were all reared in the same rough-and-ready school that produced Eddie Diggins.

If you didn't know how to fight south-of-the-slot, you spent most of your time hiding in the cellar and going home from school on a dead run. Eddie didn't hide in the cellar and he went home from school with the leisurely grandeur of the champion of the neighborhood. As naturally as little boys in Pittsburg grow up to be puddlers in the steel mills, so it was a matter of course that Eddie should become a fighter.

He started out at first as an amateur boxer in the Olympic Club—where so many champions have started. His fists were so talented in those bouts that he turned professional.

It wasn't blood lust that drove him to fighting for money. Eddie wanted to make money. He wanted to be married.

HIS school days were spent in a Mission school run by the Catholic fathers. Near by was a convent school. There was a little shy Irish girl who used to find Eddie waiting on the corner when school let out; and they would walk shyly home together. Eddie was a smart, clever, wisecracking boy with a true Irish wit; but he was tongue-tied when he talked to girls.

Eddie—and this is the only real clue to the murder mystery—was an old-fashioned boy—in spite of his wisecracking and his jazz dancing. His romantic Irish ancestors had left him with a chivalry that belonged to the old days of knighthood rather than to the days of girls with short skirts and cigarettes. One of his characteristics was his almost awe-stricken respect for women. Perhaps he inherited that from his Irish grandfathers who were in California in the old 'Forty-nine days when men would ride for days—to stand hat in hand—just to look at a woman.

Anyhow, if you wanted to start a fight, all you had to do was to make some smutty remark about a girl in Eddie's presence. The next you knew, the world began sailing around; you heard the birdies singing; and you finally came out of it to hear Eddie saying as he lifted you up: "Feel better, old man? Sorry I had to clip you. Somehow I just can't stand it to hear a fellow talk about a girl."

EDDIE did pretty well in his early fights. The money rolled in very nicely. One day he and the Irish girl walked up to the altar together. Eddie looking at her as though she were sugar likely to melt away at any moment. It just didn't seem reasonable to him that any young lady could be so awful sweet and last.

He might have lived to be a great ring fighter if something hadn't happened to him.

One of his ring engagements carried him to Los Angeles. There the wonderful portals of Hollywood opened to him. He got acquainted with a great many screen people. They liked him for his shy, witty, almost bashful Irish ways. They suggested to him that he tackle Hollywood himself.

The little Irish bride leaped at the idea. She didn't like prize fighting. Her honest little Irish heart never quite got over being shocked. Also she didn't enjoy sitting at home on fight nights, praying and twisting her handkerchief while somebody in a ring down town was trying to SCREEN SECRETS' greatest contest is in full swing—offering many liberal cash prizes for competition in a fascinating game! And it's all about the stars you love so well—sharpen your wits and scissors!

FUN, information about your favorite stars, and money—that's what this great contest offers! Simple, fascinating, and rich in rewards.

The first puzzle picture, reprinted at the bottom of the opposite page, appeared in the April issue of SCREEN SECRETS; the second puzzle picture appears (top half of opposite page) in this issue, and the issues of June and July will contain the third and fourth puzzle pictures, respectively.

The object of this contest is to cut out the puzzles as they appear, fitting the pieces together and naming the stars shown in each assembled picture; then to write a brief biography of not over one hundred words on one player from each group—four biographies in all. The prizes will be awarded to those who send in to SCREEN SECRETS Magazine the four correctly assembled puzzle pictures and names of the stars, in the neatest arrangement, with the most interesting brief histories of four of the players.

For best results, first paste the puzzle on stiff paper, just as it appears in the magazine. Then carefully cut out the pieces, put them together so as to reconstruct the original picture, write the names of the stars underneath the picture, and save this part of your entry until the last puzzle has been published. After all four puzzle pictures have been assembled you will be ready to write the four brief biographies.

For aid in preparing these biographies, be sure to consult the life histories of famous film players given in the department "Who's Who in Filmland," a feature of SCREEN SECRETS that you will want to use in this contest and then save for your scrapbook.

Hold all puzzle pictures and biographies until the publication of the puzzle picture in the July issue of SCREEN SECRETS; when you have completed your preparation of your entry according to the rules given below, send it in by first-class mail, prepaid, so that it reaches the Contest Editor no later than July 15, 1929. One hundred and ten people will win cash prizes—and will have had an enjoyable fascinating time arranging their entries and securing information about their favorite film stars. Are you going to be one of them? A little effort on your part now, will place you in the competition for rewards. All the World's in Love with Love

Bessie Love's present overwhelming success is the climax of countless movie ups and downs—and here's what they taught her.

Bessie Love, whose wistful appeal has at last won the reward it deserves.

By HARRY CARR

BESSIE LOVE must sneak up to her stocking on Christmas morning with a trembling heart. She never knows whether Santa Claus has left her a Rolls-Royce or a poison pill.

I have never known any girl in Hollywood who has had so many ups and downs. She has been "discovered" more times and discarded more times than patent "form reducers." Bessie Love is like flappers' skirts. She seesaws up and down with every fashion.

And the irony of it is that she is the one real trouper in Hollywood who can be absolutely relied upon to deliver a tiptop performance—whether as a weeping, deserted young mother—or the innocent daughter of the house—or a song-and-dance girl—doing both the song and the dance.

The latest market quotation shows Bessie at the top of the heap again. They gave her a little part in Broadway Melody, the talkie put out by M-G-M, and, as usual, she proceeded to steal the picture.

She and I had a long talk the other day in the studio lunch room. It was a good place; it had an atmosphere of success. Frances Marion sat at a near-by table with a young musical composer who has made a hit in the talkies. Norma Shearer, gowned as a grand lady of a past age, swept in and sat down close at hand. Ramon Novarro was lunching with a friend. Cecil De Mille was consulting his scenario writer over in a corner. Bessie and I were among the face cards.

She looked, across the table, like a little girl—just as when I had first known her.

When I first knew her, she was a little girl in high school. Her name then was Juanita Horton. She was "nice people." Her father was a physician—a man of charm and education.

In the high school, she had a pal from whom she was inseparable. She was the daughter of a Jewish rabbi. Her name was Carmel Myers.

These two little girls took it into their heads to become actresses. And between the two of them, they managed to stumble more and climb more than any other two girls in Hollywood. Bessie and Carmel were both discoveries of D. W. Griffith.

Mary Pickford had just walked out on Griffith's company because he wouldn't pay her the enormous salary she wanted; I think it was $500 a week.

Griffith decided to make another Mary Pickford out of the little blond one with the big wide, blue eyes. Only Juanita Horton didn't sound like a name to him. "Your name," he said, "will be Bessie Love from now on."

It was a cruel test—to ask her to be Mary Pickford. It would have been easier if he had asked her to be Lon Chaney or Wally Beery or Tom Mix. But, unlike the others, Bessie got away with it.

SHE made a hit as Douglas Fairbanks' leading lady in one of his first pictures. It doesn't do any girl much good to make a hit as Doug's leading lady. He changes them too fast. She knocked a home run; and then found herself cast out upon a cold and unfeeling world. Since then she has been a soldier of fortune.

She encountered a very peculiar whim of fate. It was her luck to do wonderful and unforgettable scenes in pictures that failed. She did one of the finest pieces of acting in the entire history of the screen in a picture called The Eternal Three—directed by Mickie Neilan. It was the scene at the door—where a little girl comes home from her first adventure. And you know without a word the tragic thing that has happened to her. There is to her credit another scene of pure genius in a picture made by Thomas H. Ince. It slipped so quickly into obscurity that I do not even remember the name of the picture. In this one she played the part of a deserted young mother.

THEN the next thing you would hear of Bessie was that she was looking for work and not finding it; having the torture of seeing other girls come up from extras and pass her—knowing that they had not a gleam of her talent or ability. I asked Bessie what she learned from all this.

"A lot," she said, without a shade of bitterness.

"As—for instance . . . ."

"As, for instance, that about two-thirds of success in life consists of getting the breaks. And that the breaks do not come until they get ready to come. You can't claw them down. Sometimes the harder you try, the more you postpone the day when the breaks come your way."

Bebe and Ben embarking on one of their frequent sky rides at Caddo Field.

Why We Are

Ben Lyon is the first man I have known who has given me companionship instead of jealousy—and that's just one of the reasons why I am going to marry him—

Bebe Daniels

Bebe Daniels began by playing a practical joke on Ben Lyon and ended by falling deeply in love with him.

IT SEEMS all very strange to diagnose my love for Ben Lyon. There is something about love, to me, that should be kept sweetly sheltered.

I could not imagine myself, as in a laboratory, using Ben as a clinical example, saying, "Gentlemen and ladies, please note the attributes which make this specimen quite perfect—the strength of character—the will."

I have never before felt that I could trade my independence for love, because that is what every other man I have ever known has demanded of me. My career has always meant too much to me. Almost more than love, itself. But here is a man who understands, so perfectly, that independence to me is as much a part of life as love itself. He applauds my independence—and gives me his adoration.

This may sound silly, what I am about to say. But never in my life have I felt so utterly contented, blissful. I am tranquil, and as placid as a Florentine madonna. Always before when my heart has been entangled, I have been nervous, wretched, my emotions frayed and jagged. I have been tortured on the rack of jealousy. Not my own, but senseless male jealousy.

I met him in New York about four years ago, very casually, at a party. Frankly, I thought he was rather conceited. Perhaps I thought he was a bit smug. I can understand now, how wrong I was. I met him very casually and am glad we did not fall in love then. Four years ago I could not have appreciated him as I do now. I have met and had friendships with many men since that time and it is by comparison that I realize how fine Ben is.

Always before I have looked for frankness and good-fellowship and truth. And found jealousy.

FOR instance, there was a man in New York who called me at three and four in the morning, when I was due at the studio at seven, just to see if I was home. He called my dressing room every day at twelve, too. If I had not come in from the set, if I was out of the dressing room for a moment, he was furious. He was sure that I was in love with the leading man. I got so I ran from the set to wait for the ring of the telephone. I ate my luncheon in my room, never venturing forth, waiting, every moment, for that metallic ring.

You can see that I would not have appreciated Ben if I had known him then. Today, if I promise him I will call him at twelve, and twelve-thirty arrives and I am not near a 'phone, I don't get faint with anticipation at how furious he will be. I know he will understand.

Four years ago I would have looked upon his saneness as disinterest.

Going to Marry

Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon as they arrived for a recent premiere.

Bebe Daniels thinks like a man although she has all the grace and charm of a woman—she understands and sympathizes with all my hobbies—but don't get me started—

Ben Lyon

When Ben Lyon started doing loop-the-loops in his plane and Bebe didn't squeal, he knew she was the girl for him.

THERE are times when I wish I could strum a lute, or at least a guitar. This is one of them. Then, at least, I could grow lyric about Bebe. As it is I am tied to the printed page; bound, at the left, by cold white paper, at the right, by bold black type.

In the first place, I am glad that this is no first love on either Bebe's part or mine. We have both been in love before, severally. We are not recruits at the game, and for that reason our love will last a great deal longer.

Our previous associations have made us appreciate each other more—have drawn us closer together, by a common bond of knowledge that is stronger than any passion. And by the same bond we do not find it necessary to discuss any events that have gone before.

I have never known a girl quite like Bebe. All the women I have known have been fragile—so feminine. An admirable trait. But here is a girl who thinks like a man and has all the grace and charm of a woman. They tell me that at the studio she was writer-actress-everything on her pictures. She made suggestions to the director which were accepted. And made them in such a way as not to arouse antagonism. It takes nothing short of genius to do that.

Bebe is not only a great artist in her work. She is also a marvelous business woman and I know will be an inspiration and help to me in my work. She will be more than a wife—infinitely more. She will be a helpmate and a companion, one who will advise and aid me, and whose counsel will be friendly, not marked with authoritativeness. Above all it will be tempered with Bebe's superb humanness.

I HAVE never known a girl quite like her—never known a girl who was so truly and deeply loved by her friends. Nor who had so many sincerely devoted friends. All of Hollywood is unanimous in the sincerity of its friendship, its admiration, for Bebe.

No place where I go do I hear anything but the warmest, most heartfelt comments on the girl I am to marry. I hear her spoken of in glowing terms on every side. By players and producers and writers. It fills me with great pride and happiness to think that my opinion has been so well substantiated. After all a man gets a mighty good feeling in knowing that his judgment is so highly complimented.

Bebe, too, is practical, and so am I. My interest in sports is as great as hers. She is as distinctly interested in aviation as I am. I can talk to her about a loop and she won't think I'm referring to a roller coaster. She knows the uncertainty of aviation and its hazards and never once has she said "Be careful, Ben!"

I took her for a flight the other day. It was the first time I had taken Bebe up, although I have used my U. S. Government pilot's license on other occasions. There was only one parachute on the ship. Of course, I wouldn't

Lily Discovers

Lily Damita, in a curve-revealing bathing suit as sprightly as is the lovely foreign star herself, could hardly be blamed for thinking she was the only pebble on the beach.

America

Lily Damita prefers big city life to the Hollywood she finds too small, but is determined to stay and win success in spite of all obstacles.

By HELEN STARR

ALL THE foreigners here—they are not so happy." Lily Damita was grave. In fact, almost lachrymose as she accounted for this state of soul. "Hollywood is so lee-dle!"

And so, when Sammy Goldwyn, her boss, thought America should see Lily in person, and proposed a personal appearance tour of the east, Lily exuberated. Like a blithesome canary she chirruped.

"New York! A beeg town! Where it is near the ships. Boats and boats from Europe every day!"

So they put a guard over Lily. A lady sentry. The country's maritime commerce did not look so good to Sammy.

"They tell me she be secretary," relates Lily. "But she is up in the morning when I take shower—puts me to bed, turns out light—always with me, even to parties."

No impulses for Lily. Couldn't indulge a moment's chance whim to run for some wharf and go home to Europe. Sammy is not only a good showman but appears to be an astute psychic.

"Now I will have some fun pretty soon," confides Lily, lambent gold-brown eyes sparkling with mischief. "I will go to San Francisco where there are more big boats and stand on the piers and frighten Mr. Goldwyn."

It is already some months since Lily arrived in this country. Samuel Goldwyn, the producer, saw her dancing in the cafes of Paris and was immediately struck by her gorgeous beauty. He placed her under contract and brought her to this country.

Lily was the toast of the boulevards, the favored dancer of all Paris, the object of admiration of princes and potentates. But she was also a veteran in pictures, a favorite on the French screen and also well-known in Germany, where she had made a number of pictures for the Fellner Company of Berlin.

In her flying trip across the continent, Lily only glimpsed America through train windows. It was not until her personal appearance trip that she really discovered it.

SEVEN mayors gave Lily Damita big golden keys to their cities. She has the seven golden keys hung over her dressing table mirror.

"Policemens with sirens meet us at trains," narrates the star. "Then gentleman in frock coat and silk hat hand flowers, hold French and American flags and make a solemn say about his city and give me gold key."

In some of the towns, Miss Damita feels she paid for her golden key.

"Club ladies in Providence give a luncheon just to ask questions," she relates with wide and extravagant gestures. "They wore, oh, so funny hats and ask how different it is to kiss Gary Cooper than Buddy Rogers.

Lily Damita steps off the train at the conclusion of her personal appearance tour of American cities, —during which she battled influenza constantly.

"I say I never kiss either these gentlemen which cause them deep regret. Then one at the end table raps loudly on her glass with fork and strain her voice 'Then how is it to kiss John Gilbert?' Soon everyone is tapping on glasses and beating plates to shout questions louder than the other. They are so curious about morals in Hollywood they do not care to notice I have no chance to eat my luncheon."

IF LILY can't get back to Europe right now, she is temporarily going Chinese. She has chosen a Hollywood house all gorgeously furnished in Oriental things. Her chiffonier and her dressing table are imperial affairs —huge, ebony black, austere and richly carved and handsomely mirrored. Her bed is also of carved Chinese woods, low and wide and luxuriously deep, its intricate carving brought out in bold relief against a sumptuous bed cover of golden yellow.

Harry Carr's

Harry Carr

Harry Carr, in his long years of association with the motion picture industry, has formed many intimate friendships with the stars of Hollywood. These connections make it possible for him to give you through SCREEN SECRETS every month many intimate, personal sidelights that can be obtained from no other source. Harry Carr's Private Line is charged with sparkling, intimate, vivacious gossip and authoritative comment on Hollywood and its personalities.

ONE of the anomalies of this new year is the splash that has been made by two girls who had been given up for lost; nobody even knew the location of the graves. These girls are Bessie Love and Betty Compson. Bessie fairly swept out the works in The Broadway Melody. Betty Compson is probably the most in demand of any free-lance star in Hollywood. All of which goes to substantiate the prediction that grown-up stars would supplant cherub children on the screen.

Anita's Luck

FATE hasn't been so cruel to Anita Page. The day I am writing this she has gone to court to have the judge give her legal authority to sign a long-term contract, the child being too young to sign a contract in her own name.

Anita came to Hollywood with about the bleakest prospects I have ever known. She came as one of two girls who were to be picture actresses under the able direction of Harry Thaw.

Harry was promptly chased out of town. The poison label was put upon the two young ladies. One of the girls went back home in dismay and tears. Anita had the courage to stick it out and made a great hit.

Greta Came Home

I HAVE a letter from Sweden telling of the reception to Greta Garbo when she went home to lay a flower on Stiller's grave.

Greta Garbo

There happened to be some high and mighty Swedish celebrities on board the same steamer; so Greta hung back, thinking to escape the excitement. The crowd let all the princes and shoguns pass on. They mobbed Greta. She managed to make a dive into a taxi cab that was standing nearby. The mob surged around and smashed in all the glass of the cab.

The taxi driver failed to be impressed. "I dunno who you are," he said in his most icy Swedish. "But who ever you are, you gotta pay for all this glass that that crowd broke."

Margaret Gets Up

MARGARET LIVINGSTON, who has made a hit in several recent pictures —The Canary Murder Case among others, is a young lady with a cool attitude toward her art. She is the only girl who tossed away a chance to star after one week's soaring.

Margaret Livingston

Margaret was, at that time, in the old Ince Studio. They made her a star on a Tuesday. On Saturday night she telephoned the studio that she didn't think she would be down again. Somebody in Salt Lake City had left her a legacy; and she said it was too much trouble to get up in the morning early enough to be a star.

Her legacy oozed away; and now Margaret is getting up in the morning.

How Embarrassing!

I HAVE always insisted that Joan Crawford and Doug Fairbanks, Jr., are already married and have been for some time.

"It isn't any use denying it to you any more," says Doug, Jr., "but you are going to get an awful funny feeling when you receive an invitation to our wedding."

Renee Relents

RENEE ADOREE, with another busted-up marriage on her sad heart, was supposed to be about to go home to France and forsake the movies forevermore. Either her heart was mended or the money sounded too good. She has just signed another contract and will appear soon in another picture with John Gilbert.

Another Mexican

ANOTHER little Mexican girl has invaded an excited film world.

This one is a tiny little senorita, fifteen years old. She goes by the simple name of Armida. She has hot burning eyes in a baby face. Fanchon Royer, a young producer, found her dancing down in "Sonoratown" in Los Angeles. M-G-M has taken over her contract and she is on her way.

Private Line

The Westerns

THE Hollywood producers are in a state of mind about the drama of the wild and untrodden West. They were selling off the horses and the saddles when along comes In Old Arizona, and makes a crashing hit. Now they don't know what to do. The horse sale, however, is continuing. If any one who reads this is ambitious to own a nag that has leaped down cliffs, kicked villains and rescued heroines from the villains, here is his grand chance.

Grown-Up Stars

SOME time ago, I predicted in this column that the next hit of the screen would be made by a stage star. It has happened.

Ruth Chatterton

Ruth Chatterton landed with a wallop in The Doctor's Secret. It won her a big contract with Paramount. I thought she was very, very good in that picture—at times and at moments — but she wouldn't have gotten to first base had The Doctor's Secret been a silent movie.

You are going to see a new type of actress on the screen—a much older woman and probably one less beautiful than the movie stars we have known.

It always follows—as certainly as night follows day—that the type of stories will change with the actresses.

The next stories will deal with women of more mature experience. Until now, the typical screen story has been a children's bed-time story relating how a refined, innocent and beauteous young gal happened to be kissed. The story always closed with a proposal and a clinch—with the villains retiring in a body, biting their nails.

The next crop of stories will at least faintly resemble real life.

Palaces For Sale

BIG houses seem to be going into the discard in Hollywood. After all, a palace evidently isn't so hot to live in. Tony Moreno is giving his enormous mansion to a children's home, and Frances Marion is advertising her house on the hill for sale—for a mere $750,000.

Fighty Dick

DICK ARLEN is, at this writing, soon to play the lead in a prizefight picture. He has been going through a course of training that would really enable him to step into a professional ring.

In these days, directors will not permit actors to stall in these fight pictures. Dick Barthelmess was well battered up in The Patent Leather Kid. I think it was in this picture that they hired Leach Cross, the old fighter, to do a part. When it came to the place where Leach was supposed to take a poke and go down for the count, he indignantly refused.

"That stiff knock me out? No; it ain't reasonable. Nobody would believe it."

Wasted Fists

THERE are a half a dozen actors who could win belts, tin ears and unmeasured glory in the prize ring. Richard Dix is a fine boxer and asks no favors of any real fighters who are hired to go into the movie rings with him. The boxers who have acted with Doug Fairbanks weep at the thought of a possible champ being wasted on acting. Fred Thomson could undoubtedly have been heavyweight champion of the world.

Who Said Greta?

GRETA GARBO has an indignant friend who has written to me in care of SCREEN SECRETS. She objects to something I said. She can't get up a quarrel with me. Me and her think just alike.

To my mind, Greta is not only the most interesting actress on the screen; she is the most interesting personality who has ever been on the screen. Also she is a delightful, unique and original person.

Sunsets and Horses

THE other day, Greta went to visit my friend who lives on a hill and keeps a large stable of fine horses in the back yard.

Greta looked for a while at the magnificent sunset that emblazoned the sky; then she looked around the horse corral and sniffed.

"I'll tell you what I like to do," she said, briefly. "I like to look at sunsets and smell horses."

That's where the charm of Greta lies; she does what she wants and says what she wants. I would like to hear, however, what the lady thinks of Hollywood. Her scorn is considerable.

Ramon Novarro

Ramon Insists

RAMON NOVARRO, talking pictures or no talking pictures, is bound to lay off for three months to study music in Berlin.

They thought when they gave him a chance to sing in the talkies that that might turn him from his ambition; but Ramon was firm. He has grand opera as his goal; and we are probably seeing the last of him as a picture star when his present contract is finished.

Viola Again

WHEN Viola Dana's divorce suit came up in the courts recently, it was like a voice from the dead past. I have never known any star to pass out so completely as she—unless it be her sister Shirley Mason.

Where Viola hit the bumps was in trying to re-make a

Our Modern

Life was a game to Billie, a carefree, lovely daughter of modern sophistication. But when she pitted her charms against the iron will of a man who always took what he wanted without scruple, what happened?

What has gone before:

BILLIE BROWN, carefree, sophisticated daughter of B. Bickering Brown, wealthy magnate, is the leader of a set of a headstrong young moderns who believe in cheating the devil of his due.

In the thoughtless, devil-may-care spirit in which she takes life in general, she accepts the proposal of Gil Johns, an attractive young man of wealthy family, but wishes to keep their engagement secret until he gains some post of value in the diplomatic service.

On the train returning home from school with her gay crowd, Billie meets Glenn Abbott, whose rise to political power has become a national byword. She is instantly attracted to him, and leaves the crowd to become better acquainted with him. While she is gone Kentucky, a younger girl of the crowd who is greatly enamoured with Gil, succeeds in monopolizing Billie's fiance. As Billie talks with Glenn Abbott and finds she is gaining his interest, she suddenly decides that she will win his friendship which might prove very valuable in helping Gil ahead in the diplomatic corps. With that end in view she invites him to her birthday party.

Now go on with the story:

PART II

WHEN Billie Brown had a birthday the whole world knew about it, thanks to B. Bickering Brown's high-powered advertising. The famous Brown estate was a veritable carnival on the night of her party, and Billie was the acknowledged queen in the Court of Youth.

All about the exotically furnished room young folks sprawled on cushions and low divans. Couples danced unsteadily between constant trips to the cocktail table.

Most conspicuous in this gay and rowdy crowd was Billie herself, mounted on the orchestra platform and playing the drums with wild energy, her seductive young figure swaying to the syncopated tempo. Head thrown back, scarlet lips parted, her beautiful body alluring in a daring gown, she was a sight to stir men's blood.

Glenn Abbott, returning to the States after years in the tropics—years in which he had unconsciously idealized women of his own world—had been shocked and disgusted to find the modern maidens little different from their primitive sisters. And of the youngsters, Billie Brown was the most modern. Yet in their very brief encounter Abbott had sensed that beneath the arrogant and reckless exterior was a girl he had sometimes dreamed about in the loneliness of tropic nights—a girl he might some day love and want to possess, not as a mistress, but as a wife.

He had bluntly refused Billie's mocking invitation to her party; but constant memory of the strangely mag-

Maidens

From the original story by Josephine Lovett

Do you remember how you were stirred by Our Dancing Daughters, Joan Crawford's recent starring success? It isn't too late to begin now the story of Our Modern Maidens, her next picture.

Waving gaily to the couples on shore, Gil and Kentucky drifted away from the lights and the crowd into the darkness beyond.

netic, generously carefree young girl had caused him against his restraining caution to change his mind. He argued with himself that as an old friend of B. Bickering Brown, he could not without unpardonable discourtesy snub his provocative young daughter.

Abbott had judged rightly that he did not belong with the jazz generation. Now he stood apart from the hard-drinking, hard-playing, hard-loving crowd of moderns, looking on at their antics, half disgusted, half amused. To one who had plumbed the depths of passion their vicarious thrills and attempted sophistication was ludicrous.

BORED as he was by the affair, his eyes lingered with interest on Billie. He was not aware at first that B. Bickering Brown had joined him. The millionaire was in his element. Genial, shrewd and luxury-loving, his only vice was his insatiable greed for publicity. For fully a minute he stood beside Abbott, beaming expansively on the crowd of young people whose names represented wealth and position.

"This party ought to put Billie over!" he boasted, puffing his dollar cigar with relish. "And—'You ain't seen nothin' yet!'"

Glenn Abbott, recalled from his dazzling vision of Billie, nodded absently. Again his eyes followed the girl, still beating the drums, tossing her bright locks, her eyes shining, lips parted in excitement.

"Look at her now!" cried Brown proudly. "Leading the band—a chip off the old block! She's going to be my biggest asset."

Abbott was silent, secretly marvelling that Brown could regard this vital, gorgeous young creature as so much publicity.

"Yes," he replied, "she is—an asset."

"Takes after the old man, eh, Abbott? Well, I must be toddling along—got to see that those newspaper chaps are having a good time. It will be worth a full page in the Sunday papers!"

The orchestra was blaring toward a triumphant finale. Perched atop the piano was Kentucky thumping a banjo and looking down at Gil playing the accompaniment, her eyes half-closed, lips parted sensuously, consciously trying to imitate Billie's natural seductiveness.

Under Billie's spirited direction the music raced to a deafening chord and was still. It was just like her to lead the wild applause, even as she bowed to her enthusiastic audience. In any other it would have been insufferable egotism; but in Billie it was good-natured and amusing. Flushing with success, she seized Gil and Kentucky and made them take a bow with her.

"Give the little boy and girl a great big hand!" she commanded gaily, leading her guests into another roar of applause.

She had not seen Glenn Abbott come in. Now for the first time that evening she became aware of him looking up and smiling more to himself than at her. Billie wondered uncomfortably if he were not secretly amused by her childish fun. Defiantly she turned toward him and ducked Gil's head like a little boy's in his direction.

"Come along, Gil—stunt's over," she whispered, throwing her arm familiarly about him.

ABBOTT'S smile faded. Inscrutable he watched her, his brows levelled, his eyes calculating, almost sinister. For a moment Gil caught the expression and suddenly recognized the power—the ruthlessness—in the older man.

Glenn Abbott turned away abruptly and seated himself where he could not see the handsome, carefree young couple. Billie, who had been deliberately playing Gil against Abbott, was puzzled to find her method—so very successful with boys of college age—failing. She wanted to attract his attention, to command his interest; but the crowd was clamoring for more music, and Billie, a gracious hostess, was obliged to lead the orchestra in another rousing number. In spite of herself, her eyes wandered toward Glenn Abbott indifferently reclining on a low divan.

Uncomfortably Gil Johns watched her until, unable to forget that fleeting cruel glance, he bent over and warned her, "Watch your step with that fellow, Billie!"

A little shiver of excitement ran down her spine. Yes, here was a man—sophisticated, ruthless, a match even for herself! Billie shook off the uneasy feeling and boasted, "I'll train him to come to heel! If you let me handle him in my own way, our honeymoon in Paris will be more than just a dream!"

For a moment she neglected the traps to lean seductively against him, her cheek pillowed on his shoulder. "Okay, Gil?" she coaxed winningly.

Gil paused just long enough to kiss her provocative red lips swiftly. "Okay," he agreed finally, turning back to the piano.

Kentucky saw their stolen kiss and looked away unhappily. For years she had worshiped Gil with all the ardor of first love, but somehow he had never noticed her—he had eyes only for the dazzling Billie Brown. Poor little Kentucky!

Blondie had also witnessed the kiss and its reaction on Kentucky. "Don't be a sap, Babe! If you want your man, go get him!" she said.

The girl flushed painfully. She had not meant for her heart to be so cruelly exposed to the jibes of Blondie; and besides, her loyalty to Billie forbade even the thought of competition.

THE encore came to a close at last. Billie, turning from the crowd, noticed Kentucky laying aside her banjo with a tired gesture. Impulsively she threw her arm about the child, who responded fervently, as if to banish the very memory of Blondie's cattiness.

Billie was piqued that Glenn Abbott's first interest in her had obviously waned. She was not accustomed to being slighted. She would force him to notice her—and like it! With a whispered word to Kentucky and Gil she slipped away to carry out plans of her own.

Now that the alluring Billie was no longer in sight, Gil became lazily aware of the

Hollywood's PERFECT HOSTESS

All Hollywood acclaims Marion Davies the perfect hostess, and in this article she tells how she keeps the guests coming back for more.

By JANICE DAILEY

PLACE your guests properly at the dinner table. Serve good food.

Make your parties short; have your guests leave not later than midnight.

Don't be too solicitous a hostess; give your guests credit for self-entertaining.

Be original; have games which require thought as well as humor to execute them.

Have a variety of amusements; something for guests of different temperaments.

Even though your party is formal give it an air of informality.

SUCH are the few, simple rules for entertaining laid down by Marion Davies, Hollywood's most popular hostess.

And since this is not a publicity story, but one which is simply to tell facts as Hollywood sees them, we can say this without fear of sounding like press agents for Marion Davies. She is, without doubt, the queen of Hollywood's social circles. Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks may collect more princes and dukes and ladies—although Marion is constantly having one out-of-the-city celebrity after another—but the home folks—well, Marion is Mrs. Astor and Mrs. Vanderbilt and Mrs. Morgan all rolled into one to these people.

Billy Haines says she keeps the best boarding house in the city; Polly Moran declares that everyone wipes his plate clean at the Davies table; Dorothy Mackaill says there's more fun in one of her parties than at the Bijou and Coney Island thrown together.

Marion recently took a long vacation in Europe. Hollywood—well, Hollywood wasn't Hollywood without her. Saturday night without a dinner at Marion's! Sunday afternoon without swimming and tennis and ping pong at her weekly open houses—why, the town was just like any other plain, everyday American city without them.

And when they learned she was returning! It was to Hollywood what the return of the Prince of Wales is to England. A surprise dinner party in her honor made history for our Cinema City. There'd been dinners before for visiting celebrities. Mayor Walker had one; Texas Guinan had one planned in her honor. There was the reception for Lindbergh and a Mary Pickford dinner for Prince George, incognito. And they were visitors, while Marion was merely a home towner. Yet none of them were accorded a welcome comparable to that given Miss Davies. Everybody who is anybody was present at the Ambassador on that evening when Marion arrived thinking she was to sup informally with Charlie Chaplin and a few of her intimates. They rose to their feet—these two hundred—and cheered and yelled when she entered the room.

Lovely Marion Davies, whose beauty is one of many attractions that make her entertainments the delight of film folk; above, the home where her charming personality reigns.

I DON'T say it's her parties only that have made her the toast of the city. It's a lot of things together. Her simplicity, her modesty—and perhaps above everything else, her ability as a general, for Marion just happens to be the kind of woman who would have made a success as a diplomat, a Joan of Arc or a Queen Elizabeth.

"You aren't born a perfect hostess, you are trained by experience to be one," she tells us. "The rules I follow are simple. I prefer to entertain motion picture people because they are so self-entertaining and because they have so much in common. But even here, how you place them at the table is all-important. If I am having sixty or sixty-five folks for one dinner, I don't use small tables; I place them all at one, old-fashioned banquet board. I think they get better acquainted, get more enjoyment from it. I try to put the French folk together. Harry D'arrast, Count Limur, Lili Damita, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Chevalier, and so on. Then there's Billie Dove and Bebe Daniels and Dorothy Mackaill and that crowd. Folks who know one another well enough to pass jokes and understand each other. The writers who have things in common.

MY COOK really deserves a lot of credit. If your food is right your party is right from the very beginning.

"I know women who go around asking their guests if they are having a good time. I think that's a mistake. Take it for granted they are enjoying themselves and you'll find that's what they are doing! Watch out for their comfort but don't worry about it.

"I think long parties are a mistake, also. Of course, picture people are working people. But most people work in this world, for that matter. I make it a rule that my guests leave by midnight, sometimes sooner. After you once establish that precedent, they understand and appreciate it. At first it may be a little difficult. I can remember one night some years ago when I excused myself and retired. That was a gentle hint and they took it. Then, you can send your orchestra home early. When the music is gone there is something missing. They will start to go whenever it ceases.

"Games are always good entertainment. Charades, dancing contests, competition in guest-entertainments—anything that's good fun and will keep everyone interested.

"We often write down the name of a song, the name of a person to be imitated, the name of a piece, a dance—put our selections into a hat and draw from them. Each guest must do what his little slip of paper tells him to. That's good practice for stage or picture people and high fun for the others. One night Bebe Daniels drew Al Jolson's name. In the twinkling of an eye she was out of the room and in the same space of time back again in one of my nephew's dress suits, ready to sing 'Mammy' in perfect imitation."

MARION didn't tell us all of her games but they are legion. Once Bob Leonard was brought in blindfolded. His wife, Gertrude Olmstead, kissed him. He was told to "Guess Who." He couldn't hit upon the right woman. Imagine his good-natured consternation when the handkerchief was removed and he saw whom he had been kissing.

Another time the men were brought into the room blind-folded. They were placed on their knees on the floor and told to turn over three pages of the telephone book with their noses. The first three or four times they tried it—it was great sport. But the fifth or sixth, when a pan of syrup was substituted for the book—well, the gal friends went into hysterics.

Dancing contests are frequent and Marion tells us that Dorothy Mackaill and Charlie Chaplin are always top-notchers. Not only the steps such as the Charleston, Blackbottom and Varsity Drag, but the old-fashioned waltzes and two-steps and the Civil War day cotillions are among the competitions.

Variety is another of Marion's rules. She has bridge in one room, other card games in another. So if there are those who prefer to be segregated they can have their choice of entertainment.

"For small, intimate dinner parties where only close friends are gathered, I do not plan anything special. We just sit around and discuss current events and the day's happenings in pictures. Nor do I prepare anything for my Sunday afternoons. There are the tennis courts, the swimming pool, the shaded seats and refreshments. Sunday is a day of recreation and each one should make his choice of what is most relaxing."

Then, of course, there are Marion's inimitable imitations. Her mimicry—well, Maurice Chevalier, the French actor, newly imported from Paris is the latest. And do you know, Marion has the most natural French accent in this city? It was discovered through these imitations and has been turned to practical use by her producers for talking pictures. You can never tell, in the movies, just when social graces will be advantageous for business.

Billy Haines, a favorite of Marion's parties, says she's a perfect hostess because she lets her guests alone—doesn't fuss over them. Others say it's because she is so spontaneously full of wit and good humor. Others—

Marion Davies' home is equipped with many means of keeping fit, and if you doubt their value, just look at Marion.

BUT who can describe Marion Davies? A million miles of publicity must have been printed about her. Her abilities have been heralded over and over and yet, I still have to see the real Marion Davies put on paper. It's like an artist trying to paint the soul of a woman. Even on her picture sets she manages to remain the perfect hostess. Most any day there you will meet practically every celebrity in town who is not working. They just naturally drop in to greet her. She holds open house even when working.

And the electricians and prop boys, the directors and their assistants, the lesser actors!—"Oh, I'm working in a Marion Davies' picture!" They go all over town bragging about it. Perhaps it's the luncheons she serves them in her gorgeous bungalow dressing-room which is in the center of the M-G-M premises. But, somehow, I don't think so; I think it's because she's Marion Davies—the woman who greets one and all in the same jovial, hail-fellow-well-met manner.

OF COURSE, some may say. "But this woman has everything! There's no reason why she should not be the perfect hostess."

Yes, yes, we'll grant all of that. Her home at the Santa Monica beach is a palace worthy of the lamp of Aladdin. Gold plated hardware, ballroom, card rooms—everything which your imagination might picture. But you have never seen a picture of it. She will not allow a photograph to be taken. She doesn't like publicity on her good fortune.

In Hollywood her charities are legion. Yet, again, you never read about them. I think Marion would bar a writer who talked about them. She feels it's her duty to help others, not a short cut to heaven or a chance to have her name heralded among the kind women.

And no matter where she goes, it's always the same Marion Davies. When she went to Europe, well—she met Frances Marion and George K. Arthur and a half hundred others who make up her coterie at Hollywood parties. And the gang hangs around her just the same whether she's in a hotel or in her palace. And if she were in a hall bedroom—well, I'll wager she'd be surrounded with followers and be handing them out cheese sandwiches in just the same manner that she now serves caviar and strawberries-out-of-season. In the same way that she dashes to Venice and goes on the merry-go-round or the ferris wheel and gets as much kick out of it as the ten-cent store clerk on her annual weekly vacation. Marion has a gang who attends these beach parties and the Los Angeles dingy little restaurant slumming escapades with her. Charlie Chaplin and Harry Crocker, Billy Haines and George K. Arthur, Seena Owen and Dorothy Mackaill, Gloria Swanson and others. And there'd be the same crowd no matter whether they started from a palace or a cottage as long as they were led by Marion Davies.

This sounds like a pretty glorious story, but Marion, with her dear little near-stutter, her frank, sparkling blue eyes, her "Hello, there, everybody," is a glorious person. She

GARY'S LIFE OF

Gary at the age of eighteen, romantic monarch of a mountain kingdom.

Despite his active career of motion picture success, Gary Cooper is still the dreamer he was when as a boy he knew the solitary splendor of a Montana ranch.

By HARMONY HAYNES

HOW did you happen to become an actor?"

A question, innocent enough in itself, and so often asked in Hollywood, seemed to be almost a challenge in this instance.

"An actor!" The piercing blue eyes, the straggly hair, the wrinkled brow, the square jaw and the firmly set mouth all seemed to say: "Smile when you say that, stranger!"—and I smiled and the stern face above me changed and smiled down from its height of six feet.

Back in Montana one would have said the smile belonged to Judge Charles H. Cooper's boy—here in Hollywood it belonged to Mr. Gary Cooper!

"Oh, you mean how did I happen to get into pictures? That's different. You see, to me the term 'actor' means the finished product and I'm only in the making, so when someone refers to me as an actor I often wonder just what they mean. I guess I'm a bit sensitive. I know very little about the world and its people and Hollywood is so different from Montana.

"You know I was born in Montana—at Helena. It's the capital of the state but it is only a small town. We knew everyone—everyone knew us, but the world beyond, that was an unsolved mystery. My father owned a ranch near there in the Belt Mountains about fifty miles from the Continental Divide. I always spent my vacations on the ranch. I liked to mess around the stock, to ride over the range and through the mountain trails day after day, to help with the round-up in the fall, to hunt and fish—and all I knew about the outside world was what I had read in books or seen from a Pullman window going back and forth across the continent.

"Back in 1909, by father took me to England and placed me in school. Well, to be truthful, I was so young at that time that no one was worrying about my education, but my older brother was to go to Dunstable in Bedfordshire, England, and rather than leave him so far away from home alone, I was left there with him. We stayed until 1912. That was a long three years for me—I was anxious to get back to the ranch.

WELL, between school in Helena in the winter and the ranch in the summer I never had time to do the things most kids do. I never got into any particular scrapes. Possibly I never had much fun either. During the summer of 1917 I was hurt in an automobile accident. I spent months in the hospital and then went to the ranch to recuperate. It was about that time that I began to wonder what I was going to do with my life. Deep down in my heart I wanted to become an actor. Just the kiddish dream of a yokel. I guess every kid goes through that stage but it seems to me that the kids in Montana have lots of time to dream. You can't sit on a horse day after day and read, so you just dream—misty, far away romanticisms. You are lord of all you survey—the prairies, the mountains and even the sky is a part of your mighty kingdom—the horse beneath you is your throne and little by little you become a great hero that you yourself worship. I was like that—an idealist and a dreamer. Out there on the range I became the star of every picture I had ever seen; the hero of every book I had ever read; and with my chaps, my spurs, my twelve-gallon hat and my trusty steed I conquered unknown worlds galore.

Gary Cooper's ruggedly handsome features have inspired fully as many maidenly dreams as any character in fiction.

DREAMS

"My father ran for office in 1918 and was elected Justice of the Supreme Court. My brother went to war and I was lifted out of my dreams and placed in charge of the ranch. Responsibility and romancing don't go hand in hand so I spent long winter evenings drawing. I had always been pretty handy with the pencil—just amusing myself with cartoons and sketches when I should have been doing fractions—but now I took it up in real earnest.

"By 1924, I thought I was pretty good so I bundled up all the junk I thought was worthy of the once-over and set out for Hollywood, intending to become a commercial artist of some sort. I got in with a company and everything was going along smoothly and the future looked as rosy as a Montana sunrise. Then smash! Just like that! The company was a fake and I was in Hollywood with nothing but a broken bubble—the remnant of a career—before me.

"Some friends of ours from Montana were here. They looked at my lanky legs and lean body and decided I would make a great western hero. They were so enthusiastic about it that all my yokel dreams welled up before me—again it was summer time in Montana, my horse was my throne and the world was my kingdom! I started out to look for extra work. I found a little, now and then, but I also found that the life of an extra was a life of uncertainty, broken promises and disappointments. I figured I might make good in a year or in ten years, or, perhaps, never—like so many others. One year out of my life didn't make much difference, so I gave myself that year in which to make good. And if I didn't hit—well, there was always the ranch.

"I worked here and there. Had a few tests taken. Got all hot and bothered whenever I was noticed, only to drop to the depths of despair when nothing came of it. Eleven months had already passed and I was still an extra. Then came The Winning of Barbara Worth! I was chosen to play the part of Abe Lee with Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky.

I GOT a lot of undue credit for my work in that picture. It was actor-proof, provided the right type was picked, and I just happened to be the right type. We went up to a ranch in the Blackrock Canyon, Nevada. So all I had to do, since I looked the part, was to act natural. At first the clicking of the camera made me nervous and a call for a re-take made me feel that it was my fault. I was dreadfully fidgety until Henry King, the director, said, 'Never mind, kid, you're all right. I take things until I get them the way I want them.'

"When I returned to Hollywood I was signed by Paramount. I did a small part in Wings. That went over all right. It was outdoor stuff in a uniform and I felt at home. Then came Children of Divorce with Esther Ralston and Clara Bow. My part called for real acting and I was scared stiff! Actually licked before a camera started grinding. Why, they had to re-take one simple little scene twelve times. And every time they took it I got worse—I had buck-fever. Every muscle in my face froze and I couldn't get an expression out of them to save my soul.

Gary Cooper as he will appear in The Wolf Song, and in one of the settings he loves because of their resemblance to the scenes of his boyhood.

"Frank Lloyd was directing. He was a prince. He told me he was sure I could do the part but that the front office was worrying about me—afraid I would hold up the production. And at the rate of twelve re-takes for each scene they weren't far wrong. I was hurt, humiliated, ashamed. I went home trying to decide whether to give it all up and go back to the ranch or whether to try it again. I left town for a day or so only to drift back again. I didn't want to see anyone. I felt that the whole world must know that I couldn't do even the simplest scene.

"I had just about made up my mind to leave Hollywood forever when I wandered into Henry's for a cup of coffee. Frank Lloyd was there. He beamed all over when he saw me. I felt relieved. At least one person in Holly-

They meet, they fall in love, they steal away for a trip down the river by moonlight. But there is an obstacle. A woman whom Jans has spurned has him arrested on false charges.

He disappears and Christina and her father, who has lost his sight, begin a frantic search for her missing lover. They are happily reunited at the last after overcoming many obstacles.

The picture provides Janet with an opportunity to wear many quaint and picturesque Dutch costumes.

A Dutch village was constructed in its entirety on the Fox lot for the making of the picture.

A Preview of "The Squall"

Carroll Nye, as Paul, falls a victim to the alluring charms of Nubi (Myrna Loy), the gypsy maiden who has invaded his home.

The Squall becomes a tempest of emotion as it sweeps through a quiet Hungarian household.

INTO the calm domesticity of a peaceful Hungarian family sweeps a tempest of emotion, a whirlwind of untamed passion, leaving havoc in her wake.

This cyclone is Nubi, a gypsy girl, who steals the love of the husband and the son of the family and sets all members of the family against each other.

Her arrival is as sudden and unexpected as the appearance of a squall upon the horizon. For a time it seems as though she had swept all before her, but at last Maria, the wife and mother, engages the gypsy girl in a bitter struggle to keep the family intact.

The struggle is brought to a climax, however, when De Vadja, Nubi's gypsy lover, comes to claim her. The Squall suddenly disappears, leaving no trace behind.

Myrna Loy, one of the most exotic actresses of the screen, portrays the part of Nubi, Alice Joyce is Maria, the distracted mother, while others in the cast include Loretta Young, Carroll Nye, Nicholas Soussanin, Zasu Pitts and Richard Tucker.—First National Vitaphone.

Nubi (Myrna Loy), seeks to persuade Josef, the father (Richard Tucker), of her love for him.

CHARLES DARNTON REVIEWS the PASSING SHADOW SHOW

Bessie Love, Charles King and Anita Page in The Broadway Melody.

The Broadway Melody

HERE, ladies and gentlemen, is a picture you will thoroughly enjoy seeing and hearing, for The Broadway Melody is not only the first talkie to sound human, but with its songs, dances and stage glamour it is lively entertainment every foot of the way. Coming as a surprise, it remains a sensation.

It's all about Hank and Queenie (Bessie Love and Anita Page), who are sisters in spite of the fact they have been doing a sister act in remotely suburban vaudeville, and Eddie, a Great White Way song writer who is all set to marry Hank. But Queenie has developed into one of those blondes who make strong men weak, and Eddie is no Hercules. To save Queenie from a satin-lined chaser, Hank takes to prayer and Eddie takes a sock in the jaw. Then Hank sees the handwriting on the heart, gives up Eddie to Queenie and heads back to the water-tank circuit. It's too bad Hank gets the country air, but life is life, isn't it?

Best shot: Hank making sacrifice as she telephones agent to book her up with another blonde. But the spectacular highlight is "Wedding of the Painted Dolls" done in color. The songs and dances are by far the best the screen has offered, so typical that Broadway seems just outside the door.—M-G-M.

The Divine Lady

TWO striking facts stand out: The Divine Lady was written with a whitewash brush and pictured with an artist's. Perhaps it was just as well to give Lady Hamilton the once over in this way, even though it makes her too good to be true, and certainly the attempt to give history a sentimental touch on the screen has gained immeasurably by the handsome way it is done.

With all due enthusiasm it may likewise be said The Divine Lady is well-suited to Miss Griffith's style of beauty. Even Miss Griffith herself may admit as much, since at times she seems to pose for all she is worth. Her acting is largely pictorial and, as such, satisfying. Yet as the earlier Emma Hart there is so little bounce to her that when a roguish leg is thrust through a bachelor's window the earnest observer is a bit surprised later to find that this leg belongs to Emma.

If the picture has a general effect of seeming to be too much on parade this impression may be laid to the fact that the love scenes are not so human as they might be.

There is the booming sound of cannon in two sea battles, the first of which is so impressive that it makes the Battle of Trafalgar seem like an anti-climax. Best shot: Nelson's full-sailed fleet sweeping into action.—First National.

Corinne Griffith and Victor Varconi in The Divine Lady.

THE most significant thing that has happened to talking pictures is The Broadway Melody. It doesn't matter that this is a musical revue produced on the screen as it might be produced on the stage. What does matter, is that it is the first sound picture to sound absolutely natural. Now that the public knows this can be done, audiences are not going to tolerate, let alone be satisfied with, talking pictures which sound like a hollow mockery. Producers generally have had their work cut out for them by The Broadway Melody.

Lady of the Pavements

THEY'RE doing good old Mme. Sans Gene again, only this time they call it Lady of the Pavements and, just to fool you, give Lupe Velez a touch of high life.

Don't you believe the title, for Lupe isn't that kind of girl. No; she's an inside girl, singing and dancing around and sitting on men's knees in a low-down Paris cabaret, yet pure as the driveling snow.

But whatever she is, you can't keep Lupe down. So up she goes after a high-born lady has been thrown down by her upright young fiance for having another man in her bedroom. He tells her right to her face that rather than make her his wife he would marry a girl of the streets. This makes the Countess so mad she sends her gentleman friend on a hunt for such a girl, the idea being to palm her off on the noble youth as a lady and not let him be any the wiser until he has gone ahead and married her. Did you ever hear anything like it?

Lupe is the life of the party, except when she sings. As the Countess—the viper!—Jetta Goudal is at her snakiest. William Boyd is such a grand guy that he seems overawed, but he manages several changes of uniform and two of facial expressions.

As a D. W. Griffith masterpiece Lady of the Pavements is a darn good program picture. Best shot: Lupe giving Jetta hell.—United Artists.

Colleen Moore and Neil Hamilton in Why Be Good?

Why Be Good?

OF COURSE, no one would think of going to The Boiler with cold feet, for this night club is so hot that it makes a specialty of roasting live "chickens" of the you-know kind on turning spits.

So here it is we find Colleen Moore as a poor working girl with her feet running a temperature. And here it is that a young swell finds her and puts her in the pleasant way of marrying millions. Little does he know at the time that she is just a clerk in the department store of his father, the great merchant prince, and little does he care when he discovers this strange coincidence. He takes her out a couple of nights to keep her feet working overtime, brings her back from a roadhouse as his wife, and presents her in pajamas to his father.

If Laura Jean Libbey could get a peek at this picture she would turn in her grave with envy.

But the first half is so fast that this part of it will no doubt carry it along to box-office success. Colleen doesn't pull any new ones out of her old bag of tricks, but she dances as though her shoes were soled with red-hot coals, and the pace she sets is generally followed.

Best shot: This hard-working girl cuddling up to a department store dummy that reminds her of her boy friend.—First National.

George Bancroft and Baclanova in
The Wolf of Wall Street.

The Wolf of Wall Street

AT THE beginning of this picture there is a symbolic shot showing all the resources of the country pouring their wealth into the Stock Exchange. No doubt this is as true as it is interesting. But it is to be doubted whether the interest of the great masses of people flows in the same direction, and so in this case it is love, as well as money, that makes the film mare go.

There's really nothing new in the story, for the plot is practically the same as that of Henri Bernstein's play, Samson, in which William Gillette appeared when you and I were young, Maggie. The Wolf ruthlessly feeds on suckers in manipulating stocks, only to find that love makes an even bigger sucker of him when his wife's fancy turns to his business associate. He thereupon takes his revenge by smashing his rival as well as himself in the market, turns Mrs. Wolf from the door, and then starts lone-wolfing it again in the street which runs from a river to a graveyard. As a talkie the picture is uneven in tone.

But the hearty, vigorous way in which George Bancroft does these things puts a big punch in the picture. After rough-housing the market he rough-houses his home, and in your admiration of his sheer will power you are indifferent to the fact that in the end everything is left at sixes and sevens. He makes it good, hard-hitting melodrama.

In her capacity of maid Nancy Carroll is spirited and human when she spills the beans about the goings-on in milady's chamber. Best shot: Savage Wolf climbing stairs to vengeance.—Paramount.

Spite Marriage

AS YOU value your laugh, don't miss the first half of Spite Marriage, for in it you'll see Buster Keaton funnier than I've ever seen him before and quite as funny as Charlie Chaplin at his funniest.

It's all done in kindness to a bride who has taken a quart too much. Buster is a poor little pants presser who dresses up in his customer's clothes and tags around after an actress until she marries him just to spite the leading man, who loves another.

The fun starts early when Buster gets behind the scenes and into the part of a soldier in a Civil War drummer, but it reaches its height after the bride gets home from a cafe where she had taken on a load calculated to discourage the most wakeful bridegroom.

Getting her on a chair is bad enough, but getting her into bed is worse. She has the resilience of a bag of wheat, and Buster handles her accordingly. He does it with an earnestness worthy of a better cause. His heart is in his work, and this is what makes it so hilarious. If he were cross with her it would be a different matter. But there is no end to his patience and his tenderness. You know he is going to get that poor dumb bride into bed even though it breaks his back. When finally he does get her there he is exhausted, and so are you—with laughter. Dorothy Sebastian furnishes the load.

There are also sea-going stunts, but they aren't a drop in the bucket to Buster's bridal night. Here is comedy too good to miss. Best shot: Buster falling all over himself and the bride at one and the same time.—M-G-M.

The Canary Murder Case

YOU now have another opportunity to exercise your keen detective instinct—and we all have one, you know, though we don't brag about it.

What does this best-seller chap, S. S. Van Dine, make of this, Watson? Just what he jolly well pleases? Of course. Using our own master minds, then, we cannot always agree with him. But we do agree that this bird, the Canary, who was strangled with one of her ill-gotten necklaces, fully deserved to be choked off. On her musical comedy trapeze she swung out over the heads of her audience for no good purpose. With her commercial eyes she sighted susceptible men of money, then blackmailed them. That wasn't nice of her.

That trick of using a phonograph record to project through a door the supposed voice of the lady after she has got it in the neck is exceedingly phoney. I seriously doubt, too, whether the murderer, having carefully planned to make robbery seem the motive of his crime, would drop the tell-tale jewels into a garbage can a block or two away from the scene of his midnight enterprise.

The psychological device of a game of poker to bring out the characteristics of the various suspects shows ingenuity, though it has been my experience that a strictly stag poker party brings out nothing but profanity.

It is a talkie and rather slow-moving at times, with painful pauses in the dialogue which may make you feel like shouting to the actors, "For God's sake, say something!" Best shot: Poker play which spots the murderer.—Paramount.

Louise Brooks as the bird in a gilded cage in The Canary Murder Case.

Mary Nolan and John Gilbert in Desert Nights.

Desert Nights

EVEN more surprising than the kidnaping story of a lady evangelist and her homeward stroll through the desert is the tale unfolded in Desert Nights.

First of all, it seems incredible that the manager of a diamond mine as physically fit as John Gilbert could be marched out of his office by an elderly male robber and a youngish female crook right under the guns of a small army of guards and carried off into the desert. But what staggers understanding even more is that he could fall in love with the girl on the heels of this dirty work. To be sure, he hasn't set eyes on a woman for two or three years, yet even this one isn't looking her best after sun and sand have scorched her complexion, not to mention her shins.

As you might know, the presence of Mary Nolan results in the hero's forgetting any complaints he might reasonably be expected to have regarding their relations up to that time; he becomes in fact, positively ardent.

Lapse of time is indicated by Gilbert's beard, which grows apace, as it were. But nothing grows on all three of the wanderers so much as their thirst when they are compelled to take to their feet and become lost. They can hold out only if their water supply does likewise, and that's about all there is to this plodding picture, except squabbles over water and the stolen diamonds, with a slight mixture of overbaked sex interest. Best shot: Mirage of lake in desert.

About all that Desert Nights gives Gilbert is exercise. Ernest Torrence is a genial crook, Mary Nolan not so genial when the sun gets under her skin.

Yes, isn't it warm today?—M-G-M.

A Psychological Siren

Myrna Loy believes in vamping from the eyebrow up, and tells of her saint-to-sinner career in the cinema world.

By DOROTHY SPENSLEY

IT SEEMS that Nubi was a voluptuary.

It seems, on the stage, she was one of those torrid ladies who undulated from the arms of one man to the—ah, er—arms of another.

It seems, in The Squall, on the stage, she never tired of undulating around in search of love. But Nubi had an alibi. You see, she was born in a squall, and you know the difficulty us girls born in squalls have. If it isn't one thing, it's another.

It seems Nubi had all the instincts of a homewrecker. And the figure, to boot. Full curves — gliding, rounded, tantalizing curves. Curves that wriggled, too.

"Of course, I couldn't play her that way," of coursed Myrna Loy, sitting coolly, calmly, on the Spanish divan. Or it might have been Italian—or Byzantine—or Greek. These periods, they fret me. Anyway she was sitting coolly and calmly on a red and gold divan, smoking a cigarette.

"I'm not the type to wiggle or do things with the muscles of my tummy, so I had to make my Nubi a symbolic study."

And, thusly, Nubi on the screen, as played by Myrna Loy for the gelatine produced by First National, with Warner Brothers' blessings, is a lady devoid of the well-known outward gestures of sex lure. She is a lady sinister, not nice, of weird, dominating manifestations.

But let Myrna tell it.

Myrna Loy's pretty features have a strong hint of the Oriental — but she's really Welsh, Scotch, and Swedish

A SQUALL, as you know, blows in from the sea and wrecks homes, despoils crops . . . ."

On the stage the locale was a little Spanish coastal town. On the screen it will be in Hungarian mountains. But, never mind, read on.

"I knew it would be a physical impossibility to play her as she was written, so I made Nubi a symbol. I made Nubi a symbol of the squall. She drifts into a pleasant family, strange, distracting, springing apparently from out of the blue, and demolishes its happiness. She doesn't do it so much physically as she does mentally. She induces unhappiness, unrest. She lures the father, incites the son and even descends to the level of seducing the male servant. All with slight physical appeal.

"And then she leaves as suddenly as she came, in much the manner of the squall that comes swiftly, wreaks disaster, and disappears, no one knows where, leaving a bright horizon."

OFF-SCREEN, Myrna is not the type that incites unrest. Cool, complacent, calm, she hasn't allowed the phantasma of Hollywood to sweep her off her feet. She lives in a bungalow with her mother and her seventeen-year-old brother, and gets fan letters from here and there asking if she's part Chinese, and why; and if it isn't a drop of Celestial blood that makes her eyes oblique, slanting, questioning, and makes her move with gestures subtle.

"The other day," said Myrna, "I received a letter insinuating—insisting—that the writer knew my family in Johannesburg, South Africa. And that I had quite a bit of . . ."

"Blackamoor . . . .?"

Myrna and her furry pal when, as a tiny tot, she lived in Helena, Montana, not far from the home of Gary Cooper.

Myrna Loy prefers the mental portrayal of a siren, rather than the physical.

"Yes. A little bit of Senegambian blood."

Myrna went to the Westlake School for Girls in Los Angeles. You would know it.

"As a matter of fact, I am Welsh and Scotch and Swedish."

She is five feet six and slender.

"And I was born, prosaically, in Helena, Montana."

A block down the street lived Gary Cooper. Some girls have all the luck.

"But I didn't meet him until we both arrived in Hollywood. Our mothers knew each other before, though."

Myrna studied under Ruth St. Denis and, therefore, became interested in the creative dances of the Far East.

"The hardest thing I ever did was to dance for a year and three months in Grauman's Egyptian Theatre prologues. I hated the routine. The one-two-three-kick. The bending, stepping, skipping, like so many automatons in a robot shop. Fanchon, of Fanchon and Marco, used to get so disgusted with me. It wasn't that I was out of rhythm, but I was out of sympathy with chorus work. 'Myrna, you are always a little before or a little after the step,' she would tell me.

"When I left prologue work after dancing for The Ten Commandments and The Covered Wagon, I went to bed and cried for two weeks. I was so tired, tired of routine.

FANCHON, always helpful and kind, said, 'Why don't you try pictures? And one day about four years ago I went out to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. I was waiting about the casting office when a man came over and said, rather apologetically, 'Would you mind working today?'

"Mind! He thought I was someone of importance."

Someone who had at least carried a spear in a De Mille extravaganza.

"I wore Kathleen Key's costume in a camera test for Ben Hur. They wanted to see how the gown photographed. And in that way I almost played the Madonna.

"Blanche Mehaffey and Betty Bronson and every blonde with blue eyes in Hollywood, was being considered for it. They made a test of me and decided I was too tall. Certain factions thought that. Well, Blanche got the role for a day Then someone decided she wasn't quite right and they sent for me.

"I was Madonna for three hours. But opposing factions got to work and as a three-hour Madonna I was out. Betty Bronson got the part."

From three-hour Madonnas to roles like Nubi, and Azuri in The Desert Song, just finished, and Yasmini in King of the Khybar Rifles, about to be made with Victor McLaglen, was a gradual development. A natural development, it might be said, for such is the cinema way of all flesh that is auburn-haired and green-eyed.

When Myrna, born Williams, was seven, her mother, Mrs. Della Williams, an accomplished pianist and a widow, brought her two small children to Los Angeles and eventually, Myrna in her terpsichorean kicking, kicked the "Williams" out the window and emerged "Myrna Loy."

"In Helena," continued Myrna—her voice is low with cultural shadings—"I was always interested in dramatics. I can look back now and see that every experience I had as a child was to have some effect on my life work.

Henry Waxman, a photographer, made some studies of Myrna and hung them in his studio. Valentino saw them and introduced Myrna to Natacha Rambova, his wife, who was about to make the ill-fated What Price Beauty, which never saw the light of release. Myrna, in it, had her first featured part.

After which Warner Brothers signed her to lend exoticism to their classics. Who could blame them?

LOOKING down from over the fireplace beams a handsome picture of Barry Norton, the only human likeness in the room. Draw your own conclusions.

Myrna, calm, cool, collected, on a red and gold Spanish divan, blew a puff of smoke. On the low table at her side was a book on Oriental Philosophy, which she was reading. The picture of Barry looked approvingly down on the scene.

"And Barry?"

"Oh, yes, and Barry," smiled Myrna, intangibly.

She has known him as long as he has been in town. In fact, Myrna admits cautiously, he is her ideal. Marriage, itself, for two people with careers is all right, but not immediately.

And what do you think of Nubi, the intriguing voluptuary, being played as a mental siren?

TOM, Dick, and Harry, Jane, Mary, and Sue and anyone else with movie aspirations can start saving up right now for their fares to New York. According to recent developments, this great big noisy city of ours is on the verge of developing once more into a big movie production center. They say that by summer there'll be at least eight active studios in and around New York.

Noise will be noise. The motion picture industry is full of sound and fury signifying nothing but panic. The tremendous demand for talkies and singies and soundies must be satisfied. New York is once more to become an important production center. Every possible location is being turned into a potential sound studio.

Here's Where

GET out your note books, patsies. Charlie Chaplin shot scenes for a time at the old Cosmopolitan Studio, but otherwise it's scarcely been used in the past few years. Now it's been taken over by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and is already the scene of feverish activity.

Paramount Famous-Lasky is on the way with many shorts and features filmed at that Astoria studio. Right now, our good friend Richard Dix is out there busily engaged in the filming of Nothing But the Truth, the laughing stage hit which had us New Yoikers guffawing for many a month years ago.

Out in Brooklyn, Warner Brothers is on the job at the Vitagraph Studios once more turning out on the average of two Vitaphone vaudeville acts per day.

The American Sound Studios, Inc., have taken over the old Tilford Studio on Forty-fourth Street and are prepared to turn out shows for independent producers. Ditto for the De Forest Phonofilm Studio on Forty-eighth Street. Over in Fort Lee the studio has been turned into the Fort Lee Sound outfit for Biophone Productions.

What's more, Universal is about to put up a new studio on West Forty-fifth Street and it's said that the old Fox Film Studio at Fifty-fifth Street, which in the past years has been used as business offices, will be reconverted for Movietone productions.

The New York Chamber of Commerce is all a-twitter over the new developments. It is confident that now at last New York's population will begin to pick up. It is prophesied that as a result of the influx of extras and stars the city will become one of the most important—if not the largest—cities in the United States. Rowdy-dow!

Hope, Hope, Hurray!

HOPE HAMPTON, whose hubby, Jules Brulatour, gets a cent a foot for every strip of celluloid used in pictures, is once more all set for big time. Up till now the village Hampton, marking time with the slogan, "While there's life there's Hope," has been doing very little of anything except to play in occasional technicolor productions because of her beautiful hair and complexion. Now, however, the lassie has been signed by Warners to sing the fourth act of Minon as an operatic film to be made here in the East. Nowadays, you see, music hath charms, chiefly box office.

Georgia Lerch, a delicious bit of femininity from George White's Scandals.

Putti Soft

LYA DE PUTTI sped to New York from Hollywood, stopped at the Buckingham for a few days, and then walked the gangplank to board the Majestic and sail for England. It seems that Lya is all fed up with Hollywood and the talkies, which latter she considers "the bunk."

Ho!

By ERNEST HAYNES
SCREEN SECRETS' New York Correspondent

Mayor Walker, of New York City, officiates at the notable wedding that joins Billy Rose, celebrated song writer, to Fannie Brice, stage and screen celebrity.

She's joining H. C. Witwer's little directory Who's Through In America for the apparent reason that when it comes to the talkies, words fail her. After all, Lya's a German lassie, she didn't go over with any very resounding crash here, being cursed with impossible pictures, and now she's found the best way out by marrying what she calls "a very quiet man" and starring in a film for British National Pictures called The Informer. What happens, like the great American step-in, remains to be seen.

A Look at Lupe

LUPE VELEZ burst upon us like a whirlwind the other day, to make personal—very personal—appearances. Right now she's at the Rialto Theatre giving the citizenry an extra break for their money by appearing in connection with the first showings of her picture, Lady of the Pavements.

The gentlemen and ladies of the press encountered a thrill among their usual weary duties by meeting the peppy Mex star at a reception given for her at the Park Central. She says that her next picture is to be a film of the Argentine, and to judge from her present actions, she'll be just as snappy and untrammeled in it as when she first reached Hollywood.

Tommy Entertains

I WENT a-taxiing up town not so long ago with the pleasant prospect of being about to meet that swell gent of the screen, Thomas Meighan. Since The Racket, Tommy hasn't done anything very important and it was a source of much rejoicing when the news came out that he'd signed a long-term contract with Warner Brothers.

It was all very informal and pleasant amid the mob of people gathered in Mr. and Mrs. Meighan's charming suite at the Savoy-Plaza. Although his style was naturally a bit cramped by the bevy of admiring persons about him, I got the impression that he's a very swell fellow with a nice gift of quiet but entertaining conversation, an apitude for telling amusing stories, and a dislike of having to be anything but his good-natured self. And let me mention here and now that he serves the biggest ripe olives I've ever seen in my life!

Although Tommy is looking forward to forthcoming activities at the Warner Brothers Studios in Hollywood (he will probably act in the famous stage play, The Argyle Case), he is secretly sorry to leave the East. He has a beautiful estate in what the smart-alecks refer to as Goitre, Long Island. Tommy Meighan mentioned dryly that the inhabitants of Great Neck didn't mind using that term themselves but objected strenuously to hearing it used by outsiders. Tommy's on the water wagon. He said that his friend Ring Lardner is undoubtedly off. "We never ride together. It's a standing joke that when he sees me getting on the wagon in back, he hops off the front end." Tommy admires Booth Tarkington more than any other writer in these States. He recently had a message from the author that he was on the point of undergoing an operation on his eyes.

I judge, by the way, that the favorite song of Tommy's wife (who looks very much like her sister, Blanche Ring) is: Meighan My Shadow. Whoops!

Milt's Tough Luck

MILTON SILLS is in N. Y. But Milt isn't well and will undoubtedly be unable to see anyone. His wife, Doris Kenyon, has been pretty worried about him. According to reports, she's been consulting with physicians in this city who are prepared to snap Milt out of his nervous breakdown as quickly as possible. For some time he's been suffering from nervous indigestion but this is the worst attack he's ever had. When he stepped out of the production of Pat and Mike in the midst of shooting, his friends thought that he'd be back on the lot in no time, but apparently things were more serious than was anticipated. Some there are who feared that Milton wouldn't be able to leave Hollywood but Doris

How to Dress on

Claire Windsor takes us on a tour through her famous wardrobe which has earned her the title of "The Best Dressed Woman in Hollywood."

By DOROTHY WOOLDRIDGE

THERE is a little item tucked away in the income tax report of beautiful Claire Windsor which would make most husbands wince. It would cause not a few to deliver orations—home-made orations couched in all the choice vernacular of irate men. The item reads:

For wearing apparel—$13,214.00.

Thirteen thousand, two hundred and fourteen dollars and no cents for things to wear in just an average year! That's the penalty or the price for being "The Best Dressed Woman in Hollywood." That's what it cost last year. That's just about what it will be this year. Then there's next year and the next. In ten years, one hundred and thirty-two thousand, one hundred and forty dollars!

I ran over to Claire's home for a little chat the other day to try to absorb some of her placidity for my tired nerves. There always is something quieting and soothing in her cheerful serenity and she is pretty—as pretty as a cameo cut by an old master. And always exquisitely tailored. I found her looking perplexedly at one of those puzzling legal blanks in which the government asks you to tell intimately how much money you earned the current year and what you did with it. Claire had reached a satisfactory agreement with the revenue collector and the item of thirteen thousand dollars for wearing apparel, stood.

"That really isn't so much," she exclaimed. "Only a little more than a thousand dollars a month."

"Yeah!" I replied. "You don't fool with silver money at all, do you?"

Then I asked her to tell how she banished so much currency to make room for clothes and she showed me her wardrobe. Understand, please, this is the wardrobe she keeps on hand for personal wear but includes also a gorgeous array of things to be used in screen appearances if occasion demands. As a free-lance player she is prepared to appear in any fashion role, correctly attired.

Ninety-six hats! Her mother counted them for me. In fact, we all counted them together. Snug little sports hats, snappy little street hats, a long array of evening hats and a gorgeous selection of hats for the opera.

"I seldom wear the same hat two days in succession," Claire explained. "No one should if it can be avoided. A girl or woman does well in being differently costumed at each appearance or as nearly so as she can arrange it."

Claire Windsor, in one of her favorite evening gowns, a simple little creation of rose tulle and Italian lace.

WE PASSED on to a closet where dresses hung. Nearby was another.

"How many dresses?" I inquired.

"Have no idea!" Claire replied. "A hundred, I guess. Never counted them."

"And they cost?"

"Oh, all the way from $175 to $450."

She took down a velvet wood-violet evening gown having a cape edged with fringe.

"Here is a new one I just got," she added. "I think it's rather pretty. Cost $500 in New York. Then there's another blue bouffant, billowy with tulle and topped with a cape, all embroidered in French rosebuds. I just got it, too. I have a bag to match each evening gown."

With this comment Claire stooped down and opened drawer after drawer of her French period dressing table revealing a dazzling array of bags. There were at least twenty-five, possibly many more. Bags for sports wear, for evening and afternoon wear.

There was an evening dress of monkey-skin color, hand-beaded, which had cost $450, then three short beaded dresses which were cheaper, oh, much cheaper! They cost only $350 each. (I knew she would practice economy some time.)

We came to the shoe-rack.

$13,000 a Year

Claire's taste for beautiful wearing apparel extends to negligees and nighties, too. Here is one of her fancy garments in texture as well as price.

Rows and rows and rows of most every conceivable kind of fashionable footwear. Seventy pairs in all. Kid pumps, satin pumps, silk pumps, alligator, snake and sheep-skin pumps; low shoes and boots, nearly all with little French heels.

"I just had two pairs of pumps made," said Claire, "to go with new ensembles. One is of snake skin to harmonize with a grey-blue dress and the other is made from python skin for a rose-beige dress which I got in New York. I paid $40 a pair for the shoes and $35 each for bags of the same material to complete the outfits.

"You see, you can't wear shoes long before one of them gets scuffed and you can never, never wear a scuffed shoe on the street or at an evening affair."

"No," I admitted, "that would be tur'ble!"

After which we passed on to the realm of her negligees. She showed me, first of all, fifteen robes de chambre. (Never mind looking that up in the dictionary. That's where I got it. A "robe de chambre" is a dressing gown or morning gown, Mr. Webster says.) These bits of feminine finery set Miss Windsor's bank account back from $325 to $350 each time a new one made its appearance. There was, for instance, one rose negligee of soft crepe flounced with gold lace, having a flowing cape edged with chinchilla fur and there were slippers to match. In fact, there were slippers with all of the fifteen negligees, some of them brocaded and some ornamented with tiny

Senorita

When Lupe speaks, her pet poodle—and everyone else—sits up and takes notice.

Lupe Velez abandons love for a career and heeds the alluring call of Hollywood, land of her childhood dreams, in this installment of her life story, as told to Ruth Biery by

Lupe Velez

My life up till now:

WHEN I am very young I ride with my father in the Mexican army. I see mens killed. I flirt and I dance—the things I like to do best—from the time I am very young. At thirteen I fall very much in love. I never forget when my sweetheart he first kiss me. I see him day and night. My mother is afraid so she send me to the United States to a convent. I dance all the time. I do the hula and the shimmy. The other girls hate me because I flirt with their boy friends and take them away from them. Pretty soon my mother send for me to come home. The money is all gone. My mother is crying. They are even going to sell the piano.

Then we go to Mexico City. One day I go to the Principal Theatre. I dance for the boss. Pretty soon he give me a big part in one of the plays. The other actresses are angry, but I imitate them and pretty soon I am famous. But my sweetheart he do not like to have me on the stage. He say I must choose between him and the theatre.

WHEN I meet Mil-a-tone he have no money, either. We have such good times when we are poor together. He say to me, "When we get one thousand pesos together we will marry and have a little home and many little children." Then he find oil. He get very rich. Bah! Money does not make people happy. That's why Lupe never care much if she save money. It is fun to make money but if you have much it might hurt; maybe it never help her.

When I first come back from the convent I have a birthday. We are very poor. I want so much, a silk dress, what you call it, the silk that stand up like paper? Taffeta! All the girls in Mexico City wears taffeta with ruffles and little ribbons on it. Mil-a-tone, he go to a store and get the taffeta and take it to a dressmaker. He pay the store one dollar a week and he pay the dressmaker one dollar. I never am so happy. That night I go to bed with my hair turned up in papers. I think I will die because I am so happy and can wear the next day my new dress which Mil-a-tone get me! He steal two roses for me from a man's garden. I put them in my hair, put on my new dress, and go out all day with Mil-a-tone. He think I am beautiful; we think we will always be happy—ah, there will never be another birthday like when I am sixteen for Lupe.

IT IS really Mil-a-tone's fault that I go in the theatre. I have say that I want to act and earn money but I am not serious. I do not really think I can do it. One night when Mil-a-tone begins to have a little more money he take me to the Principal Theatre to see Marie Contesa. I look at her and say, "She is an old woman. I can do better than her!"

"You don't know what you say!" Mil-a-tone tell me. "What can you do? When you see all these people you would be skeered to death!"

When anyone have say to Lupe, "You cannot do!" it is like when they wave a red flag before the eyes of a bull to get the bull started. "I can do!" I answer. And it is then I get serious and make my mother get a mans to introduce me to the boss of the Principal Theatre.

I beg Mil-a-tone not to go that opening night. "Please, Mil-a-tone, don't come to the theatre. I will see your eyes and when I look into them I cannot think about doing right my singing and my acting."

But he is in the front row. It is mean of him but it make me so mad that I must do good to show him I am a good actress. He is there the next night and then he come back and say that I can't do any more work in the theatre. He says he can't have his girl kicking her legs so other mans can see them.

CYCLONE

Proving that nobody catches her napping, Lupe Velez opens two sparkling eyes to the camera and gives that weary instrument something to click about.

"But aren't you glad, Mil-a-tone, that I am such a hit? Aren't you glad that all these people love Lupe?"

But Mexican men are different from mens in America. They are more jealous. They want, when they love a womans, for no one else to see her. Mil-a-tone is getting more and more money. He knows he can give me things.

"The theatre or me!" is what he say to me.

I MUST make up my mind. I think there is always a time in the life of a womans when she must make up her mind what is going to make her most happy. Every night all the people clap and yell and cheer Lupe. I love it. I love to hear them. I love to act and sing and make them happy.

Every night I look into the eyes of Mil-a-tone. I love him. What am I to do about it?

Then I say, "No! I will not leave my career for anybody. If the kind public loves me I don't care if the mans love me. Mens mean a lot to me but no man on earth is worth all the thousands of mens and womens who adores me. If the public stop loving Lupe she will die; if one mans stop loving her she can find another."

When I go to California he take me to the train and offers to give me some money but I will not take one peso from him. I say I don't need it even though I don't have a cent in my pocket.

I get to be the biggest star in Mexico. They have print in this country that I dance in the cabarets. That is not true. Lupe dance only in the theatre and I have a press book which is so big I cannot carry it which tell all about my work in the Principal Theatre. I am there a year and a half when I fight with my manager. He pay me fifty dollars a day which is the biggest salary for a star in Mexico. I want seventy-five. He will not give it to me so I break my contract. I have a contract offer to me for Cuba and one for Buenos Aires. I cannot make up my mind when an American boy come to me and say, "Miss Velez, why not you go to Hollywood?"

Hollywood is like heaven but I do not think Lupe Velez is big enough for heaven! I say, "Don't be silly!" But one night when I come home he is waiting all day at my house for me and he say, "I am not joking. Richard Bennett want you to play in The Dove with him." That is the part which Dorothy MacKay play and then go to San Quentin.

I am so happy; I am so excited; but I have no money to take my mother with me. So I take Mil-a-tone. I do not mean Mil-a-tone, the man—I mean Mil-a-tone, the dog. That is all I have left from the mans, is the little dog which I name after him. I love that dog more than any person. He is always with me. I would die if anything happen to him. One time he get lost in Hollywood and I cry for three days and cannot work. Maybe, it is because Mil-a-tone, the dog, comes to me from Mil-a-tone, the man. But—I have never tell anyone else about him—the man—and I can talk no more about him.

THE newspapers carry lines that Lupe Velez goes to Hollywood. The biggest headlines, they give me. Then I come to the border and the dirty sons of a gun will not let me go over. I am seventeen; I have not what you call of age; I have no mother and only one dog with me. I come back to Mexico City like one dog, myself! I cry all the way on the train. It is the first time in my life I find something really to cry over. The newspapers laugh at me. They say, "Lupe Velez sent back to Mexico!" I cannot stand it. The way the other stars who I imitate poke fun at me. Yet it was my poor Mil-a-tone—Mil-a-tone, the dog—who really suffer. He go in a suitcase with holes poke in it. He is upside down on his nose one moment; on his tail another. He do not cry. So I say to him, "Poor Mil-a-tone! Don't you worry. You did not go through it for nothing. Lupe will bring you across the border so you can see Hollywood and Los Angeles."

Lupe's path to stardom led her through bathing girl comedies; here she is shown doing her stuff for a Hal Roach opus.

I see the President; I see the Consul; I see the Ministers; I see everybody in Mexico City. They write letters to Washington. Bow! Wow! Now I can stay in California all my life. They can never send me back, so well did my friends take care of me with the Uncle Sam.

When I get my letters, I go back to the newspapers and say, "Now I go to Hollywood." They laugh at me. They say they get stung once on giving me a lot of publicity and they wait until I really get here to write about it. It make me mad like hell. But they make up for it since I go into pictures.

I PUT Mil-a-tone back in the suitcase and start again. My Lord, what a trip! I have no money but I have a berth on the bottom. I sell it to a mans for twenty-five dollars so I can eat. Poor Mil-a-tone. He cannot bark! For then they will take him away from Lupe and put him in the car back of the machine. The night I go to bed on the top I forget to tell the porter that I am no longer on the bottom. I tie Mil-a-tone to my wrist with a handkerchief so he cannot get me into trouble. Gee, this is a vacation for my poor little Mil-a-tone after all day in the suitcase with holes in it. The porter, he come to wake up the mans at five in the morning and he does not know that he is on the bottom. He push me to make the mans get up and Mil-a-tone bark.

Oh, Baby! I am skeered. The porter, he say, he must take Mil-a-tone. But I make the tears come and I wrinkle my eyes at him and flirt even though he is black and he say if Mil-a-tone no bark any more he will keep his mouth shut. Mil-a-tone does not bark again till we get to Los Angeles.

That was a terrible trip. The only American words I remember from the convent days are "son of a gun," "son of a something else," which they say I must not print, "ice cream soda," "cantaloupe" and a little poem which says:

"Go to hell
Ring the bell
And tell your mother
I am well!"

I tell this to everyone on the train so they know I speak English.

I wish I did not know the word cantaloupe. It is the only thing they have to eat on the train which I can say. For four days I eat nothing but cantaloupe. On the last morning I go to the dining room and I make up my mind I will not eat any more cantaloupe. I will have an egg. So I say egg in Mexican. The waiter, he no understand. Then I scream "egg, egg, egg," in Mexican at him. Then I get very mad; I am going to have an egg for my breakfast. I roll up my napkin in a little ball; jump out of my chair; go to the corner, put the napkin on the floor and sit on it. Then I cry, "Cockle doodle doo!" I get the egg for my breakfast.

I flirts with one mans on the train. He come and sit with me. We cannot talk but we make eyes at one another. When I get off at Los Angeles and I opens my purse to give to the porter something, I have one dollar. That dirty son of a gun who wrinkles his eyes at me have taken my twenty dollars which I have made by giving up my bottom bed. All I have when I come to this city is just one dollar. I let Mil-a-tone out and he is so happy to get out of the suitcase that it makes me happy even though I have only one dollar. The porter starts with my bags but he has a red cap on and I think he is an American policemans. I scream and I yell, "Why you put Lupe in jail?" I say it in Mexican and he no understand. So I scream, "Go to hell," and he put my bags down. I am so happy because the American policemans no put Lupe in the American jail on her first morning in this country.

I go in and sit on a bench and watch all the peoples. It is fun to watch the American peoples. It makes me happy to see Mil-a-tone running around under the feets of the people. I sit there till six o'clock. Then I smell food and my stomach begin to feel very funny. Also Mil-a-tone's stomach. I buy one beat up her Eddie. She cast her vote for the screen as against the ring.

So Eddie became a Hollywood actor. He was a good-looking boy with a shock of curly hair—so curly that they called him "Curly Diggins" in the ring; and the name followed him into pictures.

On the night of March 25, 1927, Eddie came home to dinner as usual. As the little bride was clearing away the dishes, he announced that he had been invited out for the evening; and asked her to come.

"Oh, Eddie," she said, "I don't like those places. You go, but I would rather stay at home."

SO SHE stayed and Eddie went. When the party was finally mobilized it consisted of several Hollywood people. There was Lloyd Hamilton and in all probability, Irene Dalton, although her name was kept out of the newspapers. There was Charles Meehan, a director, and his wife. Meehan had been mixed up with the police several times on account of liquor possession. There was a stunt man named Billie Jones who had trained Eddie for several fights; and an actor, John F. Sinclair. Also one Tex Wagner, a Hollywood extra.

With the instinct of homing pigeons, their feet turned toward the "Crescent Tea Room"—a house on Cherokee Avenue, Hollywood. At the "Crescent Tea Room," they served anything you asked for except tea. You can imagine what kind of place it was; and why one visit had been enough for little Mrs. Diggins.

The place was full of people when they arrived. Many were well known Hollywood actors. One of the witnesses afterward said that he saw Sally O'Neil there with a party. Miss O'Neil told the reporters with commendable brevity that this was all applesauce; that she was at home and in bed. You can believe anything you prefer. Anyhow, if she wasn't there, plenty of others were. The street was packed with handsome limousines.

Things began to get pretty lively about midnight. At about two in the morning, they got to the fighting stage—to the story-telling stage.

There were two lovely little check room girls named Josie and Rosie who were interested spectators. Rosie—or Josie—told the police afterward that several fist fights relieved the monotony in the small hours of the morning.

Meehan seems to have had a fight with somebody.

While they were dancing, there came a scuffle in the room. Those nearest saw Eddie Diggins' fist shoot out and a director named Waggoner took the count on the ball room floor. Nobody knows whether or not that had anything to do with the tragedy that followed.

"I warn every woman I employ"

Says the woman Personnel Manager in a large office about this phase of modern feminine hygiene

One unconscious offense which is no longer necessary. This remarkable sanitary pad deodorizes* completely and is superior in comfort features as well as ease of disposability.

IN the world of business, in society, women often find themselves embarrassed at certain times. Sometimes they offend without knowing why. When they learn, miserable self-consciousness follows. Make-shift efforts to counteract the difficulty seldom succeed. Now a discovery made in Kotex Laboratories ends all these fears and worries. Science has discovered a way to counteract a serious offense.

Kotex now deodorizes completely*

Kotex has brought a new idea of feminine hygiene to women all over the world. In the past ten years they have learned new comfort, new ease-of-mind through this sanitary protection. Now, after years of work, a process has been perfected that completely ends all odors. The one remaining hygienic problem in connection with sanitary pads is solved.

Shaped to fit, too

Because corners of the pad are rounded and tapered it may be worn without evidence under the most clinging gown. There is none of that conspicuous bulkiness so often associated with old-fashioned methods. Kotex is easy to adjust to suit your individual needs. Cellucotton absorbent wadding takes up 16 times its weight in moisture 5 times more absorbent than cotton itself. It is easily disposed of, no laundering is necessary. A new process makes it softer than ever before.

Buy a box today—45c for a box of twelve. On sale at all drug, dry goods and department stores; also through vending cabinets in rest-rooms, by West Disinfecting Co.

Joan Crawford

Joan Crawford

LUCILLE LESUEUR decided when she was still a pupil in a girls' finishing school in Kansas City, where her father was a theatre owner, that she would go on the stage. When her parents opposed her, she ran away to Chicago to try out for a theatrical opening. Her first stage experience was as a dancer in a revue there, in 1922. She was next offered a chance to appear in a Shubert production, Innocent Eyes, in New York, and later became a dancer at the Winter Garden in The Passing Show. There she was discovered by Harry Rapf, associate studio executive for M-G-M. Through a magazine contest she was christened by the movie public as Joan Crawford, and under that name, after a six months' drilling in the art of screen acting, was signed as a stock actress. Her first bit was in Pretty Ladies, which was followed by an important role in Old Clothes, a Jackie Coogan production.

Ramon Novarro

Ramon Novarro

RAMON NOVARRO was born in Durango, Mexico, February 6, 1899, son of Dr. Samienegos, a wealthy educator of Mexico. In 1913 the revolution against Huerta wiped out the family fortunes. When Ramon was seventeen years old, he and his brother, Mariano came to the United States to try their luck. Ramon, who had wavered between following a musical career or the priesthood, got a job singing in a Los Angeles restaurant. Still dreaming of an operatic career, Novarro studied under Louis Graveure and other famous masters. He has abandoned the thought of entering the priesthood. Novarro is five feet, ten inches tall, weighs one hundred and sixty pounds, has black hair and brown eyes, and is single. He lives very quietly in Los Angeles, and is known by his family name "off screen." His hobby is music. Don Quixote is his favorite book.

William Haines

William Haines

IN 1921 a tall, handsome young chap was walking down the streets of New York when Bijou Fernandez, casting director for the old Goldwyn Company, turned and spoke to him. She learned that he was William Haines of Stanton, Virginia, son of a broker, intent on a business career, and with no thought of a motion picture career. However, at her insistence, he agreed to undergo a screen test, which resulted in his being placed under contract. His first part was in Three Wise Fools, filmed on the West Coast. He was finally starred in Spring Fever. He was born on January 1, 1900, and is single. His latest hobby is collecting old china, silver, and etchings. While he admires Joseph Conrad especially, he considers Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn the most delightful books he has ever read. The Big Parade is his favorite picture.

Dorothy Mackaill

Dorothy Mackaill

FRANCE gave the Statue of Liberty to America, but England gave us Dorothy Mackaill. She was born in Hull about twenty-five years ago, and educated at Thorne Academy, London. The yearning for a stage career led her to the Hippodrome, where she became a member of the chorus in Joybells and leader of the Chicken Number. A British film company signed her for a role in The Face at the Window. After many months of stage and screen work in France, she came to America and joined the Ziegfeld Follies. The Lotus Eater, with John Barrymore, and Bits of Life were her first American pictures. First National signed her on a long-term contract. Among her most recent pictures are Subway Sadie, The Crystal Cup, The Whip, The Barker, His Captive Woman, and Children of the Ritz. Dorothy is one of the screen's best comediennes as well as a fine actress.

Billie Dove

Billie Dove

ALTHOUGH Billie Dove was only fourteen when she won fame as an artist's model, and sixteen when she was prominently cast in the Ziegfeld Follies, she spent four and a half years in climbing from a "bit" player to the position of First National star. From stage to screen is but a step, and Billie came to Hollywood to play a small part in Polly of the Follies starring Constance Talmadge. It was Lois Weber, the first woman director, who discovered Billie's real acting ability, and who gave her excellent roles in two of her own productions, The Sensation Seekers and The Marriage Clause. She was born in New York City on May 14, 1903. She is five feet, five inches tall, weighs one hundred and fifteen pounds, has rather long chestnut curly hair and gorgeous brown eyes. Her complexion, very dark and rich, is unusually beautiful, and marks her as one of the most attractive women on the screen.

Colleen Moore

Colleen Moore

COLLEEN MOORE made her bow as Kathleen Morrison at Port Huron, Michigan, August 19, 1902. Her father, an efficiency engineer, traveled a great deal, always taking his family with him. As a result, Colleen's education was scattered, though she remembers particularly Chicago, Detroit, Atlanta, and Tampa educational systems. After leaving a Florida convent, she entered the Detroit Conservatory of Music, where she studied the piano. In 1920 her uncle, Walter Howey, then managing editor of the Chicago American, introduced her to D. W. Griffith, who was convinced that she had acting ability. Her first picture was The Bad Boy. Flaming Youth was the turning point in her career, and led to a succession of flapper productions with which she has become identified. Sally, So Big, Irene, Lilac Time, Oh, Kay! Synthetic Sin, and Why Be Good, are among her most recent pictures.

Mystery of the Murdered Actor

I simply relate the facts as they occurred.

The party got wilder and wilder.

AT FOUR A. M., two men started a fight that spread. There were fists, vases and chairs and animated language.

At 4:15 the lights went out. In the darkness there were screams—then the crash of a big glass chandelier which fell shattered to the floor. Then the lights were turned on and Eddie Diggins lay bleeding to death on the floor—in the arms of Lloyd Hamilton.

The police were summoned by telephone and a police car came screaming up the quiet street. The doors were locked. Everybody in the party—except Irene Dalton—was detained. A thoughtful friend took her out for a walk just in time.

The police questioned everybody.

Lloyd Hamilton didn't know anything of what had happened. He heard the fight start; when the lights came on again he saw Eddie bleeding on the floor and went to him—trying to staunch the blood.

Josie and Rosie didn't know anything; they only heard the scuffle in the dark. The bartender didn't know anything; he was mum as an oyster on account of the illegal booze selling.

That was the way it ran; nobody knew anything.

The only real hint came from a waiter. He said that, just before the lights went out, he saw two strange men sneaking out from a side room. He turned to watch them. But they lost themselves in the crowd of dancers; then the lights went out. In the darkness, he heard some one crying out—a man's voice—"L'go; l'go of me."

The coroner's inquest yielded nothing more of value.

EDDIE was buried in the Catholic cemetery. After the funeral, the grief-stricken little Irish bride told the reporters one little fragmentary, wistful, frightened story—that might have been the clue to the whole story.

She said that, as she lay on her bed, struggling with her grief, the telephone rang. After a long time she dragged herself to the phone. A woman's voice spoke to her. She did not recognize the voice.

The woman said: "You are Mrs. Diggins? I can tell you all about your husband's murder . . . ." Then the voice broke off and she heard the woman weeping in a wild outburst of strangling sobs.

Mrs. Diggins said that the woman did not come back to the 'phone; but only silence followed.

But—dabbing her eyes with a little wet handkerchief, Mrs. Diggins made one cryptic remark to the reporters that has never been explained or fathomed:

"They Snickered When I Got Up To Speak"

—But from the First Word, I Held Them Spellbound

THE banquet hall was crowded. Suddenly I heard the chairman's voice say —"We will now have a few words from Mr. Byron Munn." It came like a flash of lightning! He was unexpectedly calling on me for a speech!

As I started to get up, I heard a titter run around the table.

"Watch him make a fool of himself," I overheard someone whisper. "He's so bashful he's afraid of his own voice."

I knew they were expecting me to make myself ridiculous, but I only grinned inside.

I stood squarely on my two feet and started in!

"But When I Commenced to Speak"—

Almost from the first word, the smiles and derision faded from their faces. They were incredulous—amazed! Instantly the atmosphere became so tense that you could have heard a pin drop! No snickers nor sneers now! My voice, clear as a bell—strong, forceful, unfaltering—rang out through the banquet hall as I hammered home each point of my message with telling strokes! I let myself go—soaring to a smashing finale that almost brought them to their feet!

When I finished, there was an instant of dead silence! And then it came—a deafening wave of applause rolling up from one hundred pairs of hands—spontaneous, excited, thrilling.

Was Once a "Human Clam"

After it was all over, Jack Hartray fell into step beside me as I left the hall. "Gee, that was a great speech!" he said enthusiastically. "You certainly raised yourself about 100% in the eyes of every person in that place tonight . . . And yet they used to call you 'a human clam'—and the quietest man in the office!"

It was true, too. All my life I had been handicapped with a shy, timid, and retiring nature. With only a limited education, I never could express my ideas in a coherent, forceful way. As a result I saw dozens of men with less ability pass me by simply because they were good talkers and knew how to create the right impression. It was maddening.

A Lucky Accident

At last I accidentally ran across a little book entitled How to Work Wonders With Words. Between its covers I discovered certain facts and secrets I had never dreamed of. OWING to the long illness of its founder and president, Miss Julia David, the Helen Ferguson Friendship Club almost joined the ranks of the has beens. Now, however, I've just received a card from Miss David, saying she has taken back the club with Evelyn Bode and Marion Appenheim, both of New York, as her assistants, and they are just 'raring to go.' A clever news sheet is now being published and yearly dues are still 25c. This is a real 'Friendship Club' and one of the pioneers and really deserves to succeed. Good luck to you, Julia!

News of Chaw's Club

THE new issue of The Movie Fans' News, official publication of The Movie Fans' Friendship Club, is now out and it is a particularly fine number, being dedicated to Dolores Del Rio, Estelle Taylor, Ruth Roland and Ben Bard. The issue contains some very fine verses and short articles by members of the club. Albert Conti, Rod la Rocque, Edmund Lowe and Andrew Swan are the latest players to join as honorary members of this club.

Buddy Rogers' Club

MR. RANDOLPH TYE, president of the Buddy Rogers' Fan Club, announces that Ben Lyon, Claire Windsor, Mrs. Cronk (Claire's mother) and Frank Tuttle (who directed Buddy in Sophomore) have all joined his club as honorary members.

Mrs. Rogers, Buddy's mother, has chosen the club colors to be yellow and black—the colors of the sunflower, the state flower of Kansas, Buddy's birthplace.
